Some Recent Standard Books

A History of Anti-pedobaptism. By Prof. A. H. Newman, of McMaster University. $2.00.
A history of dissent, from the beginning of its appearance to 1609, the close of the Reformation period. All the primitive sects are considered and especial attention is given to the opposition that sprang up in Germany and elsewhere to the positions of Zwingli and Luther. Prof. Newman has had access to original sources and has produced a calm, impartial, and valuable historical work.

Messages of To-day to the Men of To-morrow. By Geo. C. Lorimer, D. D. About 400 pages, 12mo. $1.50.
A series of papers by the eloquent pastor of Tremont Temple, especially adapted to young men, and covering many realms of thought and conduct. A book deserving a place by the side of Henry Ward Beecher's Lectures to Young Men, and up to date in every way. Every young man desiring a sympathetic and ringing presentation of present day truths and duties will find it here.

Quotations of the New Testament from the Old. By Franklin Johnson, D. D. 428 pages, 12mo. $2.00.
The Interior: The argument is strong and the volume the sanest, soundest, and most wholesome treatise on this important subject that has yet appeared, not only in English but in any language.

The Argument for Christianity. By Geo. C. Lorimer, D. D. 480 pages, 12mo. $1.50.
One of the very best books on "Evidences" in existence.

$150 IN GOLD | FREE! FREE! TO Women

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in INDUSTRIOUS? You can make twenty or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. Use no language except English. Words spelled alike, but with different meaning, can be used but once. Use any dictionary. Plurals, pronouns, nouns, verbs, adverbs, prefixes, suffixes, adjectives, proper nouns allowed. Anything that is a legitimate word will be allowed. Work it out in this manner: In, into, industrious, no, not, nut, nuts, dust, dusts, us, sit, sits, etc. Use these words in your list. The publisher of WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY will pay $20.00 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word INDUSTRIOUS; $12.00 for the second largest; $10.00 for the third; $8.00 for the fourth; $5.00 for the ten next largest, and $2.00 each for the twenty-five next largest lists. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome woman's magazine, twenty-four pages, ninety-six long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1.00 per year. It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 12 two cent stamps for a three months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 24 cents and a list of twenty words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine), of a 200-page book, "Doris' Fortune," by Florence Warden, a love story of intense interest. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or your money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than Jan. 20. The names and addresses of successful contestants will be printed in February issue, published in January. Our publication has been established nine years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Make your list now. Address J. H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 905 Temple Court Building, New York City.

COPELAND AND DAY

MORE SONGS FROM VAGABONDIA by Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey with new designs by T. B. Meteyard. Paper, boards, $1 00.

Companion volume to "Songs from Vagabondia," now in its third edition.

"Hail to poets! Good poets, real poets, with a swig of wine and a lilt of rhyme and sound hearts beneath their undulating ribs. Who would have thought that good fellowship and the free air of heaven could fan such fancies as these into right merry woodland blaze in times when satyrs and hamadryads lie hid under the dead willows waiting till great Pan shall come again?"—New York Times

PENHALLOW TALES by Edith Robinson with cover design by C. B. Murphy. Cloth, octavo, $1.25.

The title of Miss Robinson's book is taken from the opening story, which it will be remembered created no little attention some time ago when it appeared in The Century.

SONNETS FROM THE PORTUGUESE by Elizabeth Barret Browning. NO. III. ENGLISH LOVE SONNET SERIES. With new designs by B. G. Goodhue printed on English hand-made paper, square, octavo, $2.00.

NO. II. YELLOW HAIR LIBRARY. IN CHILDHOOD'S COUNTRY by Louise Chandler Moulton with cover designs and ten full-page illustrations by Ethel Reed. Large square octavo, $2.00.

To touch the heart of childhood with verse is an achievement that not many authors compass, and Mrs. Moulton is one of the few who are successful.

THE LISTENER IN THE TOWN and THE LISTENER IN THE COUNTRY by Joseph Edgar Chamberlin. Being selections from the "Listener" column of the Boston Evening Transcript. In two volumes. Cloth, octavo, 75 cents each.

"None of these charming, witty, bright-glancing sketches of Mr. Chamberlin's could have been lost without impoverishing the rare literature of the essay. . . . Of the Listener it may be said that no individual in his field has surpassed him in freshness and in high average of literary value."—Time and the Hours.

AN OUTLAND JOURNEY: A Satire by Walter Leon Sawyer with fifty illustrations by R. F. Bunner. Ornamental cloth cover, octavo, $1.00.

Under the "reversible Stevenson title," as it has been termed, Mr. Sawyer tells an ingenious and amusing story by way of satirizing some "institutions" and many fails. That the tone of the work is uniformly genial does not lessen the force of the censure. The usual suggestions of the text have all been headed by Mr. Bunner, whose pointed sketches supplement both description and dialogue.

CINDERPATH TALES by William Lindsey with cover design by John Sloan. Cloth, octavo, $1.00.

"The author has managed to give his work such an air of reality that he seems to be narrating actual events. Although the stories treat solely of cinderpath themes, wrestling, running, leaping, jumping, throwing, and all such things, they are so imbued with the knowledge and the feeling of life in its greatest and widest sense that they must appeal to a larger audience than the nature of the subject would indicate."—The Bookman.

MEG McINTYRE'S RAFFLE and other stories by Alvan F. Sanborn. Cloth, octavo, $1.25.

Although Mr. Sanborn has here followed the same transcript from life which characterized his "Moody's Lodging House and Other Tenement Sketches," he has added to them the element of fiction which will fascinate even a wider audience than the absolute realism of the earlier book could appeal to.

SONGS OF EXILE by Herbert Bates. Oaten Stop Series No. V. Paper boards, octavo, 75 cents.

CURIOUS PUNISHMENTS OF BYGONE DAYS. By ALICE MORSE EARLE, author of "Sabbath in Puritan New England," etc., with many quaint pictures by Frank Hazenplug. 12mo, $1.50.

Mrs. Earle dedicates her book, in the language of an old-time writer, to "All curious and ingenious gentlemen and gentlewomen who can gain from acts of the past a delight in the present days of virtue, wisdom and the humanities."

MISS AYR OF VIRGINIA, AND OTHER STORIES. By JULIA MAGRUDER. 16mo, $1.25.

Critics have always united in saying of Miss Magruder's work that it was interesting. In addition to this her new volume is noticeable for its grace and beauty, real sentiment where it is needed, and strength as well. It will be welcomed by the many who enjoyed "The Princess Sonia," and "The Violet."

SECOND EDITION.

IN BUNCOMBE COUNTY. By MARIA LOUISE POOL. 16mo, $1.25.

A volume of connected sketches of country life in the South. It is on the order of Miss Pool's recent book entitled "In a Dike Shanty," which received such favorable comment. It is not sensational; it is not exciting; it is merely peaceful and pleasing, with a quiet current of delightful humor running all through.

A CHILD OF THE JAGO. A Novel of the East End of London. By ARTHUR MORRISON, author of "Tales of Mean Streets." 12mo, $1.50.

Mr. Morrison is recognized the world over as the most capable man at slum life stories. His "Tales of Mean Streets" was one of the best received books of 1894-95, and the present volume has occupied his time ever since. It is of great force and continuous interest—a book that, once begun, must be finished, and one that will figure as a sensation for a long time to come.

THE LAND OF THE CASTANET. Spanish Sketches by H. C. CHATFIELD-TAYLOR, author of "Two Women and a Fool," with twenty-five full-page illustrations. 12mo, $1.25.

A collection of rambling sketches of Spanish people and places. Mr. Chatfield-Taylor has written frankly and entertainingly of the most striking features of "The Land of the Castanet." The volume does not pretend to be exhaustive; in no sense is it a guide-book—it is intended rather for the person who does not expect to visit Spain than for the traveler.

THE CARISSIMA. A Modern Grotesque. By LUCAS MALET, author of "The Wages of Sin." 12mo, $1.50.

Few people will have difficulty in remembering the profound sensation which the publication of "The Wages of Sin" caused some six years ago. Since that time Lucas Malet has published no serious work, and the present volume therefore represents her best. It is a novel of intense and continued interest, and will claim a prominent place among the books of the season.

To be had of all Booksellers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publishers, Superior Books.

We firmly believe that, as the following books are the best work of some of our leading authors, attractively illustrated and published, they will prove to be the most popular and helpful books of the year for young people.

Three Young Continentals.
By EVERETT T. TOMLINSON, author of "Three Colonial Boys," etc. 364 pp. Illustrated, cloth, $1.50.

"Such books are among the best educators of our youth, both in history and patriotism."—The Outlook.

"The book is far more interesting and instructive for young persons than regular history, as it personifies the events which historians dryly record."—Lutheran Observer

Malvern.
A neighborhood story, by ELLEN DOUGLAS DELAND, author of "Oakleigh." Illustrated by ALICE BARBER STEPHENS. 341 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

"The story deals with the lives and fortunes, the cares, trials, and pleasures, of the children of a country village, and is an interesting study for the old as well as young."—New York Bookseller.

The Land of the Kangaroo.
By Col. THOMAS W. KNOX, author of "The Boy Travelers." 318 pp. Illustrated, $1.50.

"This book was the last book of the lamented Colonel Knox, and in his own peculiar style recounts his adventures on the island continent of Australia. It combines instruction with entertainment, and will undoubtedly quickly take a foremost place among boys' books."

The Orcutt Girls.
By CHARLOTTE M. VAILE, illustrated by FRANK T. MERRILL. 316 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

"A strong, helpful story of girl life at a village academy."—The Outlook.

"Such a book as this does useful service in presenting so successful a portrayal of life in an old-fashioned academy."—The Congregationalist.

"A wholesome, inspiring story that will benefit every young girl who reads it."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Marjorie Books.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

History of France. By VICTOR DURUY. Translated from the French by Mrs. M CAREY With a continuation to the year 1896 by J. FRANKLIN JAMESON, Professor of History in Brown University. Illustrated with photographs, portraits, early prints, etc Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6 00.

Considered to be by all odds the best in any language; and brought down to the present time by Professor Jameson of Brown University. The illustrations consist of valuable portraits and reproductions of old prints.

Life of Sir Walter Scott. By J. G. LOCKHART. With prefatory letter by JAMES R. HOPE SCOTT Illustrated with portrait and photographs. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3 00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

In many respects this is superior to the unabridged Life. Lockhart was enabled to correct some errors that had slipped into the first biography; and the condensation, which he did with a heroic hand, brought the whole into a more artistic and readable form. The volumes are beautifully illustrated.

Memoirs of Napoleon Bonaparte. By BOURRIENNE, his private secretary. 4 vols. in 2 Illustrated with portraits, colored map, etc. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3 00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Hitherto these have been obtainable only in four volumes. None of the features which made the more expensive edition notable have been omitted.

Pope's Complete Poetical Works. Edited, with introduction and notes, by ADOLPHUS WILLIAM WARD, M. A., Litt. D. The Globe Edition, revised and enlarged. Illustrated with portraits, early prints and photographs. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3 00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6 00

This edition, with its reprint of the first edition of "The Rape of the Lock" and "The Dunciad," and its illustrations, portraits and facsimile of pages of Pope's manuscript cannot be excelled.

When Mr. Beecher Sold Slaves in Plymouth Pulpit

The most marvelous scene ever witnessed in a church, when men and women almost lost themselves in hysterical excitement, and threw watches, rings and jewels on the platform and in the collection baskets. Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher describes the great event in the Christmas Ladies' Home Journal, while De Thulstrup shows the actual scene in a realistic picture.

WHO MAY BE MODERATOR OF A COUNCIL?

At a recent council convoked for an installation the moderator chosen was not a member of the council, but was a member of the church which called the council. Objection was made to his acting as moderator, on the ground that he was not a member of the council. In the discussion which ensued the younger men and the older seemed to be on opposite sides, the latter justifying the choice and the former opposing it. Finally the objectors prevailed. The case is referred to The Congregationalist for its opinion on the question raised. W.

The objectors in this case were right. A council cannot elect persons to its membership, but is composed solely of representatives of churches which have accepted the invitation of the church calling the council, and of individuals called by the church. Therefore, of course, it would violate the conditions of its organization by choosing a person not a member to preside over its deliberations. Probably no one so chosen, if acquainted with Congregational usages, would accept such an election.

THE HOUSE OF ALDUS. 1502.

On our cover page this week there is an illustration taken from the central portion of a memorial window to be erected in the Young Men's Library Association Building at Troy, N. Y., by the Tiffany Glass & Decorating Co. It is particularly interesting to all booklovers because it illustrates a scene in the life of Aldus Manutius and a memorable event in the history of typography.

Manutius was born in 1447 at the hamlet of Rassiano in Italy. At an early age he commenced the study of Latin and Greek, and completed his education at Rome under the celebrated Professors Jasper of Verona and Domizo Calderino. He then became tutor to Alberto Pio, a favorite nephew of the celebrated Picus de Mirandola. At once a strong friendship sprang up between master and pupil which lasted through their lives, the teacher lifting up the soul of Alberto Pio to the same enthusiasm for learning and the advancement of knowledge that was consuming his own.

Aldus believed that the best way to promote the end in view was to multiply the works of the great minds of Greece and Rome which he did by taking advantage of the new art of printing to place them within the reach of the reading world and students. In order that he might do so Alberto Pio and Picus de Mirandola advanced him the necessary money with which to establish a printing house in the city of Venice in the year 1488. Venice was chosen because it was a city of peace, where the student could pursue his studies without the alarms of war with which the other cities of Italy were at the time disturbed; then again it was in direct communication, through its commerce, with all parts of the civilized world, hence offered greater facilities for obtaining manuscripts and the materials necessary with which to make the books. It was 1494, however, before Aldus actually published a book.

The restless energy of the man is manifested in almost every book that he published. There is always an advance in some direction, either in scholarship, artistic beauty or mechanical excellency. Such was the introduction in the year 1501 of italic types, which he had designed and engraved by Francesco Francia of Bologna, who was said to have received the suggestion of their form from the handwriting of Petrarch. This type was first used in an octavo edition of the Virgil, which is now extremely rare. In the month of April, 1515, the great scholar printer closed his useful and laborious career, having issued 122 different books in Greek, Latin and Italian, many of them the first printed editions of Greek and Roman authors.

This biographical summary will enable the reader to understand the illustration on our front page, which is a scene in the printing office of Aldus at Venice and is supposed to have taken place on the 22d day of August in the year 1502, when the printer exhibited to the Doge Leonardo Loredan the first pages of the octavo edition of Le Terze Rime de Dante.

The artist, Frederick Wilson, imagines that upon that occasion there were present the artist, Francesco Francia, who designed and engraved the type, Bembo, who edited the work, and Alberto Pio, whose money enabled Aldus to issue this, the first popular edition of Italy's great poet.

It is quite evident that Mr. Wilson has carefully studied every detail of the picture, as it is plainly to be seen that all the personages represented have been drawn from portraits, while the details of costumes, architecture, etc., are absolutely correct. Even the printer's devil has not been forgotten, for here he is picking from the floor all stray sheets, while gazing with envious eyes upon a well-dressed patrician boy, who is holding the hand of the wife of the Doge Leonardo Loredan.

Fellow-Craftsmen in Literature.

That comradeship and generous regard for one another which so often characterizes men of the literary vocation has recently been delightfully illustrated in the season of fellowship which three well-known and popular writers have enjoyed at Northampton in this State. Long before Mr. Barrie attained his present fame, when he was only an ordinary newspaper man in an English provincial city, he fell in with some of Mr. Cable's stories. They at once pleased and fascinated him and the clever delineator of Creole life in due time received an intimation of the admiration of his far-away reader. This autumn when Mr. Cable learned that Mr. Barrie was coming to this country an invitation was quickly dispatched which greeted the Scotch novelist and his fellow-traveler, Dr. Robertson Nicoll, on their arrival in New York. In his reply Mr. Barrie expressed his gratification that his first letter written on this side the water should go to one whom he had so long desired to meet. As soon as they could detach themselves from the round of entertainments prepared for them in New York, Mr. and Mrs. Barrie found their way to Northampton accompanied by Dr. Nicoll, and sojourned for several days in Mr. Cable's hospitable home, which bears the alluring title, Tarry-Awhile.

MESSRS. BARRIE, CABLE AND NICOLL.

Mr. and Mrs. Cable were considerate enough to share the pleasure arising from the presence of such guests with the citizens of Northampton, and though Mr. Barrie is not inordinately fond of what is known as society, he submitted to a reasonable amount of mild and informal lionizing. He was persuaded to address the students of Smith College and, judging from his speech at the Aldine Club dinner in New York just before sailing home, Nov. 7, the 900 maidens who constitute the Smith community seem to have made an impression upon him hardly second to that produced on them by his irresistible charm of manner and his confidential disclosures of the drift of his feeling. Dr. Nicoll too was thoroughly enjoyed by all who were privileged to hear him talk so modestly, but withal so illuminatingly, on themes with which he has greater familiarity than almost any living man.

The intimacy at once established between Mr. Cable and Mr. Barrie was peculiar in this—that neither sought to draw the other out professionally. Mr. Cable declares that he never once asked his guest his opinion on any subject whatever. The two simply enjoyed one another in an effortless fashion. No doubt they both consider periods of silence as useful in cementing friendship as periods of talk. At any rate, Mr. Barrie was frank enough to say that he would not mind staying in Northampton all the time scheduled for his American visit "if it wouldn't seem so ridiculous." Before he left he planted a tree, which will always bear his name. This is the way in which Mr. Cable secures a constant reminder of some of the persons who tarry under his roof. The picture on this page shows Mr. Cable in the center, Mr. Barrie on his right and Dr. Nicoll on his left. The group was photographed when standing in front of Mr. Cable's house.

THE UTAH ASSOCIATION.

The seventh annual meeting was held with the First and Lynne Churches, Ogden, Nov. 9–11. At the outset the unusual occurrence for Utah was a rainstorm of twenty-four hours' duration, which, after a few hours' sunshine on Tuesday, turned into snow and sleet. Owing to the storm the attendance at the first meetings was small, but the exercises were interesting. At the opening session Rev. George Lindsay, the new pastor of Phillips Church, Salt Lake City, preached the annual sermon on Laborers Together with God. The Lord's Supper followed. Rev. W. S. Hunt was moderator and Rev. George Lindsay scribe.

The reports from the churches and that of the home missionary superintendent showed spiritual growth and hopefulness in some fields, but discouraging hindrances in others. These are great and abundant, but neither dismay nor stop the workers.

At noon the delegates took electric cars across the city, three miles, to the Lynne Church, where they were served with a collation and held the afternoon and evening sessions with larger attendance and deepening interest. The denominational societies were reported and their work reviewed, Congregational educational work in the State being vigorously discussed. Rev. C. T. Brown preached in the evening. The two ministers of the Christian churches of Utah were present as guests, which led to the unanimous adoption of resolutions commenting upon the fellowship of the Christian and Congregational churches, and inviting Christian ministers and churches to affiliate so far with our association as they may wish, and at least to attend and share in meetings by pastors and delegates.

On Wednesday Rev. George Ritchie read a paper on Our Attitude towards Mormonism, and Rev. J. D. Nutting on Our Attitude towards Christian Science, both able efforts and full of interest. The Women's Missionary Union occupied the time in the afternoon with reports and addresses. Of their auxiliaries the Chinese mission school of Salt Lake reported larger gifts for mission purposes than all the others together. How to Interest the Children in Missionary Matters was interestingly discussed. At the closing session Rev. W. S. Hunt gave an eloquent address on Christian Socialism, giving an optimistic view of progress during the last fifty years. If the Congregational pastors of Utah are few they are choice and able, as this association meeting clearly showed. The next meeting is to be with Plymouth Church, Salt Lake.

Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

Thanksgiving was observed among many churches according to old-time custom, with no lessening of fervor and sincerity. Union services seem to have been the rule, as usual. Many communities lengthened their long line of yearly gatherings, others added to their occasional recognitions of the harvest bounties, while many churches and communities passed this special day without marked public acknowledgment of another year's blessing. Which of these three classes would be chosen as most truly filled with the spirit of the day?

"It might be repeated in every town in the Union," writes our correspondent of the popular course of entertainments in a southeastern Massachusetts town. We wonder whether every pastor would encourage the patience of the purchasers of tickets as heroically.

The innate power of a trained and consecrated membership shines out in the history of the church at Percival, Io., which has existed for thirty-five years without a house of worship and, for the most part, with no settled pastor.

The evangelistic campaign has opened. From all directions come tidings of special meetings, union services, etc. Preparations seem to be unusually practical and businesslike, yet full of aspiration for a spiritual harvest. We note an increasing tendency to employ regular pastors in this work and to arrange for a longer series of meetings.

DISCUSSION RESULTS IN UNION.

The Northern New Jersey Conference held its autumnal meeting with the First Church, Montclair. The reports of work were hopeful. The Christian Problem in New Jersey was the predominant subject. Rev. Dr. J. L. Scudder sketched graphically the new, great city which is coming into being between the Hudson and the Orange Mountains, a city of which Jersey City and Newark are chief parts and which is soon to have 1,000,000 inhabitants. Dr. F. W. Baldwin laid stress upon the need of co operation of the churches outside their respective parishes, and advocated an organization for doing such work that should be constituted of churches rather than of individuals. Dr. H. A. Stimson from across the Hudson told of similar work elsewhere. He quite converted the conference to the "Western method." As a result of the day's exercises "The Congregational Union of New Jersey" was formed, with Dr. A. H. Bradford as president, Rev. Howard S. Bliss as secretary and a number—prospectively all—of the churches of the conference as members. The object of the new union is to be the medium of doing both rural church extension and city mission work, and to bring to these two causes a permanent and partially pledged constituency and reliable support. Its keynote is not to be denominational glorification, but denominational responsibility. The conference adjourned to meet in the spring with the church at Bound Brook.

RENOVATIONS IN AN ILLINOIS CHURCH.

Quincy has one of the most beautiful edifices used for church purposes west of the Alleghanies. For weeks artisans have been engaged in the work of improvement. The exterior has been newly painted, a slate roof has been provided, and an addition, two stories in hight, 18 x 40 feet, has been constructed. All appointments have been modernized and the interior has been frescoed and painted by the Tiffany Company, New York. Scriptural selections have been placed on the walls. The great rosette window has been reset and new borders added to nine of the other 10 windows, one of which is a memorial to Mr. Thomas White, long an honored member, and is a duplicate of a window in New York city which cost $5,000. It is furnished by the children of Mr. White. New carpets have been laid and the pews cleaned. With the exception of the memorial window the cost of these improvements, which is not made public, has been met by Mr. Lorenzo Bull, the "grand old man" of the parish. The church and society have provided for the cost of the Sunday school and social rooms, which are a model both in beauty and convenience. For 13 years Dr. S. H. Dana has been pastor. Under his ministrations the church has steadily grown in numbers and influence, till now it has 450 members and 400 S. S. scholars. The library contains 600 volumes. Though richly furnished the church has always been, and still is, "a people's church." It is due to this fact that its success has been so pronounced. It has also been noted for its social life.

GOLDEN GATE WAIFS HAVE AN OUTING.

Under the auspices of the San Francisco Chronicle and "personally conducted" by Rev. L. L. Wirt, the "children's missionary" of the S. S. Society, about 600 little waifs were recently given a treat the memory of which will brighten their whole lives. Big and little, stout and thin, fair-faced Swedes, bronzed Italians and bright-haired children of the Emerald Isle fraternized in high good humor. Only two per cent. of them had ever left the city before, and they cheered everything, from McKinley to the cow peacefully grazing by the roadside. After an exciting train ride the party was divided, the several detachments being dropped at way stations and thence conveyed in hay wagons to their respective destinations Martinez, Concord, Clayton, Vine Hill, Alhambra Valley, Rumrill Ranch were centers of entertainment. The youngsters were turned loose, with the privilege of picking all the fruit and flowers they desired—a boundless opportunity in this prolific country. A generous dinner, a straw ride through blushing vineyards and silvery olive groves, and a band concert, were among the delights of this never to be forgotten day. It was a picturesque company that returned at sunset, laden with nuts, grapes and other fruit, enough to last their families a week, and decorated with brilliant flowers—the fullest, dustiest, tiredest, happiest children in town.

WASHINGTON PARK CHURCH, CHICAGO.

This church has passed the experimental stage. For five years it has been under the care of the City Missionary Society. Last summer it secured lots 75 by 161 feet on Michigan Avenue, near Washington Park, in the center of a parish a mile square. The site is one of the finest in the city for a commanding church. The people are largely well-to-do, but their spiritual needs are great. Early in January Prof. W. D. Mackenzie assumed the pastoral care of the field, and during his absence of three months Mr. A. M. Ingraham, a recent graduate of the seminary, had charge. Professor Mackenzie resumed the work last September. With him is associated Professor Curtiss, who has done much pastoral visitation and secured funds for the lots and building. Three students have also aided. The congregation now meets in a store, but as a result of a generous loan of £1,000 from a Scotchman, who was a former parishioner of Professor Mackenzie at Montrose, the first story of the edifice will be built of stone, 75 by 65 feet in size. The estimated cost without seating and furnishing will be about $10,000. The work is under way and it is hoped the building will be ready in February. There were eleven accessions at the last communion and within a month 28 new members were received. Drs. J. G. Johnson, H. M. Scott, F. W. Gunsaulus, F. A. Noble and E. P. Goodwin have spoken warmly in behalf of this field.

HOW LIVING STONES BUILT UP A SPIRITUAL HOUSE.

The theory that a church cannot long exist without a house of worship finds no confirmation at Percival, Io. The organization is 35 years old, but has only just completed and dedicated its first edifice. Usually a church dies without pastoral care, but this one has had a resident minister for only a small part of the time, and half the time none at all. The two causes of its unusual vitality are the character of the few Congregational families that have lived in this community from the beginning, and the fact that more than 80 of the young people have been students at Tabor College.

The church has now 79 resident members and is supplied by Rev. F. W. Long of Omaha, who was ordained Nov. 16 and will soon become resident pastor. The cost of the building was about $2,300. Of this amount a little over $600 were raised at the consecration service, and the edifice was dedicated Nov. 15 free of debt, without aid from the C. C. B. S.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Oberlin.

Thanksgiving Day was observed, as usual, by a social occasion at Council Hall. Numerous guests were invited and the parlors were tastefully decorated. After an informal reception, supper was served. Dr. Brand, honored at home as elsewhere, spoke hopefully of The Signs of the Times, and Professor Kelsey and Mrs. Johnston of the college responded to toasts.——Prof. A. T. Swing is conducting a seminar upon Modern German Theology and the trend of religious thought in that country. The class numbers six and theses are now in preparation.——Dr. A. P. Foster gave an address Nov. 17 on The Various S. S. Missionary Organizations of the United States.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

D. C.—The annual session of the Washington Conference was held Nov. 17 with People's Church. Every church belonging to this body was represented. The subject, The Workers Outfit, was ably discussed under the sub-heads, For deacons, for trustees, for Sunday school superintendents, for teachers and for C. E. workers. Other papers were: What Characterizes an Ideal Choir? Congregationalism—Its Beginnings, Its Principle, and What It Has Done for Education. Dr. S. M. Newman gave the annual address. The evening was occupied with a song service and short addresses.

LA.—The eighth annual meeting of West Central Louisiana Association was held at the Langstraw Church, near Ruston, Nov. 5-8. The sermon was preached by Rev. G. N. Funk. The following topics were helpfully discussed: The Financial Duty of the Church to the Minister, Qualifications for the Ministry, The Minister and the Word, The Minister and the Community. There was also an instructive address on Congregationalism.

CLUBS.

MINN.—The Minnesota Club held its November meeting at Stillwater as the guests of Hon. Henry Wolfer, warden of the State Prison. Nearly two hours were given to visiting the prison, after which dinner was served. The literary exercises consisted of unusually strong addresses by Chaplain J. H. Albert on The Present Status of Prison Reform and Rev. S. G. Smith, D. D., on The Relation of Crime to Economics. Warden Wolfer spoke interestingly on The Management of the State Prison. The meeting was large and one of the best of the club.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

Rev. A. W. Hitchcock was the speaker at the Ministers' Meeting, Monday, his theme being Moral Purpose and Literary Art in the Modern Drama.

DORCHESTER.—Second. Dr. Little preached last Sunday at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, his own pulpit being supplied by Rev. Thomas Clayton.

Massachusetts.

NEWTON.—Eliot. The average benevolent offering for the past three Sundays has exceeded $1,300. Last week Sunday's gift to the Newton hospital was $2,019. Dr. G. A. Gordon and the pastor, Dr. W. H. Davis, exchanged pulpits Nov. 22.

LOWELL.—Kirk Street meeting house, which has been recently renovated and received presents of a memorial organ and a new pulpit, has now received a handsome stained glass window for the main façade, the gift of Dea. A. G. Cumnock. The new pastor, Rev. W. A. Bartlett, was installed last Monday evening, his father, ex-President Bartlett of Dartmouth College, preaching the sermon.

HAVERHILL.—West recently took a collection for the Jubilee Fund of the A. M. A. The pastor, Rev. J. N. Lowell, made an appeal for $50 and his people responded with $65. The pastor acknowledges the gift of a typewriter as a birthday present from his friends.

MIDDLEBORO.—Central. The popularity of the citizens' course of entertainments, organized by the pastor, Rev. R. G. Woodbridge, and given every year in the Town Hall, was attested anew Nov. 23. Forty people were in line at eight o'clock that evening waiting for the sale of tickets the next morning. The pastor was around at 1 A. M. distributing buns and hot coffee This is the third season. Six of the best entertainments and a reserved seat are given for $1.00. The money is used for expenses only.

WORCESTER.—The City Missionary Society held its annual public meeting in Mechanics Hall Nov. 22. Most of the churches gave up their evening service to attend. The superintendent, Dr. Eldridge Mix, gave the report of the year and a survey of the field. Dr. Elijah Horr spoke on The Church and the City. He stated that the society did its splendid work for about $5,000 a year. Dr. Archibald McCullagh spoke on Our Common Field, and Dr. A. Z. Conrad on Pentecostal Power Ours. The society employs, besides a superintendent, five lady visitors, and has aided four of the smaller churches the past year.——Church of the Covenant. The pastor, Rev. J. E. Hurlbut, gave a rousing no license sermon Nov. 22.——Old South. All the South End churches of several denominations united for a Thanksgiving service, Dr. Alexander Lewis of Pilgrim Church preaching the sermon.——Plymouth. Most of the churches in the center and North End united in the Thanksgiving service with this church. The theme was The Nation's Safeguards. Dr. McCullagh and Dr. Gunnison of the First Universalist Church spoke.——The Ministerial League was recently organized to include all ministers in Worcester and vicinity. Nearly all except the Catholics have signified their intention of joining. Its object is to discuss questions of civic righteousness and State and municipal government and matters of common interest in religion and its influence in the community.

SPENCER.—First has just sustained a great loss in the death of Deacon J. L. Bush, Nov. 23. He had served as deacon since 1867, the last few years as honorary deacon. He was well known for his liberality toward missions.

PALMER.—Second. The pastor, Rev. F. E. Jenkins, has been working specially in the cause of temperance as constable. His strenuous efforts and those of the other ministers have resulted in the conviction of a large number of rumsellers. The Men's Sunday Evening Club services have been attended better this fall than ever. The club is flourishing and is greatly appreciated. The 50th anniversary of this church occurs next April.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. The union service of Congregational churches was held with this church Thanksgiving morning, with preaching by Rev. H. C. Meserve of Faith Church. Rev. F. L Goodspeed, the pastor, has been quite ill, but is slowly recovering. Rev. Dr. Robbins, who has just moved to this city from Philadelphia, is substituting.——The churches are conducting an active campaign for no license. Representatives of all the Protestant churches are united in a central temperance board. Three pastors—a Methodist, a Baptist and a Presbyterian—from the board are managing the movement. Last Sunday a number of churches devoted the entire day to no license. Sermons in the morning and addresses by laymen in the evening constituted the programs.——South. Dr. P. S. Moxom's sermon last Sunday morning, A Sermon to the Churchless, was the same which he recently delivered at Indianapolis before the Liberal Congress of Religion, an organization composed of representatives of the various religions of the world.

AMHERST.—College. The council called to dismiss Dr. J. E. Tuttle, who has begun work in Worcester, put on record its appreciation of his services as college pastor. The church also passed eulogistic resolutions and a farewell reception was given by President Gates.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—Thanksgiving union services were held in three sections of the city in place of the one central meeting as in former years.——The local C. E. Union continued its annual happy custom of holding a seven o'clock morning prayer meeting.——High Street. Rev. W. H. Fenn, D. D., has remodeled and beautifully decorated his residence.

WEST BETHEL.—The Chapel Aid Society has bought a lot and a liberal resident will erect a union meeting house upon it and present it to the society. Another generous friend has promised a good bell placed in position when the building is ready.

BANGOR.—Central was opened the afternoon of Nov. 25 for Thanksgiving contributions for the sick and needy.——An interesting union service was held in the Columbia Street Baptist Church on Thanksgiving morning.

New Hampshire.

TILTON.—The union revival services led by Rev. M. S. Rees, assisted by Mrs. Rees, have been largely attended and followed by a great awakening of interest. At a meeting for men only on a Sunday afternoon nearly 300 were present, the largest such gathering ever held in town. Cottage prayer meetings were held in various parts of the village. Nearly 30 have already professed a desire to begin the Christian life.

FARMINGTON.—The late Mrs. Ellen F. Eastman left the church $1,000, the Sunday school and Ladies' Society each $100 and the public library $200. As evinced by her legacy she has been a strong friend and helper in church and community.

Vermont.

RUTLAND.—A union C. E. chapel, with a constituency largely Congregational, was dedicated at Mill Village about two miles north of this city Nov. 24. It is designed as a religious center for three districts, especially for the societies of Christian Endeavor and King's Daughters. The usual services of dedication were performed, the sermon being preached by Rev. G. W. Phillips, D. D. A social and congratulatory hour followed by a consecration service closed the exercises.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Central. According to the custom of many years all the Congregational churches of the city unite here in a service on Thanksgiving Day. This church gave expression on a Sunday evening to its thanksgiving spirit in a harvest home service. An historical address on the New England Thanksgiving was given by the pastor, Rev. E. C. Moore, and classical music was rendered by the choir. A display of the harvest offerings was artistically arranged in their large auditorium and the contributions were later distributed to needy families.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—At the union Thanksgiving service in Center Church the sermon was preached by Dr. W. W. McLane of Plymouth Church.——United. The annual collection for the American Board amounted to $500.——Howard Avenue. The illustrated sermons on Pilgrim's Progress by the pastor, Rev. W. J. Mutch, are proving popular. Large congregations fill the house at every service. The hymns used are illustrative of the subject.

BURLINGTON recently received 10 persons to membership, most of them on confession. Much interest is shown in the work. Rooms for the Sunday school and Endeavor Society are soon to be added to the house. A lecture course is proving helpful. Rev. F. A. Holden is pastor.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

MILLVILLE.—The church has suffered severely because of the disgrace brought on it by its pastor, Rev. H. C. Keeley. Some months ago, without the knowledge of his wife, he suddenly left the village at the same time with a young woman belonging to the church. After about two weeks' absence she returned home and confessed that she had traveled with the minister as his wife. The church has withdrawn fellowship from him. The Presbytery of Indiana, of which he was a member, has deposed him from the ministry. It has been reported that he has been preaching in a church near Boston under an assumed name, and also that he has committed suicide. Probably neither report is correct.

New Jersey.

VINELAND.—Nearly a year ago the pastor, Rev. C. F. Wood, announced his intention of leaving the church at some time in the near future. In the June following, at the annual meeting, he was by vote of the church requested to remain another year, though the way was left open for him to terminate the pastoral relation before the end of the year if he wished. This he has elected to do, and his pastorate of four years and a half will close with the present calendar year.

The Scandinavian Church in Perth Amboy has recently rededicated its house, which has been improved and rebuilt.

THE INTERIOR.

Michigan.

DETROIT.—First. Dr. and Mrs. Nehemiah Boynton were recently tendered a hearty reception in the church parlors. The pastors and deacons of the other Congregational churches with their wives were nearly all present, making a company of 500 persons. A Thanksgiving service was held in the church Thursday morning, in which all the sister churches joined. The nine Congregational pastors of the city were present and took part. The large house was well filled with a thankful people.——People's held Thanksgiving service at the Opera House Sunday evening. Large quantities of provisions were brought to be distributed among the poor. The rabbi of the city gave an address.

LAKE LINDEN has organized a Men's Sunday Afternoon Club. It is pledged to assist the church in every possible way.

Wisconsin.

MILWAUKEE.—Plymouth raised the essential part of its deficit for the year of $1,600 in 10 minutes at the close of the morning service Nov. 22. Among the attractions offered by the Sunday Evening Club for the evening service is a series of addresses by able representatives of various denominations setting forth the reasons for the faith that is in them. Rabbi Hecht of Temple Emanuel has already spoken. Sunday evening Dec. 6 Professor Tomlins of Chicago will interpret Handel's oratorio, The Messiah.——Pilgrim, Rev. I. L. Cory, pastor, is seriously considering the plan of moving its edifice to a more eligible, because more needy part of the city.

THE WEST.

Minnesota.

WINTHROP.—Work on this large field, comprising one church and several out-stations, is progressing favorably. Another out-station has been opened where there are several American families, and a good congregation is gathered.

MADISON.—Rev. David Donovan, a former pastor, has begun work here, and has also arranged to supply Marietta, a neighboring point in the country where services have been interrupted for several months.

Work in northern Minnesota is severely cramped by the financial condition of the H. M. S., and the churches of the State are asked to come to the rescue.

South Dakota.

WAKONDA.—Under the wise direction of Rev. J. M. Bates, the work is steadily growing. The influence of the Thomson and Gamble meetings is still manifest in faithful effort and earnest consecration. Since those meetings 16 members have been received and others are ready to come. The church has recently lost three members by death.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—First. At a large and harmonious meeting Nov. 18 three deacons, whose terms of office had expired, were re-elected. Other officers were also chosen. The church roll now numbers 906. Dr. Adams's pastorate begins auspiciously, and the church looks to the future with renewed hope and courage.

Oregon.

ASTORIA has raised its building, giving room for Sunday school, prayer meeting and social gatherings on the new lower floor. It has also renovated the main audience-room, removed the paper and frescoed the ceiling and walls. Rev. E. S. Bollinger is pastor. The approaching railroad connection gives an impetus to this outermost seaport on the Columbia River.

CABINET APPOINTMENTS.—It is an easily demonstrable fact that nearly every house has in it the materials for filling a parlor cabinet, and if this fact was once fully realized there would not be any lack of purchasers at the special sale of parlor cabinets at reduced prices at Paine's, 48 Canal Street, Boston, this week. It is the chance of a lifetime to secure a cabinet and thus add a beautiful new attraction to the house. Just collect together your curios and bits of china or silver and see how beautiful a picture they will make in a group.

MISTAKEN NOTION.
There are many persons who do not buy a Parlor Cabinet because they feel that the first thing is to collect the contents for it.
That should go ahead of the purchase of the Cabinet.
And yet, without their knowing it, nearly every one of these houses contains the contents of a good-sized cabinet. Scattered now in a dozen places, here and there, their value is unrealized, their beauty goes unappreciated, whereas if collected together and rightly displayed each one would gain in dignity and value from the presence of the rest, and the whole collection be a notable attraction in the house.
This week is the chance of a lifetime to secure a fine cabinet from our new fall stock of nearly one hundred beautiful patterns at special low prices.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Since the sound money victory confidence has visibly, and in all directions, increased, so that the millions in hoard are pouring forth from their hiding places in search of employment. A peculiar feature of the monetary situation is that the most eager lenders now had nothing to loan before election at any rate of interest. Just now we are rather between seasons, although there is more doing at this moment than for some time past. Storekeepers are looking for an active holiday trade.

In the staple lines of trade there is no actual boom, but a moderate business doing. Dry-goods, clothing, millinery, shoes, leather and hardware are in good jobbing demand. The jobber is anticipating the demand of the retailer, and when the latter appears in full force as a buyer, as he is sure to do sooner or later, the "hum of industry" will be much louder than at present. It is calculated that since Nov. 6 over 30,000 men have been given employment in various industrial lines.

Iron and steel continue in fairly active demand, and prices are quoted very firm. Prices in some instances have been advanced, and the manufacturers are looking forward to a good, brisk demand. Wheat continues to show great strength.

Marriages.

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

CLARK—McINTOSH—At Longmont, Col., Nov. 18, by Rev. Henry E. Thayer, Rev. Chester M. Clark of Marseilles, Ill., and Kate McIntosh of Longmont.

DAVIS—TINKER—In White River Junction, Vt., Nov. 17, Rev. O. S. Davis, pastor of Congregational church, Springfield, Vt., and Grace E. Tinker of White River Junction.

SMITH—McEWEN—In Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 26, Charles Porter Smith, son of H. Porter Smith of Cambridge, Mass., and Jessie Bell McEwen of Pittsburg, Rev. Messrs. W. A. Stanton and De Witt Benham officiating.

WARREN—CRAM—In Hampton Falls, N. H., Nov. 26, by Rev. William A. Cram, Rev. Edgar L. Warren, pastor of the Congregational church at Westerly, R. I., and Edith Gilbert, daughter of the late John S. Cram, Esq., of Hampton Falls.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

CRANE—In Boston, Nov. 28, Rev. Oliver Crane, D. D., LL. D., a graduate of Yale. He served nine years in Turkey in the service of the American Board. He was a prominent member of the American Oriental Society.

GRUSH—In Sanborn, N. Y., Nov. 8, Rev. J. W. Grush, for thirty-two years a pastor of Congregational churches in western New York. He graduated at Williams College in 1858, and from Hartford Seminary in 1864.

HOLBROOK—In San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 20, Mrs. Ann L. Holbrook, wife of Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D. D., aged 74 yrs.

REV. JAMES W. GRUSH.

Died in Sanborn, N. Y., Sabbath morning, Nov. 8, after a prolonged illness of two and a half years of paralysis, borne with patient resignation, Rev. James Winchel Grush. He was born in Roxbury, Mass., April 12, 1831; graduated from Williams College 1858, and from Hartford Theological Seminary 1864. His uninterrupted ministerial labors of thirty-two years were passed in northern and western New York. He was registrar of the Ontario Association from 1878 to 1885, and of the Wyoming Association from 1885 to 1893 thus being not only a faithful pastor but also a beloved servant of many pastors and their churches. His funeral was largely attended from the Congregational church of Cambria, Nov. 10.

Aug. 11, 1859, he married Jane Elizabeth Ellsworth of East Windsor, Ct., who with three daughters—Mrs. Elizabeth Allen Trechlar, Mrs. Jane Ellsworth Lenthi and Mrs. Mary Emily Cadwell—survive him. The oldest and youngest daughters live in Grand Forks, N. D., and the second in Jefferson, O. His home was radiant with Christian love. His ministry was strong, yet tender, progressive and wise.

MESSRS. RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S FOREIGN TOURS.—The annual announcement of Old World tours by Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb is full of interest for all persons who contemplate a foreign jaunt for the coming winter or spring. The firm has arranged several attractive tours, some of which are to points quite unfamiliar to the ordinary tourist. This may be said especially of the trip for which Jan. 23 is the date of sailing from New York. This includes a pretty thorough journey through Algeria, Tunis and the island of Sicily, with the chief Italian cities, the Italian lakes and Southern France added. A descriptive circular of this and other tours may be obtained by personal application or by mail from the office of the firm, 296 Washington Street, Boston.

WASHINGTON—FLORIDA.—As the various seasons come and go the principal points of interest, as well as those for enjoyment, put in their claims for the attention of the tourists and the traveling public generally. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, through its tourist department, is continually on the qui vive in selecting for their series of tours, which have been termed "matchless in every feature," seasons and destinations best adapted for the comfort and pleasure of their patrons. The Washington tours which are announced for the winter and spring are among the choicest of Pennsylvania Railroad tours, and are so well timed that it gives to the tourist the best traveling season and opportunity of seeing the nation's capital in active operation. This series of tours will leave Boston Dec. 29, 1896, Feb 12, March 12, April 5 and May 12, 1897; the round-trip rate of $23 will cover transportation in both directions, as well as include hotel accommodations at the best hotels in Washington. The tours will be of seven days' duration, except that of April 5, which will be six days. A series of four tours for Jacksonville will leave Boston Jan. 25, Feb. 8 and 23, and March 9, 1897. Excursion tickets, including railway transportation, Pullman accommodations and meals en route in both directions, will be sold from Boston at rate of $65. With the exception of those for the last tour, tickets will permit of a stay of two weeks in Florida, and will be good only on the special train in each direction; for the last tour they will be good to return on regular trains until May 31, 1897. These tours are under the personal escort of a tourist agent and chaperon. For information detailing the tours application should be made to Tourist Agent, 205 Washington Street, Boston, or Mr. G. W. Boyd, A. G. P. A., Philadelphia.

"IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN."

The Bitterest Cry That Can Be Wrung from the Heart.

An Every Day Incident of Modern Life—Events That Appeal to Humanity—Sins of Omission That Sadden the World.

"It might have been" will tremble only on the lips of those who have been indifferent to golden opportunities or careless of the rules which govern health.

Does this apply to you?

If you have exposed your health, overworked your strength, exhausted your nerve force and blood vitality, then indeed you are thinking on "what might have been."

But hope should not be lost, for you can be cured, restored to the health and strength you have lost, if you use that greatest of the world's remedies, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will make you well as it has thousands of others, as it did Mrs. Nettie Butler of 504 Central Avenue, Dover, N. H., who says:

"I was awfully nervous and could not sleep at night; at times I would get so nervous it seemed as though I could fly. At such times it seemed as if I could not live, I got so nervous and wrought up.

MRS. NETTIE BUTLER.

"I used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and it helped me right off. It quieted my nerves and gave me sound nights' rest. It is the best medicine I have ever used. It always does the work required."

If you have lost your health do not repine in discouragement, but get this wonderful remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura, at once. It will give you new strength and new vigor. Try it and it will make you well and keep you so. Don't delay, don't trifle, don't repeat the old mistakes. With the good health Dr. Greene's Nervura will surely give you, you will have no occasion to mourn "it might have been."

If you like you can consult the discoverer, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, free of charge, in person or by letter.

A LATE TELEGRAM FROM CONSTANTINOPLE.

Tuesday noon of this week the American Board received a cablegram from Mr. Peet, its agent in Constantinople, saying that the $1,000 cabled last week was sent to Bitlis, where 2,000 orphans are wandering in the street, begging for food and clothing. The missionaries entreat that every possible influence be used in the United States to secure means to care for these unfortunates.

Radcliffe College, Cambridge, for the first time, will have daily religious exercises this year. Local clergymen are to officiate.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Dec. 13–19. Lessons from Solomon's Life and Writings. 1 Kings 3: 5–15.

They teach the insufficiency of wealth, position and fame for the insuring of inward peace and joy. Not all the characters of Scripture were poor men. Indeed, many of them, like Abraham and Zaccheus and Joseph of Arimathea, had large possessions. Nor are righteousness and spirituality necessarily strangers to the abodes and the hearts of the favored ones of earth. The Bible is careful to preserve a proper balance of judgment on this point. At the same time it is significant that its most regal character, the one whose external surroundings were so splendid as to make his glory in the eyes of Jesus serve as the type of the highest earthly station, was nevertheless a man of unquiet spirit. He seems to have experienced little of the restfulness and gladness of religion. Thus the Old Testament affords at least one magnificent illustration of Jesus' saying that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

We learn, too, that high position, great resources are not essential to the wielding of a large and permanent influence. Undoubtedly Solomon did a vast deal of good. He was a mighty instrument in the hands of Providence for building up the children of Israel. He provided them with a temple worthy of their traditions. He extended their commerce. He brought the Jewish people into contact with the nations of the earth, and so broadened and liberalized them, at the same time bringing the worth of the Israelitish religion to the notice of foreigners. But fully acknowledging all that he accomplished, and looking with charity upon his later wanderings from the straight path, we must confess that he does not grip our hearts or stir them to admiration of him as does his father, David, as do other Bible worthies before and after him. The man is somehow obscured by his glittering trappings. Something else is needed to enroll a man on the list of those whom we would fain follow and imitate than a large bank account or a reputation as a warrior, builder or writer. The world sifts men until only the kernels of character remain. Much of the noblest work for mankind through all the centuries has been wrought by men who were poor and unfortunate and, while they lived, unpopular. All depends on the quality of the man. If he be a good man, a Christ man, whether poor or rich, he will make the world respect his manhood and feel his influence.

The practical lesson for us, then, is not to think that we might have scored a better record had we been in Solomon's place nor wish that we had other gifts and opportunities than we now possess. What are we, as we are today, trying to do and to be?

Parallel verses: Deut. 6: 4–9; Ps. 37: 29–40; Eccl. 1: 12–18; Matt. 12: 34–37; Jas. 1: 5–10.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, Dec. 6–12. Religious Reading. Ps. 25: 4–10; 1 Tim. 4: 12–16.

How may it promote communion with God? How show us our duty? How inform us concerning the progress of the kingdom of God? What are the best books and periodicals for spiritual culture?

THE NEW TEMPERANCE CAMPAIGN IN CANADA.

BY REV. J. R. BLACK.

The Dominion of Canada is not a stranger to temperance agitation. It began some sixty years ago and has been continued at intervals ever since. But the agitation hitherto has been sectional. Under what is known as the Dunkin and Scott Acts campaigns the movement was within municipal limits, as was the nature of these laws. By taking up each city and county, however, and securing a place for the local prohibitory act in the legal machinery of the district, several Provinces were almost wholly covered by prohibition from 1880 to 1887. Yet the local prohibitory movement never included all the Provinces in its sweep. Quebec and Manitoba, for the most part, remained outside of it. The very partialness of these prohibitory activities was a weakness. The liquor traffickers, intrenched in areas here and there in the country, could, and did, make successful forays into the territories captured by the prohibitionists. And, while their raids were limited in their destructiveness, they yet discredited the law in the eyes of the lukewarm electors, and gradually the places where the temperance measure had been adopted abandoned it, and liquordom resumed sway.

It was thus seen that prohibition, to be successful, must extend over a larger area from the outset than a municipality. It must embrace at least a Province, and, better still, the entire Dominion.

The politicians—provincial and Federal—were approached on this point and requested to give a prohibitory law coextensive with the limits of their legislative jurisdictions. But this the politicians refused to do without a mandate from the people. They said, we will make arrangements for taking a vote of the electors on the subject. We will ask them to say "yea" or "nay" on the question of prohibition, and if the majority are favorable and it is constitutional we shall enact a law in accordance with their expressed wishes. To this policy the temperance people assented in the meantime, and rolled up magnificent majorities for prohibition in Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, the only provinces where the question has been brought to a direct issue at the polls. And on the accession to power, in July last of the set of politicians who, in Dominion affairs, promised the people an opportunity to vote on this question, the temperance people urged the fulfillment of their ante-election pledge. This was at once agreed to by Mr. Laurier, the premier, and his associates in the new government, and in a few months the vote is expected to be taken in all the Provinces from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans.

That which accentuates the prohibition movement, as a Dominion one, just now, is a recent deliverance of the Privy Council—the highest legal tribunal of the British empire. The government of the Province of Ontario, more than a year ago, brought a case before this council in order to obtain its views as to the powers of the Province in relation to the prohibition of the liquor traffic. By this decision it is known that each Province has the constitutional right to regulate the liquor traffic within its bounds, and can also prohibit it by municipalities, but that the power to prohibit in all Canada is vested by the constitution in the Federal Parliament.

The preparations which are now being made for this plebiscite are on a scale commensurate with the large territory it is to cover and the tremendous interests involved. Churches, temperance organizations, Christian Endeavor Societies, women's Christian temperance and Sunday school unions and the newspaper press are busily engaged in enlightening the electorate on the question at issue.

And while the attention of prohibitionists is directed to the Dominion movement they are also determined to work the provincial power for all it is worth in securing their end. The local governments in several provinces are being pressed to enact laws further limiting the places for the sale of intoxicants, and the electors are requested to make the most out of the local option privilege.

There can be no reasonable doubt of the result of the coming vote. It will be overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition. The temperance sentiment, in all sections of this Dominion, has been a growing factor for the past half-century. The delay on the part of Quebec, New Brunswick and the northwest territories to take a plebiscite, as in the other sister provinces, was not owing to lack of interest in it but because of local conditions which rendered such a vote peculiarly difficult, or made it seemingly needless. Our consumption of liquor is less per capita than that of the United States of America, Great Britain and the continental European countries. Yet our present drink bill is too large for our good, for we expend $40,000,000 directly in the purchase of intoxicating drinks for beverage purposes. And when we add to this the waste of material in the making, the time losses of men to industry occasioned by its use and the expense in police service and court and prison maintainance the traffic necessitates, we may safely estimate our annual loss by this business at not less than $140,000,000.

Kingston, Ont.

A university extension department has been established in connection with the Berkeley Temple School of Applied Christianity. A normal class of about thirty members meets weekly under the leadership of the principal, Rev. Lawrence Phelps, for the study of the Bible. He has also a Bible class of about 100 on Tuesday evenings at Phillips Church, South Boston, and calls from other places to organize similar classes. A correspondence department in connection with the school also finds a growing demand.

The Standard of Excellence

The average woman cannot discriminate justly between machines, so far as their mechanical construction is concerned, but she can always wisely judge their work.

ALL THE ESSENTIAL QUALITIES OF A FAMILY SEWING-MACHINE ARE MOST PERFECTLY COMBINED IN . . .

SIMPLICITY—so it can be easily adjusted, and won't get out of order.

SPEED—so that it will do the most work with the least effort.

STABILITY—so that it will wear the longest with the least repairs.

STYLE—so that it will be an ornament to the home.

SINGER WORK IS ALWAYS GOOD WORK.

This is why Singer Machines maintain their supremacy all over the world, making the Singer trade-mark a reliable guarantee of perfection. . . . . .

THE BOOK OF THE PILGRIMAGE is a sumptuous quarto, printed on heavy coated paper, wide margins, uncut edges, and bound in white parchment paper. Over sixty illustrations, many of them full-page, and about seventy portraits of distinguished men and women in England, to whom, as hosts, the Pilgrimage Party was indebted. In addition to this there are four group pictures of the party, including two of double-page size. There are over one hundred facsimile autographs, many of them of great interest, and including a characteristic letter of Ian Maclaren. The initial letters have been drawn by Ipsen, who also furnished designs for the title-page, frontispiece, and finis.

THE KANSAS COLLEGE QUESTION.

BY PRES. GEORGE M. HERRICK, WASHBURN COLLEGE, TOPEKA.

Inasmuch as my name was mentioned in an article in The Congregationalist, Nov. 12, referring to the educational conditions in Kansas, a word of explanation seems wise. In May, 1895, while Western secretary of the Education Society, I visited Wichita, and, having looked over the field, wrote a personal and unofficial letter to the secretary of the society, in which were the sentences quoted by your correspondent. A due regard for fairness, however, would have led him to quote other portions of the same letter in close connection with these, in which I stated that I was not converted to the idea of a second college and suggested that we await the leading of Providence. The letter as a whole cannot be fairly construed as an indorsement or a recommendation of a second college.

In July, 1895, the society passed the following vote, which, though probably not influenced by this letter, was yet in thorough accord with its general spirit:

Voted, That the sum of $3,000 be appropriated to Fairmount Institute for the coming year. This vote is not to be understood as establishing a new college in the State of Kansas without the approval of the State Association, and the continuance of this aid will depend upon the action of the said association as determining the rank of the institution.

Language could not be plainer. If the subsequent action of the society had been in accordance with this vote, no criticism could have been made. But their action in recognizing Fairmount as a college before the State Association had sanctioned it was in direct contradiction to their vote as given above. Your correspondent is in serious error in his attempt to show that Fairmount has the sanction of the State Association. At its meeting in May last, it heard the report of a committee appointed the previous year to report upon Fairmount Institute. The official record of the meeting does not show a report from Fairmount College. Moreover, at that meeting committees were appointed to report in 1897 for Washburn, Stockton and Eureka. None was appointed for Fairmount. This does not look like a strong indorsement!

What the State Association may do in the future is not my province to discuss. The fact is that the Education Society, in direct contradiction to its own vote of the preceding year and without the approval of the State Association, recognized the institution as a college. Washburn has no quarrel with the society nor with Fairmount. She stands today, as she has stood for thirty-one successful years, as the one recognized Congregational college in Kansas, dear to the churches, receiving their benefactions and training their sons and daughters. She enrolls this year the largest number in her history. A Freshman Class of fifty-four, representing all sections of the State, and drawn from a larger number of high schools than ever before, attests her popularity and her growth. If the Education Society and the Eastern givers wish to build up another college in this State, that is their privilege. If the State Association elects to recognize a second college here, to divide the patronage and the gifts of less than 12,000 Congregationalists, that is their privilege; Washburn will try to fulfill her destiny and serve well her generation.

We rejoice to report the fact that the Colorado College endowment fund has now climbed to over $100,000, leaving about $36,000 to be collected before Dr. Pearsons's conditional gift will be available. The college has just received from the late Willard B. Perkins of Colorado Springs $24,000, $10 000 to be devoted to building purposes and the remainder to maintain two scholarships.

A Merry Christmas

Says the GRAMOPHONE

THESE people are certainly enjoying themselves, and no wonder, for they are listening to one of the most varied entertainments ever given in a private parlor. They were first, as you will perceive by the accompanying program, entertained by a piano solo, which was rendered by a very well-known artist. They then listened to a popular and patriotic song, sung by the very renowned George J. Gaskin. The next selection was a banjo solo and after that a song by the baritone, J. W. Myers, "Star Light, Star Bright"; then was introduced a recitation, "The Imitation of a Street Fakir." This was followed by a male quartet. Then came the very popular and famous Billy Golden with his plantation song, "Bye, Bye, Ma Honey"; following that a cornet duet and then the French national song, "La Marseillaise," by Signor F. A. Giannini.

We have introduced in this advertisement the whole program as rendered at this evening's "Home Entertainment"; each selection was a reproduction of the original. You listen to the quality and strains of the cornet; you absolutely hear the picking of the banjo, while the quartet singing and the solo singing are the natural reproductions of the real artists.

So true to life are these reproductions that if you were to come into the Hall and see the people gathered together and yet not know that the evening's entertainment was given by a reproducing or, as it is perhaps better known, a talking machine, you would really never know it unless you had a chance to enter the room.

This special talking machine, the BERLINER GRAMOPHONE, is the newest and the best. Its results are better than those of the regular $100 talking machines. We have made this result possible because of the discovery of a new way to record sound. It is recorded upon a flat disc and finally placed upon hard rubber, which makes it indestructible, very easy to handle, and, for the first time, thoroughly adapted for family use. These discs cost 60 cents singly, or $6 per dozen, and, as the variety is almost unlimited, you can have a never failing source of pleasure and entertainment. Great men and great artists will be recorded, and you will thus be able to hear, in your own home, people of national and international reputation.

There is no musical instrument that the Gramophone does not reproduce. This spring motor machine, which runs by clockwork, we sell for $25, express prepaid to any point east of the Rocky Mountains. To points beyond we allow Denver express rates. Two records are included with each machine.

We Guarantee PERFECT SATISFACTION, and will return your money, less express charges, if it is not satisfactory. It winds easily, turns three records without rewinding, weighs only fifteen pounds, and has the great advantage of being always ready for use, because its power is within itself.

We have two other styles for $10 and $15; the $10 machine is run by hand, and is furnished with ear tubes for two people to hear. The $15 machine is also run by hand, but is supplied with a governor, so that the speed is regulated, and after it is turned as fast as necessary cannot be turned any faster. This makes the hand machine sure to give you a good reproduction, even in the hands of a novice. These two styles—the $10 and $15 machines—sent prepaid, as above indicated, upon receipt of price. All equipment necessary accompanies each machine. SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

God's Presence.

LET others ask the world's acclaim,
Renown of pen or sword,
The hero's praise, the statesman's fame;
Give me thy presence, Lord.

All earth's possessions must decay,
Its friendships death estrange,
Its dreamlike scenes dissolve away;
Thy presence doth not change.

I dwell with an uneasy race,
The strife of tongues is theirs;
Thy presence hath a secret place
Apart from noise and cares.

Sorrow and anguish cloud my path
Whene'er I stray from thee;
Fullness of joy thy presence hath,
For there all joy must be.

The heaven that is thy dwelling-place,
The throne where angels bow,
The glory of thy awful face,
I could not bear them now.

But in a world of conflict where
My passions oft are stirred,
Success to win, defeat to bear,
Give me thy presence, Lord.

Scribner's New Illustrated Books

SUITABLE FOR HOLIDAY GIFTS.

The Last Quarter Century in the United States.

With 350 handsome Illustrations, including Portraits, great Historical Scenes, etc., etc.

1870–1895. By E. Benjamin Andrews, President of Brown University. 2 vols., 8vo, $6 00.

"The style is clear, vivacious and suited to the general reader. The views of the author, so far as I have discovered them, are characterized by moderation and justice. The illustrations are excellent. The work as a whole seems to be well fitted for a place, not only in the private library, but in the numerous public libraries and school libraries throughout the country."—Pres. D. C. Gilman, Johns Hopkins University.

France Under Louis XIV.

With 22 Photogravures and 500 other Illustrations.

(Le Grande Siècle) Translated from the French of Emile Bourgeois. Imperial 8vo, beautifully bound, $15.00.

An altogether notable work, based upon the writings of Voltaire, Saint Simon, Madame de Sévigné, La Bruyère, and Princess Palatine, etc. It is distinguished alike for the historical value of its contents, the interest and charm of its style, and for the richness and profuseness of its illustrative material, which has been drawn from every source, public and private.

On the Trail of Don Quixote.

With 130 Illustrations by Daniel Vierge.

Being a Record of Rambles in the Ancient Province of La Mancha. By August F. Jaccaci. 12mo, $2.50.

The volume is in a sense the outgrowth of a long friendship between the artist, who was born and bred a Spaniard, and the author, who is familiar from boyhood and from recent travel with the province of La Mancha. The book describes Don Quixote's country as it is today, with incidental allusions to such scenes as are acknowledged and easily recognizable.

In Ole Virginia.

With 24 full-page Illustrations by A. B. Frost, Howard Pyle, W. T. Smedley, C. S. Reinhart, A. Castaigne, and B. W. Clinedinst.

By Thomas Nelson Page. 12mo, $2.50.

This handsome volume contains Mr. Page's famous stories of Southern life—"Marse Chan," "Meh Lady," "Polly," "Unc' Edinburg," "Ole Stracted," and "No Haid Pawn"—with many beautiful illustrations by artists selected in each case for their peculiar fitness to treat the stories assigned them. The illustrations are as notable for the exquisitely sympathetic manner in which they reflect the spirit of the text as for their charming artistic qualities.

The Edge of the Orient.

With 130 Illustrations, chiefly from Photographs by the Author.

By Robert Howard Russell. 12mo, $2 00.

"An enthusiastic story of some most interesting journeyings. It is a graceful, light-hearted production, approaching at times the buoyancy and humor of even the tourist work of Mark Twain, and yet giving with great earnestness and good faith the traditions, myths, and customs of all the people between its sunny covers."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

My Village.

With nearly 150 Illustrations from Original Drawings by the Author.

By E. Boyd Smith. 12mo, $2.00.

"Few volumes of the season have surpassed this in quiet charm. Mr. Smith gives a picture of the French peasant and provincial life full of color, keen characterization, and nice study of manners, customs and men."—The Outlook.

Love in Old Cloathes.

With full-page Illustrations by A. Castaigne, W. T. Smedley and Orson Lowell.

By H. C. Bunner. 12mo, $1.50.

"The stories have just the qualities of simple, genuine pathos and humor which bring constant and unwearied pleasure. It is this simplicity which gave Mr. Bunner's genius its peculiar manly and direct appeal. He moves us by every-day emotions, every-day incidents, and one admires equally the childlikeness and the artistic beauty of his methods."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Sprightly Romance of Marsac.

Fully Illustrated by Gustave Verbeek.

By Mollie Elliot Seawell. 12mo, $1.25.

"Marsac, the hero of this remarkably bright sketch, is a genius. When we are first introduced to him, he and his friend Fontaine are living in poverty in the Latin quarter of Paris. From this condition Marsac rescues them by an unparalleled display of genius. It is a book to drive away the blues. The illustrations are more than good."—Boston Advertiser.

That First Affair,

And Other Sketches. By J. A. Mitchell. 12mo, $1.25

Illustrated by C. D Gibson, A. B. Frost, F. T. Richards, and the Author.

Mr. Mitchell's gift as a story-teller lies in the direction of fancy and satire, mingled with delicate sentiment. The five stories in the volume are different in motive, but of equally surprising workmanship; and they will increase the wide reputation as a writer of fiction gained for him by "Amos Judd."

The Story of Canada.

By J. G. BOURINOT, Clerk, House of Commons, Ottawa. New number (46) in the "Story of the Nations Series." Fully illustrated. Large 12mo, $1.50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75.

"Dr. Bourinot traces the development of the Dominion from the earliest times to the present day, when the resources of the country are being rapidly opened up, and when Canada is proving herself to be one of the strongest and most enterprising of the British colonies."

A Princetonian.

A Story of Undergraduate Life at the College of New Jersey. By JAMES BARNES, author of "For King and Country," "Midshipman Farragut," etc. Uniform with "Harvard Stories" and "Yale Yarns." No. 4 in "The University Series." Illustrated. 12mo, $1.25.

A Princetonian is a continuous story, the hero of which is a western youth who enters college at a more advanced age than is usual. It describes graphically the experiences incident to his college life, beginning with his vigorous and successful objection to being hazed.

In My Lady's Name.

Poems of Love and Beauty. Selected and arranged by CHARLES WELLS MOULTON. With frontispiece, 16mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Under the above title, Mr. Moulton, Editor of "The Magazine of Poetry," has made a collection of poems to Fair Women. In the volume will be found a poem to every name by which Woman is called, which gives to the book interest apart from its value as good poetry. The book is handsomely printed on deckel-edged paper, with an attractively stamped cover. An ideal head of a woman reproduced in photogravure forms the frontispiece.

A SUPERB REFERENCE LIBRARY

covering the entire range of human knowledge, invention and discovery up to the present day, including the Arts, Sciences, History, Biography, Philosophy, Astronomy, Meteorology, Geography, Navigation, Geology, Exploration, Botany, Agriculture, Commerce, Finance, Zoology, Ethnology, Physiology, Chemistry, Electricity, Law, Medicine, Theology, Statistics, etc.

JUST OFF THE PRESS!

The new American Standard Encyclopedia is brought right down to the date of its issue, and contains hundreds of articles on subjects on which all the older reference works are necessarily silent. It is also a superior Pronouncing Dictionary, giving all words in general use, carefully defined. Its contents embody a Biographical Dictionary, a Gazetteer of the World, a Glossary of Technical Terms, late Census Reports, an Atlas of the whole Globe, and a rich storehouse of general, practical, up-to-date information—scientific, historical, military, social and civil—all arranged and classified in convenient form for ready reference.

UNTIL Dec. 31 ONE DOLLAR Secures immediate possession of this superb library. Balance payable $1.00 monthly for 6 months—about 3 cents a day. Total Only $7.00.

IT IS THE VERY LATEST OF ALL REFERENCE WORKS. These are some of the live topics that are treated with 1896 accuracy and freshness, viz.: Argon, X-Rays, Atlanta Exposition, Li Hung Chang, Nansen's and Peary's Arctic Explorations, Horseless Carriage, Air Ships, Color Photography, Free Silver, Electrical Science, Acetylene, Professor Roentgen, Sklagraphy, etc. On these and a thousand other important topics of today the older books say nothing or are years behind the age. This great new work is an absolute necessity to all who want to keep abreast of the times.

IT IS MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED THROUGHOUT with beautiful colored maps of every country on the globe, superb charts bearing upon anatomy, mineralogy, entomology, zoology, fossils, electrical science, ordnance, etc., besides the countless woodcut engravings that graphically illustrate the thousands of subjects.

OUR GREAT SPECIAL OFFER FOR INTRODUCTION

As a means of quickly introducing and popularizing this peerless home reference library, we have decided to distribute a few advance sets in each community, regardless of cost and purely as an advertising project. We know that every set so placed will prove an advertisement of the greatest power and lead to hundreds of sales at paying prices. Comparison with any and all other reference works will quickly demonstrate the immeasurable superiority of our grand new work. This distribution will occur during December Only. On January 1 prices will be advanced to regular rates—$19.00 to $31.00 a set. We reserve the right to withdraw this offer at any time without notice, in which case money will be returned without cost to sender.

HOW TO ORDER:

Send $1.00 to American Newspaper Syndicate (address below) and the entire set will be forwarded. Subsequent payments to be made as follows: On cloth style, $1.00 a month for 6 months; on half Russia style, $1.00 a month for 8 months. When ordering be sure to state style of binding wanted (we recommend the half Russia), with full shipping directions. All transportation charges to be paid by purchaser. Books guaranteed as represented or first payment refunded if set is returned within ten days. We refer to any newspaper or bank in Philadelphia.

SPECIAL TO CASH BUYERS: If cash in full be sent with order, prices will be $5.00 for cloth style, $7.00 for half Russia, until Dec. 24 only. Book of Specimen Pages mailed free upon request.

CAUTION! We are the sole publishers of the new American Standard Encyclopedia, and can assume no responsibility for any orders except those sent directly to us. Beware of inferior imitations advertised at higher prices. See that our name, and no other, is at the bottom of each title-page.

2c., 3c., 4c., 5c. each.

2 Illustrated Papers for Home Reading.
A Lesson Help and Paper Combined.
3 Primary Helps in Colors.
A Chart in Colors.

Also 2 additional Independent Courses of Study.

The well-known and popular "Pilgrim Series" is used by the great majority of Congregational schools, and several improvements in prospect for 1897 will place this Series still further in advance. Careful editing, sound scholarship, freshness and variety of method and excellent mechanical execution have characterized the "Pilgrim Series" for many years, but our aim is to make our Congregational Helps for 1897 better than ever before. The Review Questions, now printed in the Quarterlies, and the catechetical feature just introduced are very valuable. Larger type makes the page more attractive and more easily read. Altogether, our Lesson Helps for 1897 are unsurpassed. We now publish as follows:—

For Adults in all Departments. SERMONS BY THE MONDAY CLUB. A series of helpful expositions of the lessons by a company of the ablest preachers in our denomination. 387 pp., cloth binding, $1.25 (less our usual discount).

Scribner's New Books

FOR YOUNG READERS.

Songs of Childhood.

The Field-de Koven Song Book. Verses by EUGENE FIELD. Music by REGINALD DE KOVEN and others. Large 8vo, $2.00.

Over twenty of Mr. Field's lyrics are here set to charmingly appropriate music by Reginald de Koven, the most popular of American song writers, and other well-known composers.

Hans Brinker;

or, The Silver Skates. By MARY MAPES DODGE. New Amsterdam Edition. With over 100 Illustrations by Allen B. Doggett. 12mo, $2.50.

Mrs. Dodge's ever popular story will appeal afresh to old and new readers in this handsome new edition. The pictures are the result of a special trip to Holland, and illustrate the book most attractively.

American Boys' Book of Sport.

Out-door Games for All Seasons. By DANIEL C. BEARD. With over 360 Illustrations by the author. 8vo, $2.50.

This is an entirely new book by Mr. Beard, containing altogether new matter of great interest to all young lovers of sport. It is a companion volume to the author's well known "American Boys' Handy Book," and will undoubtedly rival that famous work in popularity as it does in interest.

The Court of King Arthur.

Stories from the Land of the Round Table. By W. H. FROST, author of "The Wagder Story Book." Illustrated by S. R. Burleigh. 12mo, $1.50.

"Among the most entertaining of the children's stories this year. The stories are told from the point of view of a little girl traveling over the lands of King Arthur with him and his court."—The Outlook.

New Books by G. A. Henty.

At Agincourt. A Tale of the White Hoods of Paris.

With Cochrane the Dauntless. A Tale of the Exploits of Lord Cochrane in South American Waters.

Each fully illustrated, 12mo, $1.50.

"Mr. Henty's books never fail to interest."—London Anthenæum.

Through Swamp and Glade.

A Tale of the Seminole War. By KIRK MUNROE. Illustrated by Victor Perard. (White Conqueror Series.) 12mo, $1.25.

"The leading events as well as leading characters are true to history. Kirk Munroe is at home in such a story, and his book has no dull pages."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Previous Volumes: The White Conquerors. Illustrated by W. S. Stacey. At War with Pontiac. Illustrated by J. Finnemore. Each 12mo, $1.25.

The Log of a Privateersman.

By HARRY COLLINGWOOD. With 12 full-page illustrations by W. I. Rainey. 12mo, $1.50.

"The scene of the story is laid in the early years of the present century, when British privateers were scouring the ocean in pursuit of French or Spanish merchantmen. There is plenty of fighting. The book will be devoured eagerly by any boy who is fortunate enough to get a copy."—Boston Advertiser.

To Tell the King the Sky is Falling.

By SHEILA E. BRAINE. Illustrated by Alice B. Woodward. 12mo, $1.75. A pretty, fanciful story for children, attractively illustrated.

Children's Stories in American Literature. 1860-1896.

"The World's Best"

It has ever been the aim of the Publishers of Peloubet's Quarterlies to make them, from every standpoint, superior to all other lesson helps. That they have succeeded was evinced by their enormous circulation, greatly increased during the past year by their marked reduction in price. The 1897 series comprise all of the old favorites of as listed and priced below.

	Price per Year.	Price per Quarter.
The Senior Quarterly	16 cents.	4 cents.
The Scholars' (for both oral and written answers)	16 ,,	4 ,,
The Intermediate	16 ,,	4 ,,
The Junior, or Children's	12 ,,	3 ,,
The Little Ones' Quarterly	12 ,,	3 ,,

They will be edited as heretofore by

Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D. D. Rev. A. F. Schauffler, D. D.
Mrs. M. G. Kennedy. Miss Lucy Wheelock.

In order to more fully supply the needs of Sunday Schools, we have prepared for 1897 a new which will be found to be exactly what has long been needed for the scholars of Home Departments. It will be published in the Senior Grade. Sunday-School superintendents and teachers desiring to examine any of these Quarterlies are requested to send for free samples, and decide for themselves regarding their distinctive merits, kindly specifying which ones and grades are desired.

For Teachers.

We publish Teachers' Quarterlies in four grades, containing explanatory and illustrative notes for their sole use. Price, 40 cents a year, 10 cents a copy.

W. A. WILDE & CO., Boston, Mass.

NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Half a Dozen Girls. By ANNA CHAPIN RAY, author of "Half a Dozen Boys." 18 illustrations by FRANK T. MERRILL. 8vo, $1.50.

For naturalness, piquancy, and at the same time genuine educational value, few books of the time compare with Miss Ray's.

Chilhowee Boys at College. By SARAH E. MORRISON. Illustrated by FRANK T. MERRILL. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Miss Morrison continues her Chilhowee series with a remarkable story, in which the horizon widens a little as the boys leave the lovely Chilhowee Valley, and go out to get their education. These books will be classics.

Household Stories. From the collection of the BROTHERS GRIMM. Translated by LUCY CRANE. With colored frontispiece and illustrations by WALTER CRANE. (Children's Favorite Classics.) 16mo, 342 pp., cloth, 75 cents; 8vo, $1.25.

The present setting of these stories admirably suits them. Nothing more delightful for children could be found.

A Wonder Book for Boys and Girls. By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. With colored frontispiece and eight illustrations by W. ST. JOHN HARPER. (Children's Favorite Classics.) 233 pp., 16mo, 75 cents; 8vo, $1.25.

The present edition is excellently illustrated, and bears the palm for convenience and beauty.

A Short Cruise. By JAMES OTIS. 8vo, frontispiece, 50 cents.

A story that will delight all lovers of the sea. Indeed, the mere statement that it is by the author of "How Tommy Saved the Barn" will commend it to a large circle of readers.

Dick. A story for boys and girls. By ANNA CHAPIN RAY. 8vo. Illustrated by FRANK T. MERRILL. $1 25.

It is perhaps the most humorous book that Miss Ray has ever written.

J. B. Lippincott Company's New Holiday Publications.

MYTHS AND LEGENDS OF OUR OWN LAND.

By Charles M. Skinner. Illustrated with photogravures. Two volumes in box. 12mo. Polished buckram, gilt top, deckle edges, $3 00; half calf or half morocco, $6 00.

The bibliography of American Legends is slight, and these tales have been gathered from sources the most diverse—records, histories, newspapers, magazines, oral narrative—in every case reconstructed. The pursuit of them has been so long that a claim may be set forth for some measure of completeness.

HALF-HOURS OF TRAVEL AT HOME AND ABROAD.

America, Europe, Asia, and Africa. Selected and arranged by Charles Morris. Uniform with Morris' Half-Hour Series. Four volumes. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $6.00; half calf, $10.00; three-quarters calf, $13 00

The widely varying diversity is what interests us in the works of travelers, and in the present volumes has been gathered a series of descriptive passages covering all regions of the several continents.

BIRD-LAND ECHOES.

By Charles Conrad Abbott, author of "The Birds About Us," etc. Profusely illustrated by WILLIAM EVERETT CRAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

"The triumph of his spontaneous art in writing is to impart to the reader a goodly proportion of the love he bears to all birds, 'whether they are commonplace or rare, stupid or entertaining, gentle or vicious, large or small.' The volume is further enriched by about a hundred portraits of birds from the skillful pencil of William Everett Cram."—Philadelphia Press.

THE TRUE GEORGE WASHINGTON.

By Paul Leicester Ford, author of "The Hon. Peter Stirling," etc. With 24 full-page illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, deckle edges, $2.00.

The present book has been prepared to show the human side of the great American—his family life, and his love affairs; what he ate and wore, who were his friends and enemies, his amusements and his illnesses, and much else of a personal nature. In this it is a radical departure from all previous biographies, and will include much new material never yet printed, as well as many interesting illustrations.

HISTORICAL TALES.

Two New Volumes in this Series.

GREECE. ROME.

By Charles Morris. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, per volume, $1.25. Previously issued: America, England, France, Germany.

Each volume contains from twenty-five to thirty stories concerning well-authenticated incidents, passages of history, or personal adventure in the different countries named. The stories are told in excellent style, the truth of history is carefully preserved, and each volume is admirably illustrated. The volumes are issued in uniform style.

In the pulpits of Boston and vicinity last Sunday there were commanders, commissioners, consuls and colonels, besides other titled persons of both sexes. The Salvation Army began its national congress, the first it has held since the withdrawal of Commander and Mrs. Booth to organize the new order of Volunteers. A remarkable demonstration was made in Music Hall on Sunday afternoon. Large meetings have been held in Faneuil Hall and in other places during the early part of the week, and many notable Salvationists from England and other countries have been heard. The churches of Boston of all denominations have a warm sympathy with the army, recognize its peculiar mission, believe it is guided by the Holy Spirit and rejoice in its success. The ministers who heard Commander Booth-Tucker, who addressed the Monday gathering in Pilgrim Hall, were impressed with his modesty, good sense and consecration. The Episcopal Church Army has also opened headquarters in Boston and held its first meeting last Monday evening in St. Paul's Church. Revival meetings are arranged for every evening this week. This army claims to have methods different from the Salvationists, but very novel and interesting. The value of all these methods as distinct from those of other religious bodies lies in their influence toward righteousness after their novelties have ceased to attract interest.

Christian unity is a term which calls forth much enthusiasm. But it is a question whether, if Christians generally were agreed on what they believe, interest in religion would not languish. We sing, "Blest be the tie that binds," but most of us, as soon as we begin to feel that the tie binds, begin to struggle to get loose. A large proportion of Christians really get warm, not on agreements but on differences. For example, Dr. John Watson proposes, in The Mind of the Master, the following as an interpretation of historic creeds:

> I believe in the Fatherhood of God. I believe in the words of Jesus. I believe in the clean heart. I believe in the service of love. I believe in the unworldly life. I believe in the Beatitudes. I promise to trust God and follow Christ, to forgive my enemies and to seek after the righteousness of God.

We believe these statements heartily. They do not include all that we believe, but they present nothing we would reject. Yet they have awakened a discordant chorus of dissent. Some of our contemporaries interpret each sentence and show how wrongly others might interpret them. Others point out the omissions and show how fatal they are, as though the author's design was to limit every one's belief to this confession. The Christian Observer caps the climax by characterizing it as "this compound of emptiness and insult to God." Well, those who don't believe in these statements will have their want of faith confirmed if they read the comments of some of the religious newspapers about them.

Who can measure the life and continuance of a deed of self sacrifice to lift others to higher usefulness? When Oberlin opened its doors to women—the first college to take this step—the school at Ipswich, Mass., in which Mary Lyon was teaching, sent to Oberlin $450. Of this sum Mary Lyon gave $150, when her salary was very small. Four years later she founded Mt. Holyoke Seminary. The women teachers of Oberlin, in remembrance of her noble service to that college, gathered $450 and sent it to Mt. Holyoke last month as a Thanksgiving offering. If all those who have been made more useful and happy by what Mary Lyon has done would recognize it by some worthy offering to the institution to which she gave her life, it would be well equipped for the great work demanded of it for New England and the world. And those who should imitate her self-sacrifice would ennoble themselves by doing it. Who can tell, beides, what like deeds these would prompt in years to come after their work is done?

Our recent question to the Boston Transcript, "What is the function of a dramatic critic of a high-toned paper, if it is not to condemn vice?" has drawn forth a reply, which indicates better than anything we can say the deplorable "let alone" policy which dominates dramatic criticism even in the best of our journals. Says the Transcript:

> But the function of a dramatic critic of "a high-toned paper" or any other class of paper is certainly not to condemn vice. He is, or ought to be, a judge of the value of plays and of acting from a literary, dramatic, æsthetic, and, if needs be, moral standpoint. But that does not necessarily make him an arbiter upon either vice or virtue.

We have no disposition to add to "the Herculean task" of any dramatic critic, much less make him "moral censor of the universe," a duty which the Transcript hitherto has supposed to be "the unique function of the clergy." But we do hold that an editor or critic has as much responsibility as a clergyman for distinctly rebuking and discountenancing evil wherever he sees it. No one asks him to indulge "in long winded and wearisome sermonizing," or to look at the play from "a perfunctory moral standpoint," but it would be refreshing now and then to see a harlot called a harlot, nastiness termed nastiness, and something written which would indicate that critics had convictions and were capable of feelings of contempt, disgust and righteous indignation.

The abandonment of the self-supporting method of mission management by the Methodists in Chile is another testimony to the fact that the nervous energy of the missionaries is too valuable to be spent in earning bread and butter in the strange conditions of a foreign land. Missionary economy is not to be measured in money, but efficiency. If the plan of an industrial settlement and adoption of the manners and life of the people among whom the work is to be done brings the largest opportunity of service, well and good; but it would be better to have fewer workers in the field, and have them free to give their whole strength to evangelization, than to have a larger number whose strength went mainly to "serve tables." It is, after all, only a division of labor between those who earn and those who preach and teach, and the division is none the worse because one party is in North and the other in South America. The sense of partnership is as good for the church at home as the sense of responsibility and assurance of sympathy and support is for the workers in foreign lands. At the same time it is to be remembered that a few of the most devoted and successful missionary workers have preferred to identify themselves in every way with the people to whom they brought the gospel message. The method of our own Board seems to be best suited to the different circumstances of the work in various lands, but there is always room for diversities of gifts if only there is the same Spirit.

THE DESIRE FOR PROSPERITY.

The most potent argument of either party in the recent political struggle was the promise of better times. That meant more property for everybody; more work, higher wages, release from debts, greater amounts of business and larger profits. That is not the highest ambition which can stir a nation. Integrity is more than money, honor is more than comfort. If the desire for righteousness is not greater than the desire for prosperity, the promise of better times, made by whatever party, will prove delusive.

But a great many people in this country believe that they are deprived by unrighteousness of the prosperity which is their due. That makes life burdensome to them. Many of them are not poorer than their fathers were, who lived contented lives. Many of them have much greater prosperity than their fathers had. But they see men richer than their fathers ever dreamed of—men who are compelling them to assist in piling up wealth for the few. They see the necessities of life absolutely controlled by men who possess vast fortunes. With every pound of sugar they buy, every basket of coal, every gallon of oil, they pay a tax to those who have usurped this power over them. Railroad companies, possessing lands for which they have paid nothing, demanding money for dividends on stocks which represent no real investment, have combined with these men to make their grip secure.

It does not satisfy the people to tell them that such combinations really cheapen prices. That does not make them less dependent on these would-be rulers. It does not less destroy the real freedom which thinking men regard as an essential element of prosperity. Senator Hoar pointed to the greatest menace to good times the other day, which is that people "see colossal fortunes acquired by forbidden ways, by the fraudulent management of great railroads, by the perversion of corporate powers bestowed by government for public use and for public ends, or by gambling in stocks or in the necessities of life." When the desire for prosperity becomes perverted to mere greed of gain, the sense of injustice in the disappointed majority leads to revolution. Very many of the votes of the defeated party in the late election were simply a protest against what is keenly felt to be injustice. If a real remedy had been presented by that party, it would have won.

The greatest task before the government is to satisfy the just demands of the many, who believe they are oppressed by the few. The disposition to do this at present is encouraging. The utterances of prominent politicians and the tone of the press indicate an appreciation of the danger, a patriotic spirit and a sense of the magnitude of the work to be done. But the acquired powers of great trusts and corporations will not be limited without a struggle, the might of which is not yet measured; and the real points at issue may easily become obscured by discussions of conflicting interests.

Besides, legislation alone can accomplish little. Every one's prosperity is affected by this wrongful use of wealth against which rising protests are heard, and every one may do something to secure justice for all. Senator Hoar says the business men of New England can most aid the cause of good government "by bringing to bear the great weight of their opinion and their influence to crush out such abuses as have unfortunately become too common in this country in this day of rapid accumulation of wealth." All classes ought to do the same. Especially those who are tempted to claim special privileges from the government should remind themselves by how frail a tenure they will hold them in the present state of public opinion, and at how great a peril to the peace and prosperity of the whole country. In any community the people may share hard times with positive enjoyment. But they will not long view unshared prosperity in peace.

THE CHRISTIAN WAY OF SETTLING DIFFERENCES.

Not less noteworthy than the adverse decision of the Old South Church, Boston, with reference to individual communion cups is the manner in which that decision was reached. For some time the question has been under discussion, and several months ago a large and representative committee was appointed to canvass the subject. It in turn selected a specially competent sub-committee to investigate thoroughly all the phases involved. In due time a report was rendered advising the substitution of individual cups for the service now in use, and this report carried the assent of all except one of the members of the committee originally appointed. Meantime the agitation of the matter had not by any means been confined to the group of persons asked to formulate an opinion. Individuals were debating the question and ranging themselves on one side or the other. It was soon evident that the change would not come without opposition, and among those who were against the innovation were several of the oldest and most prominent members. Moreover it was whispered about that the pastor preferred the existing method.

Such was the state of affairs when a special meeting was held last Monday evening to decide the question. It was felt that there had been sufficient discussion, and that the time had come to reach a conclusion in the good old Congregational way. Not for many years has a business meeting of the Old South drawn so large an attendance. The forces on both sides were present in conspicuous numbers, but no one could forecast the result. The pastor, Dr. Gordon, was in the chair, and by his prayer and his reading of Paul's classic on love —the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians— lifted the thought of the assembly above the plane of dissension. It was then promptly moved that an informal ballot be at once taken. This did away with all discussion, but before balloting was proceeded with, at the suggestion of one of the deacons, two minutes were spent in silent prayer. Then the voting went on, and the result showed seventy five in favor of the substitution of individual cups and ninety-five opposed. As soon as the will of the majority was manifest a deacon of the church, himself a member of the minority, moved that the whole matter be indefinitely postponed. Another representative of the minority seconded the motion and it was unanimously carried. A vote of thanks was then passed in recognition of the graceful acquiescence of the minority. Then Blest Be the Tie was sung with unusual fervor, and the meeting adjourned, having been in session less than an hour. Many lingered, however, moved by the influence of the occasion which prompted the exchange of congratulations and the expression of Christian regard and esteem. The minority could not but recognize the leadings of Providence, and there was little place in their hearts for regrets and none for recriminations. The majority had no thought of triumph. Indeed one of their representatives said to one of the defeated party, half playfully, half seriously, "Well, we old fellows will be gone before long, and then the rest of you can have things just as you want them." And it was one of the senior deacons who voiced the conviction of every one present when he said, "Talk about God's leading the children of Israel and the early Christians, if ever he led his people it was tonight."

We have described this meeting in detail, not because the Old South is one of the strongest and most influential churches in the country, nor particularly because of the subject matter of discussion. Our readers know that we favor the use of individual cups, and we have little doubt that they will gradually come into more general favor with our churches. But the point to which we would call attention is this: Here was a church through which ran a sharp line of cleavage of opinion. The subject under discussion touched that which is vital and personal in Christian experience. From a worldly point of view it can be said that conditions were ripe for a first-class struggle. Many a church has been wrecked on a far less consequential issue. Call to mind the contests over the location of a horse shed or the kind of heating apparatus, or the renting of pews or the apparel of the choir. The reason why the Old South meeting last week was a love feast instead of a fight was that Christian men determined that it should be conducted in a Christian fashion. More than that, they sought the guidance of God's spirit and they had it. That is the way in which all our differences should be settled. The Old South has done much for its sister churches and for the world, but it has contributed nothing better to our common Christianity than this shining example of the way in which it has handled a delicate and what might have been a divisive question.

ANOTHER COLLEGE TO BE HELPED.

We trust the title of this editorial will not prove prejudicial to its being generally read. We consider it an important part of our service to the denomination to call attention from time to time to the educational institutions that may justly claim a share in the interests and affections of our entire body of churches. Moreover, any person possessed of the sense of Christian stewardship will not be ungrateful for suggestions from any source that may show him how his property can be put to the largest use.

Certainly the denomination has no reason to be ashamed of the Congregational colleges which have sprung up all over the West as the fruit of missionary activity and of educational ideals. We have repeatedly called attention to their work, and from time to time, as special circumstances warranted, we have singled out one and another for special notice. In our judgment it is now the turn of Pacific University at Forest Grove, Ore., to assume a larger place in the public eye. Until recently it has not appealed to the East for aid, and it puts forth its claim now because Dr. Pearsons has offered $50,000 towards its endowment provided an additional $100,000 is raised. The citizens of Forest Grove, which has a population of less than 1,500, have subscribed nearly $25,000. The alumni are responding generously.

The history and present status of the institution warrant this appeal for larger resources. Its strategic location in the beautiful Willamette Valley, twenty-five miles from Portland and 500 miles from Whitman, the nearest Congregational college, gives it a commanding position in the Pacific Northwest. With its present endowment of only $120,000, from which not a single dollar has ever been diverted even when sorely needed, the college has proved a power in Oregon. It is not too much to say that its influence was to a great extent responsible for the recent sound money victory in that State. The business management has been wise and conservative, and the names of Messrs. Ladd, Corbett and Failing, its successive treasurers, are ample guarantees, wherever known, that integrity and skill have marked the use of the means put at the disposal of the college. Besides giving their services, these three gentlemen have contributed to it liberally.

On another page Prof. George F. Wright of Oberlin expresses his own estimate of a sister institution. Among the many claims on our pocketbooks we trust that which President McClelland is advancing will not be unheeded. Himself a thorough scholar and a winsome gentleman, he is a fine type of the men who are devoting their lives to the cause of higher Christian education in the western sections of our country. His arms ought to be sustained, his courage reenforced and the treasury of the college filled.

SPIRITUALITY: WHAT IT IS AND HOW ATTAINED.

It is the state of mind and heart which results from the culture of the spiritual nature, as opposed to the fleshly, the material, or even the merely intellectual. He who dwells much in thought upon divine truth, and strives to order his life in accordance with his obligations to God, gradually becomes spiritually minded. Spiritual facts, which to others seem vague if not even unreal and therefore unimportant, become actual to him, and their influence upon his conduct lifts it to a higher level in respect to both motive and quality. This does not involve neglect of the duties or pleasures of life, but it infuses them with a nobler, holier temper. The nearer one can attain to a true and perfect spirituality, the closer he approaches to what undoubtedly is the state of mind and heart of the angels, the redeemed, and Jesus Christ himself.

This suggests how spirituality is to be attained. Its practicableness and practicalness must first be appreciated. It can be attained, to a considerable degree at any rate, even in spite of the materialistic temptations of our time. And it is more important to be gained than success in business or comfort or honor. The world to come, as we often call it, is as real as this present world, and fitness to enter it suitably is of more consequence than how we manage to pass through this way of approach to it. To make light of this world unduly is a mistake. But for all that the future life is of the chief importance to each of us. No other error is more deadly or more foolish than to regard spirituality as worth the attention of only religious enthusiasts. Shrewd common sense dictates its earnest culture.

The study of the lives of the most spiritually minded men and women known to us helps to attain it. The conditions of their lives resemble those of our own lives in many respects. But most profitable is the study of the character and career of Jesus himself. Nothing else reveals so fully and clearly both the nature of real spirituality and how it may penetrate, color and rule all departments of human thought and conduct without in the least robbing them of their vitality but rather increasing it a hundredfold. This rule is as sufficient as it is simple. Would you become spiritually-minded? Then study and imitate our Lord.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The President's Message.

It is not probable, though possible, that Mr. Cleveland will again speak to Congress and the people in a formal, elaborate message such as that sent in last Monday. His last words, as it were, therefore, are peculiarly worthy of study. Providence, voicing its decree through the sentiment of the peoples of Great Britain and the United States, has made it possible for the President to announce that the Venezuelan boundary question has ceased to be a matter of difference between Great Britain and the United States, and that they have agreed upon the substantial provisions of a treaty between Great Britain and Venezuela, submitting the whole controversy to arbitration. This beyond all question is the great fact in our foreign policy of the past year. Providence also has decreed that no sooner is this controversy amicably settled than we must again face an ancient European Power and speak honestly to it concerning its treatment of one of its American colonies. The President's words to Spain relative to Cuba are quite as unconventional and bold as he has ever uttered, but they are characteristic of the man, and they voice the judgment as well as feelings of our people. Past events and present conditions are stated in a judicial way. If Spain will devise adequate reforms, we will pledge to the Cubans that they will be wrought. Our friendly offices to end the war are put at the service of either party. But Spain is distinctly warned that there will be a limit to our patience, and while we will permit no other Power to interfere, we may be forced by the "higher obligations of humanity" to put an end to strife which, if longer permitted, would mean "utter destruction of the very subject matter of the conflict," namely, Cuba.

Space and opportunity fail here and now to discuss the impressive figures and facts concerning our national income and expenditure which are to be found in the message, or to more than call attention to the facts recorded concerning Civil Service reform, pension frauds and the persistency of the drain for pension payments, the apparent necessity for foreclosure on the Union Pacific Road, the defense of the present tariff law, the plea for the abolition of the greenbacks, and a currency system which has become outworn, and the government's retirement from the banking business. But too much emphasis can scarcely be laid on the President's indictment of trusts and his plea for rigid economy of expenditure by Congress. It is to be hoped that those to whom the message was specifically addressed, the legislators, will heed this portion of the message if they do nothing else. For if the few continue to receive legislation which fosters their interests, and the many receive legislation which increases their taxes, God save the republic!

The United States and Turkey.

The State Department has not put forth any later defense of its Turkish policy than the one we printed last week, but President Cleveland in his message shows that he realizes the vulnerability of his policy there, and a discussion of the situation has the leading place in his message. He claims that "the deep feeling and sympathy aroused among our people ought not so far to blind their reason and judgment as to lead them to demand impossible things," but he is compelled to admit that Turkey has not even conceded the validity of our claims for the pillage and destruction of mission property at Harpoot and Marash, much less begun to satisfy them, nor does he intimate, save in a negative way, that any unusual steps will be taken to induce her to. One comparatively unimportant concession by Turkey is reported, as also the stationing of a consul at Erzroom, who, nevertheless, is without an exequatur. That the safety of our citizens in Turkey in the future is by no means assured he frankly admits. Perhaps if this proves to be prophecy, posterity will not exempt Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Olney and Mr. Terrell from responsibility for whatever happens. Mr. Cleveland last December found a way to impress upon Great Britain that the United States could take resolute action, and in this message he speaks boldly to Spain. Apparently it is sympathy, not courage, which is lacking at Washington, as well as intelligent and adequate information from our representative in Constantinople.

The United States and Germany.

President Cleveland's proclamation of Dec. 3, revoking the proclamation of Jan. 26, 1888, in which German vessels entering our ports were exempted from a payment of tonnage dues so long as American vessels entering German ports were shown like courtesy or favor, is based upon an act of Congress of June 19, 1886, and will take effect Jan. 2, 1897. Our summary abolitio of reciprocal trade relations with Germany, so carefully built up by the Harrison administration, and especially the legislation against German beet sugar, dictated by the Sugar Trust and incorporated in the Wilson-Gorman Tariff Law, naturally led Germany to retaliate. Hence during the past two or three years one after the other of our great lines of business have felt the effects of hostile German legislation or executive discrimination. The Administration is satisfied that the imposition of tonnage dues on American vessels is part of the same policy, and has warranted our action in the premises. Germany has filed a protest, and asserts that the dues charged are local not federal, and as such are both legal and fair. As the German vessels entering our ports regularly or intermittently greatly outnumber our vessels entering German ports, the new policy will nominally add to our revenue. Whether it will prove to have been just or politic time will tell. We fear that the verdict will be against us.

Congress in Session.

The second and last session of the Fifty-fourth Congress opened Monday at noon. The public is more unanimous in its convictions respecting what its legislature would better not do than in its opinion regarding what it should or can do. Nor are the legislators themselves much nearer to agreement, judging them by their opinions as recorded in interviews and signed letters in newspapers. The calendar is crowded with legislation proposed at the last session. In the Senate Senator Lodge's Immigration Restriction Bill has the right of way.

The Duty of the Hour.

The expert accountant set at work on the books of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which a year ago passed into a receiver's hands, has just reported that the directors and officials juggled the figures in the most outrageous manner, and that out of $6,269,007 paid in dividends during seven years, 1888-1895, only $971,446 were earned. The Maryland law on this subject is as follows:

> Any officer or agent whatsoever of any corporation, who shall fraudulently sign, or in any manner assent to any statement or publication, either for the public or shareholders thereof, containing untruthful representations of its affairs, assets or liabilities, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, and be imprisoned in jail or penitentiary, or either fined or imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than three years.

It will be interesting to see whether any one suffers imprisonment or heavy fine because of complicity in this characteristic act of American railway management. It would not be difficult to name a dozen men in this country whose punishment would do more to clear the air of discontent and portentous mutterings than anything else that could happen. So long as they can continue with impunity to wreck railroads, bribe legislators, defy judges and juries and rob their fellowmen, so long will discontent prevail and agitators like Mr. Bryan get a hearing and have many followers. Elsewhere we call attention to Senator Hoar's timely words on this theme, and it would be easy to quote many utterances of like tenor since the election, made by clergymen, editors and political leaders, which indicate that some at least see which way the path of duty lies.

Government on Business Principles.

More and more the great questions of state are becoming questions of finance. Much of the paralysis of Europe face to face with Turkish atrocities is due to the influence of holders of Turkish bonds; and Russia has just shown great astuteness in declining to join with France and the other Powers in a concert of action whose basis of union, while perhaps none the less mercenary than her own, would be less political and exist solely to exact the pound of flesh in the form of interest. If Spain were to seek a conflict with us, and should find allies in Europe, it would be because they were prompted by Spain's indebtedness to their citizens and their dread of repudiation of her debt if she were to be defeated and humiliated. Egypt originally was made subject for a time to Great Britain's rule because British investors in Egyptian bonds desired it, and France today is less belligerent over British occupation of Egypt than she would have been had not British rule wrought such profit to French investors as well as to British. The Duke of Devonshire, in discussing the great problem of British imperial unity last week, as a last resort fell back upon the business men of the empire as the ones whose word would determine the success or failure of the plan which has for its purpose the binding together of Great Britain and her colonies.

Now, at first, it does not seem a happy omen that diplomacy and statecraft have come to the plane of business or commerce. It seems to remove much of their glamour, and make the life of the world one of crass bargaining. Much, however, depends upon what view of business or commerce one takes. Be that what it may, the fact is apparent that we in this country are not to escape the drift of the day. Mr. Bryan confessed in his speech at the remarkable reception given him in Denver, Col., last week that he failed because he had not won the votes of the business men of the country. Here is evidence of one sort, and valuable in its way. The gathering in Indianapolis last week of representatives of many commercial bodies, who planned for a still larger gathering to be held in January, in our opinion was even more remarkable than the Indianapolis convention of gold Democrats. For at last week's conference men from all sections and of many parties came together to perfect an organization which in due time, we believe, will bring our legislators at Washington to understand that the questions of monetary standards, banking administration, currency issuance, federal revenue and expenditure are to be decided by calling in experts, by basing action on knowledge and not on sectional prejudice or class greed and, in short, by acting as sensibly and thriftily in administering national affairs as our ablest and most honorable captains of industry and commerce act in administering their affairs. To do this is not to have "the common, loveless lust of territory," of which William Watson sings with scorn, nor does it imply "lips that only babble of their mart."

Protestant Unity in France.

France so sorely needs that which united and aggressive Protestantism could give her that it is very welcome news which comes now, telling of a conference between the Evangelicals and Liberals, who have been severed since the Synod of 1872, when the two wings found it impossible to agree on a Declaration of Faith. The olive branch was extended last year by the Liberals. The Evangelical Synod, meeting in Lyons last July, accepted the tender of comity, and with certain provisos made arrangements for a conference, which has just been held in Lyons. Two hundred delegates from many consistories were present. This much was agreed upon, that a council, "charged to defend the rights and interests of the Reformed family," should be created, to meet at stated intervals and have equal representatives from both wings. The general sentiment is that a decided step forward has been taken, for while no attempt to secure doctrinal unity has been suggested or would be tolerated, much has been done to preserve the rights and influence of a historic polity and a noble type of thought and character.

The Italy of Today.

A member of the royal family of Italy has recently visited several of our leading cities, and been the recipient of much deserved attention and courtesy. The governor of Massachusetts, the mayor of Boston and Prof. Charles Eliot Norton of Harvard said words to the royal guest that must have convinced him that there are some, at least, in the new republic who appreciate the debt which Christendom owes to the Italy of ancient and modern times. But when all this is said it remains to be said that the Italy of today is far from admirable, and those who saw in Garibaldi, Mazzini and Cavour the founders of an ideal state have been given much cause for disillusionment. It is not often we turn to a novel for light on economic conditions, and especially to the novels of F. Marion Crawford, but he has made modern Italy his own province, and what is his picture of its present condition, as set forth in his latest novel, Taquisara?

> That Italy has done what she has done in thirty years, to be a power among the nations, is a marvel, a wonder and almost a miracle. That she should have done it at all is the greatest mistake ever committed by a civilized nation, and it is irrevocable, as its results are to be fatal and lasting. But upon the good reality of unity, the deadly dream of military greatness descended as a killing blight, and the evil vision of political power has blasted the common sense of a whole people. It is one thing to be one, as a united family, each working for the good of each and all; it is another thing, and a worse thing, to be one as a vast and idle army, sitting down to besiege its own storehouses, each eating something of the whole and doing nothing to increase that whole till all is gone, and the vision fades in the awakening from the dream leaving the bare nakedness of desolation to tell the story of a huge mistake.

And it was for this that Italy tied herself to Germany and Austria, only to be betrayed by Germany if occasion demanded, as Bismarck's recent revelations have made clear.

NOTES.

The new commercial treaty between Japan and China gives proof of much breadth of vision by both. China shows more enterprise than had been expected, Japan less selfishness.

The Grand Jury of New York city has made a formal presentment arraigning the Raines liquor law as most defective in its construction and responsible for most of the abuses which men of all shades of opinion are testifying to in the investigation now under way in New York.

The London Daily Telegram meant well, doubtless, when it proposed to collect a popular fund to purchase a Christmas gift for our ambassador, Mr. Bayard, but it put him and us in a very embarrassing position. It seemed ungracious to decline it, but there was nothing else to do.

The Hamburg strike of dockmen is taking on important new aspects. Sympathetic contributions of money and counsel from without Germany give it an international scope; stimulus from socialists at home make it a deliberate fight against capital as such and established institutions.

Moses Thatcher, one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church, has just been declared "contumacious" and dropped from the rolls of the church, because he dared to take part in politics without counseling with the other Mormon leaders and securing their consent. This shows that the Mormon Church is still in politics.

Gen. Porfirio Diaz last week, for the fifth consecutive time, took the reins of government as president of Mexico. He unquestionably is one of the ablest statesmen of his time, and is a ruler who uses his position not for self-aggrandizement, but for the betterment of those who trust to him almost absolute authority.

The results of the local elections just held in Massachusetts and Connecticut indicate in many ways the increasing spirit of independence among the voters, and the process of readjustment which is going on. Yale will have more representation than hitherto in New Haven's affairs. Of the eleven Massachusetts cities voting on the license question, six voted for license, just as they did last year.

Mgr. Martinelli, apostolic delegate at Washington, is authorized by Cardinal Rampolla to deny all the current statements respecting the hostility of the pope to the liberal faction of the Roman Catholic Church in this country. Bishop Keane, who sailed for Europe last Saturday to take up his residence in Rome as a member of the Congregation of the Propaganda and the Congregation of Sacred Studies, will be elevated to the archbishopric soon after his arrival there. He will retain his place on the board of directors of the Catholic University at Washington and visit this country at least once a year.

IN BRIEF.

It looks as though the Bacchante statue might yet be relegated to the back ante room of the Public Library.

The article in this week's Progress of the Kingdom, reviewing the missionary operations of the year, is a comprehensive survey of the broad field of aggressive Christian work. Read it and take heart.

Principal Fairbairn, in lecturing recently on Religious Thought in this century, said of Frederick D. Maurice that he is the man whom men of later centuries will account the most ideal of all purely religious thinkers.

Our Forefathers' number next week will have special articles pertinent to the recurring anniversary from the pen of Dr. Griffis and Mr. Dawson, our London representative, besides several contributions on current phases of our denominational life and activity.

Amherst College trustees have acted commendably in adding to their number Prof. Williston Walker, D. D., of Hartford Seminary. He will take the place left vacant by the death of Dr. Alden, and will bring to his new position a breadth of view and a thorough understanding of modern educational drifts and problems that cannot fail to be of great service to the college.

Scores of home missionaries depend on the weekly visits of The Congregationalist for news and suggestions of vital importance to them in their work. These visits in turn depend on the shares which generous-minded individuals take in our Home Missionary Fund. Two dollars invested in this form means a great deal to frontier workers. Readers renewing their own subscriptions should not overlook this opportunity.

We would meekly suggest to producers of Christmas poems, sketches and stories that we have accepted all the matter of this character which we can use this year and have enough left over to last for the remainder of the century. When a contribution designed for a special occasion like Easter or Christmas does not reach an editor until ten days or a fortnight before his paper goes to press, the chances of its rejection are about sixteen million to one.

Miss Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset are to be congratulated on their success in providing homes for Armenian refugees. Of the 400 sent by them to this country, nearly every one, through the kindness of good people, have found comfortable quarters. Miss Willard's ancestors came from Kent, Eng., to Massachusetts in 1634, and she has recently placed a memorial tablet to Major Simon Willard in the Horsmonden Church, near Maidstone, Kent.

Rev. A. R. Thain, D. D., is to become the editor of The Advance. He is a Scotchman by birth, but has spent nearly all his life in this country. He is about fifty-five years of age and has been twenty-six years in the Congregational ministry in the West. He is at present pastor of the church in Tabor, Io. He will enter on his new duties next February. We know his deep interest in our institutions, his love for our churches and his appreciation of all that is best in our Christian civilization. That he may realize the ideals with which he enters on his new work is our sincere desire.

An editor of the Presbyterian has heard nearly 100 leading ministers within the past eighteen months, chiefly from Presbyterian pulpits. "No tinge of higher criticism was visible in any of them." He has not heard a suggestion that there was political strife in the land. "Only one of these uttered any suspicious words, and he was a Congregationalist." Fed on such immaculate spiritual food, it is no wonder that the Presbyterian is soundly orthodox. But why does it not mention the name of that Congregationalist, that other Presbyterians may avoid him? Was he a graduate of Union Theological Seminary?

To the other strong reasons for voting no license in Boston next week is to be added this year the peril to suburban residents of having liquor saloons placed in their midst. There were many no-license rallies in the city and in surrounding towns and cities last Sunday. The action of the Police Commissioners in transferring saloons in Dorchester, Brighton and other suburbs has thoroughly aroused many citizens of those districts, and if they do not speak their minds on this subject through their votes we shall be much surprised. If they do not, they cannot complain if some cases hung up by the commissioners till after election are decided in favor of the liquor dealers.

The pastor of the Congregational church at Palmer, Mass., Rev. F. E. Jenkins, and his Sunday school superintendent, together with the pastor of the Union Evangelical Church in that town, have, as a committee to ferret out violations of the liquor law, during the past year secured sixty-four convictions and brought $3,050 in fines in to the town treasurer. These men collected and marshaled the evidence which satisfied the court, and did it in such a fair and thorough way that the judge, and the liquor dealers as well, compliment them on their success. Here is a case where Christian men of high position in a given community have preferred to do what is vulgarly called "dirty work" rather than have it done by those whose motives were purely mercenary.

Rev. Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren), who preached to a thousand and more college men of New York at a special service held in Dr. John Hall's church last Sunday evening, is said to have remarked to those who requested that he preach twice on that day that he could not do it because of the strain which it would put upon him. He could lecture twice a day without experiencing unusual fatigue, but one sermon absolutely exhausted him. He explained this by saying that while the truth must be told in a lecture just as it is in a sermon, yet the sense of responsibility is not so great in the former as in the latter. He always felt while preaching that some man who was listening to him might never again hear the gospel, and that the eternal destiny of such a man might depend upon the fidelity with which the truth was then presented. The editor of the Epworth Herald has heard Dr. Watson "under the most favorable circumstances" and was "thoroughly disappointed." He says, "We do not believe that had Dr. Watson preached 100 sermons they would have done a particle of good." Commenting on the great interest shown in Ian Maclaren, he takes his readers into his confidence, and naïvely says, "We wonder at it." Many of his readers, perhaps, will wonder at him.

MEMORIAL SERVICES TO DR. QUINT.

Many people who were unable to attend services held in various places in memory of Dr. Quint desired that a meeting for that purpose should be held in Boston. A committee appointed by the Boston Ministers' Meeting arranged for such a service in Park Street Church last Monday at 2 30 P. M. The attendance was large, including many clergymen, representatives of the Loyal Legion, Grand Army, the police department of the city and other organizations. Appropriate music was rendered by the choir of the Allston Church. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. A. McColl of New Bedford. Rev. Dr. J. H. Wellman, a college classmate and lifelong friend of Dr. Quint, spoke of his boyhood, his college life, his decision to enter the ministry and his unswerving devotion to the Word of God and to Christ. Hon. W. H. Hodgkins represented laymen and spoke of Dr. Quint as his former pastor, of his organization of churches, his labor of thirty-five years as a member of the Congregational Association, and of his public services in other lines. Rev. Dr. Arthur Little gave to Dr. Quint an eloquent tribute for his service as an army chaplain, citing incidents of his bravery and tenderness on battlefields.

Rev. Dr. E. A. Horton of the Unitarian denomination described Dr. Quint as a sparkling, scintillating speaker at Masonic meetings. He said that Dr. Quint, for thirty-eight years a Knight Templar and for eleven years grand chaplain, never regarded masonry as a substitute for the church or for religion. His tolerant spirit joined with firm convictions was discriminatingly and brilliantly set forth.

Rev. Dr. William H. Ward of the Independent characterized Dr. Quint as a leader of the most important movements in Congregationalism. He represented him as a tolerant conservative, contending always generously for the positions he held, and yielding, when wise to yield, in such a way as to leave no bitterness. This combination of affectionate frankness with far-seeing shrewdness is very rare.

Pres. W. J. Tucker of Dartmouth spoke of Dr. Quint's superb insight, which determined the direction and course of his life. His insight was directed to principles, affairs, men. His insight drew out his sympathies. He was a veritable Greatheart to many a one in trouble. His relations with students in college, with fifty years between them, were close and inspiring. It was not necessary for him to be eloquent or even impassioned, he was always so human. He had natural courage to the point of audacity, but he was a leader of men because he had the courage of reason and conviction and the prophetic instinct. He was patient, politic, progressive, a splendid optimist. He had the distinctive Christian qualities, faith, hope, love, which were the basis of his optimism. He was never of so great value to so many men, to so many interests, as the day he died. Better than all, he was ready to die. Happy the man who leaves to his friends his last service as his best.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. I. J. Lansing. The addresses were exceedingly interesting, and most of the audience remained to the end.

LOWELL'S LATEST PASTOR SETTLED.

Seldom does a pastorate begin under pleasanter auspices than that of Rev. W. A. Bartlett at Kirk Street Church, Lowell, Mass. The call was extended May 1 and was unanimous by both church and society. The size and financial resources of the church made the filling of the pulpit, left vacant by Rev. Dr. M. McG. Dana in the spring of 1894, a responsible care. But the wisdom of experience and the enthusiasm of youth have been secured with the new pastor. He has already served the church since June 14 and as the result of the fall work and of the present harmonious condition of the church he was permitted to welcome fifty new members to the church at the recent communion, thirty-five on confession.

The installing council met Nov. 30. None of its members felt it necessary to question the candidate although Mr. Bartlett presented merely the creed of the church as his "paper," expecting a fuller opportunity to declare himself by answers than by a formal document. Two former members of the Ministers' Club of which Mr. Bartlett was a member in Chicago were in the council, both of whom are now settled in eastern Massachusetts. Two seminary classmates were also present as members, one of whom, Secretary J. L. Barton of the A. B. C. F. M., gave the charge to the pastor. The sermon was appropriately preached by the candidate's father and was a judicious presentation of a pastor's high calling. The address to the people was given by Rev. Dr. C. A. Dickinson of Berkeley Temple, Boston, whose former pastorate at Kirk Street Church gave him a hold upon this loyal people.

Rev. W. A. Bartlett is the son of ex-President Bartlett of Dartmouth. He was born in Chicago in 1858, was educated in the public schools of the city, in Lake Forest Academy and in Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1882 and from Hartford Seminary in 1885. In Dartmouth he was college organist and leader of the choir. He began his ministerial work in the summer of 1884, preaching and conducting Sunday schools in four Minnesota towns, obtaining more than his support from these fields. Declining offers from churches in the East, he accepted a call from the Church of the Redeemer, Chicago, then little more than a flourishing Sunday school. For several years his labors there were blessed. He was married in 1888, but the failing health of his wife after a little while led to his withdrawal from this church in the hope that she might be restored in California. After a few months, however, she entered into her rest and Mr. Bartlett returning to Chicago soon received a call from the recently organized church at Ridgeland, a suburb of the city, where for eight years he has done excellent work. In 1892 he was married again. Outside of his parish work he has written a good deal for publication, has composed more or less music, and has lectured on music. Previous to his call to Lowell he received a number of offers to other pulpits, which were declined.

Charity Problems.

At this season of the year attention is directed to the needs of the poor. From appeals already made one infers that fewer families will require assistance this year than last, although the number asking for aid is still appallingly large. More people stop one on the street and beg after the manner of professionals in European cities than formerly. The question is, What shall be done with this problem of poverty?

Saturday evening the Commercial Club invited experts to address its members on the problems connected with charity with special reference to the movement known as charity organization, a movement which for various reasons has never been popular in Chicago. Prof. A. W. Small of the University of Chicago thought it unfortunate that existing charities in the city should look upon charity organization with anything like jealousy or suspicion, inasmuch as its friends do not for a moment think of calling in question the managers of the great charities which have existed so long and accomplished so much. Yet he asserted that not only is there indifference to charity organization in Chicago, but an opposition which owes its existence to false local pride. This organization of charities faces problems growing out of the labor question, the crime question and the poverty question. It seeks to give such instruction to benevolent people as will enable them to help unfortunates to keep or recover their independent spirit. The principle on which the work is carried on is that it is cheaper in the long run to uproot the pauper spirit than it is to relieve paupers.

Professor Henderson said that he would avail himself of all the knowledge gained by the charitable bodies already at work, and would train a body of voluntary visitors, through whom all gifts should be dispensed. Rev. Dr. C. G. Truesdale of the Aid and Relief Society, whose twenty-five years' service renders his testimony of exceptional value, pointed to the fact that since its formation in 1857 the Aid and Relief Society had been doing charity organization work, and that having tried many of the plans now proposed for the relief of the poor had discarded them as ineffectual. He called attention to the further fact that efforts have always been made to encourage self-respect in the recipient of aid, to learn all that can be learned in reference to the person or family asking for aid, and through the various charities already in operation to see that pressing needs are removed. Dr. Truesdale said that the city has ample means at its disposal to relieve all the poverty that can properly appeal to the public for assistance. We have eighteen hospitals, thirteen homes for special classes of sufferers and eight orphan and half-orphan asylums. In addition to these more public institutions of benevolence there are many organizations of a semi-public nature, in which philanthropic, educational and religious work is carried on. Dr. Truesdale thinks that Chicago has fewer slums than any large city in the world, and that the number of the poor among us, and their condition, have been exaggerated. He believes in dispensing charity in such a way as to enable those assisted to help themselves. He would also guard against the danger of creating a pauper class which will prey on the industrious and frugal.

It may be added that the churches through their special visitors and the voluntary visits of many of their members relieve a vast amount of distress which is temporary, and which is never brought to the knowledge of any charitable organization and never will be. There seems to be a good deal of reluctance on the part of those engaged in charitable work of any kind to make any report of it to any charity organization society whatever. It is doubtful if this clearing house method of administering our charities take immediate root among us—partly from prejudice against its methods and partly from lack of money with which to demonstrate its usefulness.

Lectures on Missions.

The students in our seminary and their friends have had the privilege this week of listening to a course of four lectures by Secretary Judson Smith on the organization of the American Board, the development of its work, its present condition and its prospects. The lectures have awakened a new interest in missions, and it is to be hoped will direct the attention of not a few of the students to the demands of the foreign field. They have been prepared with great care and furnish an amount and a kind of information not easily obtainable elsewhere.

The Bradley Polytechnic Institute of Peoria.

This institute has chosen Dr. W. R. Harper its president in order that he may aid in securing its faculty, determining its courses of study and supervising the proposed work of the institute, at least till it is thoroughly organized and established. Mrs. Bradley, who has founded it, endows it with the largest sum ever given by any single individual to any institution of learning within the State at any one time. With the exception of the University of Chicago, it will have a larger endowment than any institution in the State. Mrs. Bradley desires it to be, first of all, a manual training institute, and that no person shall be refused as a pupil because unable to pay tuition. While the chief emphasis in this school will be upon subjects usually taught in technical schools, the "humanities" will not be neglected. Mrs. Bradley, having decided to begin the work to which she has devoted her fortune in her own lifetime, is consulting with eminent educators as to the carrying out of her wishes, and is making arrangements to have the institute opened as soon as possible for students. Its establishment cannot fail to exercise an uplifting and stimulating influence not only in Peoria but throughout Illinois.

Chicago, Dec. 6. FRANKLIN.

Pacific University—Its Noble History and Its Claim to Support.

By Prof. George F. Wright, D. D., Oberlin.

At the beginning of my ministry, more than thirty years ago in northern Vermont, I chanced to be where I heard much about the educational interests of Oregon, then and for a long time afterwards without railroad connections with the East. In fact, the pioneer work of education in that Pacific State was largely done by Vermont men whose names have long been household words. Marsh was a name peculiarly dear to all the interests of higher education in the East.

FIRST COLLEGE BUILDING, 1850.

It was a great event when Sydney H. Marsh, the son of the president of the University of Vermont, transferred all his high learning and devoted enthusiasm to the wilds of Oregon, there to plant an educational tree whose roots should draw nutriment from that Western soil, and whose branches should in spreading keep pace with the growing material development of the region.

But he did not go alone, nor was he the first upon the ground. Rev. Harvey Clark of Chester, Vt., who had gone to Oregon in 1840 as a missionary to the Indians, as early as 1845 laid the foundations of the future college in a small school in a log cabin on the present college campus.

The coming of Rev. George H. Atkinson in 1848, the first missionary of the American Home Missionary Society to the Pacific coast, was timely for the promotion of the new enterprise. When he was leaving New York Dr. Theron Baldwin of the American College and Education Society said to him: "You are going to Oregon. Let one of your first works be the establishment of an academy, which shall grow into a Christian college, as we founded Illinois College."

Accordingly, almost immediately on his arrival at Oregon City, after an eight months' journey by way of Cape Horn and the Sandwich Islands, Mr. Atkinson visited Mr. Clark and, consulting together, they made the plans which resulted in the organization of Tualatin Academy. The following winter the territorial legislature granted it the first charter with full collegiate powers ever given on the Pacific coast, or, for that matter, west of the Missouri River. The log cabin school was merged in the new academy, and this in turn became by charter in 1854 Tualatin Academy and Pacific University, the name by which the institution is still known.

It was in 1853 that President Marsh completed this memorable trio of men. With slenderest equipment and an isolation which to a sensitive soul like his must have been terrible, he began his work, and for twenty-five years gave himself unsparingly to carrying it forward.

The deprivations and discouragements of the first years were great. "Many were the times," President Marsh confessed to an associate of later years, "that I climbed to the unfinished room in the loft of the college building, which for two years served as my bedroom, and fairly cried myself to sleep."

But neither President Marsh nor his missionary associates and supporters—Harvey Clark, George H. Atkinson, Cushing Eells, who afterwards founded Whitman College, Elkanah Walker, Horace Lyman, Alanson Hinman, the venerable president of the board of trustees today—were the men to falter in the face of difficulties when they had put their hands to a good work. To the superficial observer the life of the college at that day was little more than a struggle for existence, but with the energy, the sacrifices and prayers of such men underneath it, it possessed a vitality which was destined to exert a powerful influence on the civilization of the growing State.

Like all new countries, Oregon was rich in young men who were growing up to control the destinies of the Territory. With the collecting together of a few of the most susceptible of these about the president and one or two other teachers, the college came into full existence even in advance of any buildings. Proudly may Pacific University point to her graduates of that early period as living epistles known and read of all men. Their influence in determining, not only the moral and intellectual standards of the State, but its political history as well, has been marked.

MARSH MEMORIAL HALL.

A striking exemplification of this was seen in the recent political crisis. Pacific University, with her earlier and later graduates, ranged herself squarely on the side of righteous principles.

Fortunately some of her ablest men were in position to wield a controlling power in this time of crucial test. Mr. H. W. Scott, a graduate of 1863, has for a long time been editor of the Oregonian, the great daily of the Pacific Northwest, which has stood like a rock in the sea amid the political unrest of these later days. It may be truly said that he and Hon. Thomas H. Tongue, just elected to Congress, with other graduates of the school were among the chief factors in carrying the State for sound money. The triumph of correct principles in that State is a triumph of Pacific University.

My interest in the university culminated in a visit to Forest Grove a few years ago.

PRESIDENT MCCLELLAND.

Nothing can surpass the beauty of the situation, with snow capped Mt. Hood calmly looking down upon the valleys and hills and smaller mountains like a sentinel. The noble campus with its stately trees, the gift of Rev. Mr. Clark, had then only the original buildings erected in the early days of President Marsh. Since then the Ladies' Hall and Marsh Memorial Hall have been added.

Since the accession of President McClelland, five years ago, the institution has made rapid advancement. Its equipment has been improved and its curriculum advanced so that students coming from the institution to the East are readily admitted to the corresponding classes in our best New England colleges. During this time the attendance has greatly increased and it may be said the college has entered on a new era.

A greatly needed endowment is now the chief requisite to enable the institution to meet the increasing demands of the next half-century. And in this, too, there are signs of hope. Dr. Pearsons's long arm has been stretched out even to the Pacific. A promise of $50,000 for endowment, upon the raising of another $100 000, is spurring the friends to put forth Herculean efforts. The village itself has subscribed almost $25,000, and with what has been gathered from other sources through the efforts of President McClelland only $25,000 remains to meet the conditions of Dr. Pearsons. In behalf not only of the growing States on the Pacific coast, but of their reacting influence upon the nation, I urge the speedy completion of this noble work. Pacific University is safe in its history. A still more fruitful future can be secured by completing this endowment.

Generous Help for the Armenian Orphans.

The Last Week's Receipts Swell the Total to $8,570.26. Much More Money Imperatively Needed.

It is already evident that the movement inaugurated through our columns Nov. 12 appeals powerfully to the popular heart. Though less than a month has elapsed, the response exceeds our most sanguine expectations. The acknowledgments printed below bring the total receipts up to Tuesday morning of this week to $8,570.26, and we feel confident that the generosity of the public has not begun to be exhausted. The swiftness and effectiveness of this method of relief commends it to all who would do something to lessen the ills under which Armenia for months has been groaning. The relief begins to be operative almost as soon as it reaches this office. Four installments of gifts have already been cabled to the front and are now in the hands of our missionaries. Their wise handling of the funds has doubtless by this time provided homes, clothing, food and Christian influences for thousands of orphans. Relief measures are already on foot at Harpoot and Bitlis and at other needy centers there will soon be equal cause for rejoicing.

It has been a pleasure to note the free-will character of the offerings received, as indicated in many of the letters accompanying the checks. They show in almost every case a desire to do more. Here are a few extracts: "I am not rich or even well to do, but I shall not be the poorer for this practical act in return for a fruitful season." A woman pencils these lines: "My father and mother went away to God's 'beautiful somewhere' in 1895 and left me an orphan. I sympathize with these orphans. All gone—father, mother, sisters and brothers. For fifteen years I have been bedridden, not turning myself over in all these years." A gentleman and his wife say: "We wish we could multiply it many times, but we shall enjoy our good home better this winter to know that even one of these little ones is being taken care of by the little we are able to contribute." Another says: "In these homeless and destitute orphans I recognize my little brothers and sisters." A check coming from the Pilgrim Church at the Santee Agency, Neb., is accompanied by these words: "The cause of the orphan appeals strongly to the Indian's heart." It is interesting, too, in this connection to note that the children in an orphan asylum in New Haven saved their pennies and gave them to the fund.

The various ways in which the contributions for this fund are being gathered are worth noting. A Cleveland pastor says his cheque represents his whole family: "My little children each taking a share gladly and giving the money from their savings. We are very sure that we shall enjoy our Christmas more in thinking of our little share in this great work." Another Ohio friend says that his contribution is a "breakfast table offering prompted by a sermon on the previous day." A Michigan woman calls her gift Christmas money "sent in response to Mrs. Goodell's suggestion made through your columns several weeks ago." Another gift represents a collection taken at the dinner table on Thanksgiving Day.

A Vermont pastor tells how he secured his offering of over thirty dollars: "About $50 was raised among us for the Armenians last winter. During the year collections have been taken for 'our six benevolent societies.' Our C. E. Society and our ladies' missionary society have each been preparing a Christmas box. And as some have complained that the calls for giving had come rather too frequently for these 'hard times,' I hesitated to appeal again for the Armenians. But I ventured to call for 'a free will Thanksgiving offering' for suffering Armenian children the Sunday before Thanksgiving, and stated that I would be ready to receive contributions from individuals during the week. The inclosed is the result." It is noticeable, too, how many organizations as well as individuals are sharing in the movement. Gifts have come from churches, Endeavor Societies, Junior Endeavor Societies, a Band of Faith society, a Ladies' Birthday Club, a "Refuge," several circles of King's Daughters, and from Sunday schools, individual Sunday school classes and primary departments, the latter showing the interest of little children in the undertaking.

Encouraging as it is to see many sections of the country represented in this offering, it was a pleasant surprise to receive last Friday a check for £100 from England. The transmitter of it was the well-known Congregational leader, Dr. A. Mackennal of Bowdon, who it will be remembered was chairman of the English committee having in charge the reception of The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage of last summer, and who contributed so largely to its success, and his letter, dated Nov. 25, shows how it came about. "On Sunday evening I read to a meeting of my people a brief statement from your editorial of the 12th, and the head of a firm who was present sent me, next morning, a check for £100. It was because I mentioned at my meeting that the Protestant missionaries, who were so trusted in Armenia, were missionaries of the A. B. C. F. M. that this sum was promptly sent. My people are giving, and have given, through other channels, and I have informed them that they have a winter's work before them. But I am very glad to send a contribution directly to our own missionaries."

The need on the field continues urgent. The missionaries of the American Board, through letters to its officials and to their own friends in this country, draw appalling pictures of the destitution, and entreat that every possible means be employed to secure relief funds. The National Armenian Relief Committee, whose headquarters are in New York, and whose secretary is Rev. F. D. Greene, formerly a missionary of the Board, are issuing circulars that present the testimony of eyewitnesses to present needs, having gathered from a number of places in the interior accounts of the heart-rending situation. This committee estimates the number of survivors of the massacres at 300,000. Most are women and children. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin says, "If 75,000 men have been massacred, there must be at least 100,000 orphans. Here is a call for Christian benevolence to achieve one of its noblest works." Sir Philip Currie, the British ambassador in Constantinople, presiding at a public meeting held there last week in the interests of relief, stated that there were at least 40,000 orphans in Armenia.

We have felt that it would be desirable to secure before Christmas as large an amount for relief as possible and have therefore suggested that friends desiring to give should send their contributions, if possible, to reach us before Dec. 22. This would enable us to cable a generous Christmas gift to the front. Of course we shall be glad to acknowledge all moneys received after Dec. 22 and to forward them by mail through the American Board. No doubt there are some who will find it more convenient to give after the first of the year, and it goes without saying that there will be ample reason for giving all through the winter months.

In order that it may be kept plainly in mind just what may be accomplished by individual offerings, we repeat the suggestions with which this fund was started.

Ten dollars will provide home, clothing and food for one orphan for five months or until the trying winter is over.

Five dollars will house and clothe one orphan for a year.

Three dollars will house one orphan for a year.

One dollar will house, clothe and feed one orphan for two weeks.

A Providence Sunday school is increasing its gifts for this fund by circulating reprints of the article which, with pictures of Armenian children, appeared in our issue of Nov. 26. These four-page leaflets can be had of Mr. Thomas Todd, 1 Somerset Street, Boston, at the nominal cost of thirty cents a hundred, postpaid.

The geometrical increase of our fund is one of its most pleasing features. Every week since the start has witnessed a doubling of gifts. This rate of increase will enable us to cable on Christmas week a SPECIAL CHRISTMAS GIFT of $10,000 in addition to sums previously cabled. Is not our constituency equal to this special Christmas message to His little ones?

THE CONGREGATIONALIST'S ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND.

We cannot undertake to send personal acknowledgments of receipts, except where stamped and addressed envelopes accompany the gifts.

TIDINGS FROM THE FRONT.

Rev. G. C. Raynolds, M. D., writing recently from Van, Eastern Turkey, says:

It is these Armenian orphans that appeal most strongly to one's sympathies. Some time ago I sent out a letter appealing for help. It was no small gratification then to receive £250 sterling from Germany to support fifty of this class for one year. How eagerly did I begin arrangements for receiving and caring for them. The disturbed state of the city and the necessity of securing the approval of the authorities caused a little delay, but it is now nearly a month since we were able to begin calling in some of this needy class, and it took but a short time to bring up the number of fifty allowed, and then began the sad duty of refusing those equally needy and deserving. These poor, half-naked children now are neatly, though plainly and economically, clad, and it was a real pleasure yesterday to see them file into chapel in their clean and comfortable clothes, as it is a satisfaction to watch them at their studies, or at their meals, or on the playground. They have all been received as boarding pupils in our schools, that their mental and spiritual natures may not be neglected while their physical wants are being supplied. Of course tuition is free, and all the money given goes to supply food, clothing and bedding. Nearly half of those received have neither father nor mother. The large majority lost either father, or one who took the place of father, during the June massacre, and the remainder, already orphans, were rendered helpless by the events of these recent months.

Here is a bright, attractive boy from Haigavank, a quarter near the walled city which suffered most severely during the time of the carnage. The large house of the mayor of the city was in this quarter and after the first wave of destruction had passed most of the Armenian population fled to him for protection and were received within his premises and kept there till Friday night when they were turned out, and on Sabbath morning fiends in human shape were let loose upon them and murdered in cold blood more than 100 unresisting, unoffending victims, nearly all young men, the bread winners of their respective families. The boy in question was one of our pupils and had come to school as usual that Monday morning and remained here during all that dreadful week, with no news of what was going on among his friends, as all communication was cut off. After the massacre had ceased and some measure of quiet was restored, we sent the boy home with a few others of that neighborhood under safe escort. After ten days of such anxious separation one can imagine how eagerly he looked forward to seeing parents and friends again, but when he reached his home he found it burned and deserted, as was the whole neighborhood, church and school included. With a sinking heart he went on to the walled city and succeeded in finding his mother, but only to find that father, two uncles and two brothers had fallen victims to the dreadful slaughter, and from being a member of a large and prosperous family he was a penniless orphan—home, friends, property all swept away at one fell swoop. It was hard for the poor boy to bring himself to consent to come and subsist on charity, but he came and brought with him a touching letter of thanks, which at the same time affectingly described the trials of his sadly changed condition. Here is another boy whose father, a priest of that church, was killed in that same Sabbath holocaust, while the boy himself escaped disguised as a girl. A girl from the same quarter weeps as she tells how her father was wounded on Monday and after three days of suffering the fiends came back and finished their work. Here is a priest's son from a different parish, who saw his father fall at his side by a bullet, while his brother of eighteen had his head entirely severed from his body.

TEA PARTY DAY.

BY ANNIE SAWYER DOWNS.

What cry is this in Boston streets?
Why ring the bells so loud?
Why flock the women to their door?
What would this eager crowd?
It is no day for fair nor fête,
For idle song nor play,
For smile of love nor laugh of joy,
This cold, dark winter day.

Nor birthday this of prince or king,
Or man of high estate,
Nor yet a day whose fortune high
Was won by stroke of fate.
But such a day as dawns for men,
Who clearly see their way,
Who count the cost, yet right the wrong,
It is Tea Party Day!

Tea Party Day, in Boston town,
A century more ago,
With Adams, Hancock and Revere
All sitting in a row,
Or standing in the crowded aisle
Of the South Meeting House,
Where had not been since stroke of noon

And where from out the windows high
The stately ships they see,
Which brought across the ocean wide
Their plague, the hated tea.
The hated tea, whose very name
Fired Warren's cheek and eye,
As from the mighty multitude
Rose the resounding cry,

"It shall not land, but overboard
Shall go this hated tea,
For wharves, storehouses, ships are ours,
And Boston town is free!"
"But count the cost and wait a while,"
Quincy the younger prayed,
"At least stir not till Rotch returns
And his report has made."

A few small candles dimly burned
Before the pulpit door,
And five had struck ere breathless Rotch
Stood out upon the floor.
"No pass," he cried, "the Governor gives,
The tea must stay in town."
His voice was lost in hisses wild
And yells of "Man, sit down!"

Then grave Sam Adams gave the word,
"Friends, we can do no more
To save our land," and fifty men
Sprang by the open door
With Indian ax and Indian whoop
And Indian's painted face,
But, strange to tell, 'twas velvet coat
And ruffles of rich lace,

Which struck the blows at Griffin's wharf,
And smashed in fragments small
The chests and boxes quaint and queer,
Then at their leader's call
Together cast the hated tea
Upon the swelling wave;
And famous was the treat that night
Which town to harbor gave.

The deed well done they marched away,
No king's man lifting hand
To seize, or hold, or turn, or stay
That painted Mohawk band.
But filing up the narrow street
The Admiral heard their tread,
And flinging wide his window sash
Thrust out his powdered head:

"A fine, clear evening for your play,
O reckless Indian boys,
But don't forget that children must Pay for their costly toys!"
"O, we don't mind, Squire, come down now,
Tonight we'll pay the bill,
An easy thing for men like us,
Before the blood gets chill!"

But Montague, "the Admiral Mad,"
They called him in those days,
Slammed loud his sash and only swore
At upstart Yankee ways.

Next morning, ere the sun was high,
Sam Adams sat him down,
Wrote out the story plain and bold
And sent from town to town
By Paul Revere, who, riding wild,
Went shouting all the way,
"Beat your old drum and ring the bell,
The tea is in the bay."

The hated tea, the tyrant tax,
Our fathers would not pay,
Lost the last chance for George, the king,
That glorious winter day.
So lift the glass and raise the song,
And call December gay,
For whensoe'er the time comes round
We keep Tea Party Day!

A certain lady who suffers much from invalidism will never allow herself, when able to sit up at all, to appear before her family in a wrapper or any other garb suggestive of illness. She maintains that merely an outward appearance of health has a wholesome moral effect upon husband and children that should not be ignored. Herein is illustrated a sound principle of all life. In the realm of both our physical and spiritual being it is well to keep before our vision the ideals of strength, of soundness, of hope and courage rather than their opposites. Thus do we array ourselves on the side of the strongest battalions whether fighting foes of the body or the soul. Let the home in all its appointments, even one so trifling as the mother's dress, be silent witnesses to this great truth.

What feature of the daily paper is most interesting to women? This question was propounded recently to its feminine readers by a London journal and an analysis of the replies shows that not a single vote was recorded in favor of the "woman's column," of which many dailies now make a specialty. If an honest expression of opinion was given the verdict is most significant. The first half-dozen topics which led the list were these:

Politics,
Literature,
Art and Science,
Leading Articles,
Births, Deaths and Marriages,
London Correspondence.

Missions, philanthropy, education and domestic science are not mentioned, for the simple reason that they do not constitute a "feature" of the average daily newspaper. It would be unfair, however, to argue that women are not interested in these subjects. The surprising thing about the vote is the indifference displayed toward the department which is supposed to cater directly to women's tastes. How would the replies of Americans to this question compare with their English sisters?

If one may judge from the topics presented at the National Council of Women held in Boston last week, the interest of intelligent American women centers around that which is serious and of permanent value, rather than around that which is frivolous and ephemeral. Moral reform, social economics and patriotism occupied a large share of attention, and even dress was discussed from the standpoint of health and ethics by women of world-wide reputation, like Frances E. Willard. These meetings are held triennially, and national councils exist in Germany, England, France, Switzerland, Italy, Belgium, Canada and New Zealand. The underlying idea is that such an organized movement among women will conserve the highest good of the family and State by bringing together the best thought on methods of educational, industrial and political reform. Too little emphasis is laid upon distinctively religious effort, but otherwise the council is a helpful ally to the forces of good morals and a higher type of citizenship.

A LADY OF CLAY.

BY LETITIA JEAN SMYTH.

IN THREE PARTS. PART II.

In a luxurious room of a princely house a young girl, in full evening dress, was standing before a long mirror earnestly regarding herself in its polished surface. The rare loveliness of her own image might well have caused an exclamation of maidenly pleasure, but the expression of sadness that clouded the fair face showed that her thoughts were dwelling on a subject far less pleasing.

"False, utterly false!" she murmured bitterly, "O! why can I not break away from the things that I despise? Why curb and stifle the best that is in me and hide my true self under this false apathy? Why not let the world know that the only satisfying happiness in my whole life is the hour, once in the long tiresome week, with my poor mission boys? Why?—because I am a coward and shrink from its cold curiosity. Because, having once allowed Huntingdon Delafield to believe that I am as indifferent and selfish as he, I dread to let him know the truth. O! how could I be so weak and contemptible! Ah! Roger Cameron, noble and brave yourself, you can consistently reproach me with your fair flowers. I read your meaning in their cold whiteness and take it in grateful humility. You are my one loyal friend, Roger Cameron, for you only dare tell me that I am wasting my life, and I honor you with my whole soul and put you on a pinnacle as far removed from these petty worldlings as the mountain top is from the plain. Tonight I will thank you for being true to one who is so untrue, and then you shall listen while I tell you what in my heart of hearts I am."

Just then the heavy portières were pushed hastily aside and a tall, aristocratic looking woman entered the room.

"Elinor!" she exclaimed, "you are superb tonight! Huntingdon Delafield may be justly proud of his magnificent fiancée, for, Elinor, I prophesy the Delafield name will be laid at your feet before the cotillion opens."

A look of pain crossed the beautiful face, then it passed and the girl turned from the mirror with an inaudible sigh.

"I am glad if I please you, mamma," she said quietly. The entrance of a maid with a note for Miss Morton prevented further conversation.

"It's from one of the mission boys," she said, glancing at the signature.

"Always those dirty, troublesome children! Why can't they let you alone through the week at least?" And Mrs. Morton turned impatiently to the dressing table and began to play with the elegant toilet trifles. It was so annoying that Elinor persisted in this plebeian mission work! What would Huntingdon think if he should ever find it out? If Elinor would be content with a class in the St. Jerome Sunday school, or even a sewing circle at the industrial chapel belonging to that aristocratic body, it would not be questioned. Several girls of Elinor's set did that and it was really quite the thing. But to go among these vulgar ragamuffins in their miserable East Side mission! It was the most trying of Elinor's whims, especially so just now, when the fastidious Mr. Delafield was about to make her a splendid offer. The girl had such peculiar notions, and lately she had been almost unmanageable. She seemed to be utterly indifferent to her own interests.

Meanwhile Elinor was trying to read the poor little scrawl, carefully traced by a child's trembling hand:

Deer Mis Ellie I wuz runned over to nite bi a wagin I thing Im diein I wants ter see yer befor I dies an ef it aint to mutch truble will yer com Jamie Duffy Writ bi Ben.

Elinor explained the message to her mother.

"It's the brightest little fellow in the class, mamma, and I must go to him."

"Elinor! What nonsense! Lose your opportunity tonight for an ignorant street child? Absurd!"

There was something in the dark eyes as they flashed up for an instant from the crumpled paper that warned Mrs. Morton of the uselessness in her remonstrance. The girl had inherited her dead father's resolute will, with the keen, lightning glance that betrayed the secret of its power.

"But Huntingdon—what shall I tell him when he comes?" Mrs. Morton began, acknowledging her daughter's victory in the same breath with the sudden fear that crossed her mind.

Elinor's expression changed again with characteristic swiftness. "Tell him that—why, what else is there to tell him but the truth? I will see him tomorrow morning if he cares for a fuller explanation."

The maid threw a soft fur wrap around her young mistress, and, with a quiet kiss on her mother's cheek, Elinor turned to go. Just at the door stood a magnificent azalea plant. With a sudden impulse she broke off a branch of the clustering blossoms and fastened it in her cloak. At the staircase outside she paused a moment.

"You must not worry, mamma," she called back. "They all know me, so it's perfectly safe, and I don't expect to be very long."

The next moment she was alone in the hall below. No, not alone, for from the broad divan some one was rising to meet her, at the sight of whom Miss Morton's beautiful face grew suddenly white and tense.

"They did not tell me you were here," she said quietly, as Delafield took her hand. "You are early."

"I was about to make a similar remark myself," he replied lightly. "It must have been a sort of mental intercommunication, telegraphy—what do they call it?—that makes us both so unusually early tonight. Do you want to go now, or shall we wait an hour? There's going to be a horrid crush. Van's an alarmingly popular fellow with all the set. I pity you girls with all these furbelows to look out for in a throng." He leaned forward and touched the rich draperies of her gown. There was an air of confident proprietorship in his manner which the girl had never noticed before. It jarred, as somehow his free and easy chatter did tonight.

With a scarcely perceptible movement she drew back from his touch and stood before him, with her head proudly raised and her dark eyes meeting his surprised regard with calm directness.

"I cannot go with you tonight," she began in a clear, low voice, "because I have just received word that one of the boys in my mission class is dying. You never knew that I had a mission class, did you? You never dreamed that I cared for anything besides this frivolous, tiresome society life, and the heartless vanity of it all? And I was so weak and cowardly that I never let you think anything different, and I cannot tell you how I despise myself for that"—her voice was trembling a little, and something very like a sob made her stop a moment. Delafield was stroking his handsome imperial with an expression of amused curiosity. This was a novel rôle for Elinor Morton to be assuming—rather becoming, though, it must be admitted. Usually this serio-tragic sort of thing bored him, but in a girl like Elinor Morton it was almost stunning.

The girl went on. "But I did care for something else, though I wickedly let you all believe that I was perfectly satisfied with the life you saw me living. And I was satisfied"—she was speaking very rapidly—"until—until—one day I found that there was a nobler, truer way of life than the one we know. I think I cannot utterly despise myself"—the girl drew her tall form up to its proudest hight—"because I remember how joyfully I broke through the old pride and custom to welcome that glad discovery. But all this time I've been fearful lest you and the others should know that I had changed, because I cared, or thought I cared, for what you would say and think. Tonight I see how foolish that was, and I care no longer for criticism and disapproval. I cannot ever be afraid of that again, because whatever they may say I must be true!" Her dark eyes were glowing now with a steady light.

Delafield was still stroking his beard with the quizzical look that the girl's first words had provoked.

"Really, Elinor," he drawled, carelessly, "you are not yourself tonight. You are making a great mistake to let your sympathies upset you so. Come, you'll forget this nonsensical cant in an hour, and be what you always are, what makes us all adore you."

How utterly the man failed to understand the intense earnestness of the girl's meaning! Her nature's supreme demand was gloriously asserting itself, and yet it was a thing of small moment, something to be jested away, to this lesser soul.

Miss Morton answered Delafield's words with a gesture of sad scorn.

"If that is what you adored—that old, hateful, deceitful self—you must believe me that I shall never be that again. O, don't you understand? Can't you see how necessary it is for me to break away from the old false past and be the best I can this other way? I cannot go back and live this miserable lie any longer! It was so wretched always, it would be unendurable now. O, I must breathe and live and be true!"

She put her hand to the fur at her throat and nervously worked the silken fastenings, as though the sott pressure were suffocating. As the fur parted Delafield noticed the azalea blossoms. Ha! his floral gift had been rarest orchids. There was some one else then whose offerings were accepted with favor. And this other, who was he? Some canting fool, no doubt, who had touched for the moment the girl's impressible fancy. And yet, with the half comfort the thought might hold, it vaguely crossed Delafield's mind that he had never roused her an instant from the calm, almost cold, conventionality in which it had pleased her to move. It was that very reserve for which he had always admired Elinor Morton. Girls with excitable sensibilities were his particular aversion. He had thought Elinor Morton happily lacking in these feminine qualities, but now it seemed that they had been present all the time, waiting only for this developing influence.

If Delafield had been a noble man he would have rejoiced in the change. If he had been an impassioned lover this strange power that another possessed would have made him madly jealous: But being what he was, an egotistical, narrow-souled fop, devoid of the capacity for deeply loving, his vanity only was touched, and that rudely. In an instant his attitude was as proud as her own, the difference being that the girl's was royally noble, the man's scornful and hard.

"And 'breathing' and 'living' and 'being true' consist, as I understand you, in disregarding the claims of your friends—not to say respectable society—and spending your time among the outcasts and paupers of the tenements. Excellent atmosphere for the lungs! You might at least have regard to the effect all this will have on your voice. And who, may I ask, is accountable for the metamorphosis that has taken place in you since five o'clock this afternoon?" His voice was cruelly sarcastic, and his eyes gleamed between the half-closed lids with an expression from which a spirit less heroic and self-reliant would have shrunk in dismay.

But Elinor Morton had too lately cast off her fetters for this small man to bind her back with his cynicism to the old bondage. Fearlessly she met the sinister face and there was a beautiful reverence in her own as she answered the bitter words.

"There is only One who is really 'accountable' for the truth that lives in the world. Humanly speaking, I owe this awakening to a noble man whose name you and I are not worthy to utter."

"Ah!" Delafield's exclamation was a scornful sneer.

Miss Morton drew the fallen wrap to its place again, and then turned hesitatingly to the man who had willfully forfeited all right to her confidence and regard.

"I am aware that you have a claim on me tonight," she said quietly, "inasmuch as I promised the evening to you. My plans have been unexpectedly changed, and though I might ask you to release me, I will not, and if you still care to have the promise kept, you may come with me to Jamie's deathbed." She stood as a queen might who was offering life to a condemned prisoner, on the sole condition that the gift be ever after consecrated to the royal allegiance. Delafield felt something of this, and it galled him bitterly. In that moment he was nearer than he could ever be again to gaining Elinor Morton's respect, because the victory rested on a few easily spoken words.

"I release you," he said, coldly. "I have too long neglected to cultivate a taste for dying vagrants to be of use now."

A moment later Miss Morton entered the waiting brougham.

As the carriage turned into the wide square where the Van der Poole mansion stood, the man reined in the horses. The avenue was thronged with coaches causing a momentary blockade. Miss Morton leaned forward and gazed out at the glare of the illuminations streaming from the broad windows. Delafield's last cutting words, with every tone of the carefully modulated voice, were ringing in her ears; and then suddenly, as the light from the marble entrance fell across the carriage, an old sentence, uttered long ago by a Master of men, whispered itself to her, and banished the other: "Because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."

When the carriage moved on, Miss Morton's head was bowed over the azalea cluster, and on her face there rested a beautiful smile.

A SEARCHING QUESTION.

BY ELLA R. TOWLE.

Not long ago I was impressed by reading the story of a Christian sea captain who, returning from a long voyage, brought with him several converted South Sea Islanders. Upon arriving at San Francisco, so fearful was he lest the influence of that city would cause them to renounce their newly embraced religion, that he employed every device he could invent to prevent their landing. I cannot vouch for its truth, but whether true or false the story suggests this query: In how many so-called Christian homes could a converted heathen be placed with perfect safety to his new religion?

I cannot forbear relating an experience of my early childhood. Although my home was not professedly Christian, I was taught to respect religion and its forms. When a little girl I was an occasional guest at the home of a young friend whose parents were prominent Christians and active workers in the church. This was long my ideal of what a home should be. I especially enjoyed the blessing before the meals and the family altar. Once I happened there during the school year, and much to my disappointment and perplexity the service I loved was omitted. As I saw the family separating without the usual morning worship, I timidly whispered to my little friend that family prayers had been forgotten, but received the indifferent reply: "O, we never have prayers in the winter when we go to school. The days are too short, we don't have time for them." A dull pain crept into my heart. My beautiful ideal home was forever destroyed, and my thoughts resolved themselves thus: If they have prayers only when they have time for them they cannot be worth much, or they would always find time. For years this childish conclusion followed me like my shadow.

Broader knowledge and wider experience have proven that this home is no exception to the rule, and yet so much depends upon our Christian homes! How could a converted heathen harmonize the Fourth Commandment with the Sunday visitings and feastings found in so many of our Christian homes, with the Sunday pleasure seeking and travel indulged in without remonstrance or rebuke by too many of the young Christians, or how could he harmonize the Fifth Commandment with its daily interpretation as made by the home language, manners and actions? Surely no thoughtful follower of Jesus can call these idle questions. "But," some one may say, "there are no converted heathen in our homes." Are there not? Then there must be some unconverted ones. All the heathen are not in foreign lands. What about the occasional guest, or the seamstress, the wash woman, the hired man, or hired woman? What possible interpretation could they place upon your home and family life?

HIS MOTHER'S PHOTOGRAPH.

BY REX WILSON.

Recently, while standing at an upper window of a small country hotel, I was witness to a pathetic incident which demonstrated the lasting influence of a good mother. On the opposite corner a popular saloon seemed to be having a brisk trade. The sign, an immense red mug of foaming beer on a bright blue background, attracted the eyes of many passers-by. Next door a photographer had hung out a glass case filled with specimens of his work. With rural artistic discrimination, he had placed the picture of a "sweet girl graduate" between those of two clumsy, but honest looking, country lads. In the same row a benign, saintly appearing minister of the gospel gazed solemnly at a well-known prize fighter on his left. Over in the corner, in full view of the saloon window, was a large photograph of a dear old lady, lately deceased, whom I had known in life. Her soft dark eyes were turned as if sorrowfully regarding the occupants of that low dive as they leaned upon the bar.

Her only son, a handsome, debonair lad of twenty, sauntered by with a friend, who paused and seemed to be urging some request; finally both entered the saloon and, after a short delay, drinks were served to them. I saw my young friend laughingly raise the glass to his lips, at the same time turning toward the window. Then the smile died from his face like a flash, the glass fell to the floor, and he reeled from the den like one overcome with the power of strong liquor. A part of the idle crowd followed him outside with anxious queries, and he pleaded a passing faintness as excuse. But I knew the real cause. He had encountered the sweet, pleading eyes of his revered mother, and their influence directed his will even yet, though her presence were wanting.

Many a so-called home in city slums is only a training school for a life of violence and crime. An East Side district in New York city recently gave convincing evidence that this statement is true. Among the children there was a daily average of eight fights to each block of dwellings. These encounters were not infrequently encouraged in a practical way by the parents. In one of the fights a boy struck by another boy did not return the blow. "Why didn't you hit him?" screamed the boy's mother, and the enraged woman followed up the question by fiercely striking the little fellow because his fists were too inactive to suit her ideas of their right use. Given a boy thus goaded to fighting, add a few years of belligerency, then let him be crazed by liquor, and you have a fully equipped recruit for the army of ruffians and murderers.—Youth's Companion.

Closet and Altar

Begin each day by tarrying before God and letting him touch you. Take time to meet God.

The time of business does not with me differ from the time of prayer; and in the noise and clatter of my kitchen, while several persons are at the same time calling for different things, I possess God in as great tranquillity as if I were upon my knees at the blessed sacrament.—Brother Lawrence.

I asked my soul, How shall I live,
The greatest blessings to receive,
And greatest good to others give?
The answer this, as I conceive:
Seek earnestly
And prayerfully
God's will to know,
God's will to love,
God's will to do.
These precepts three,
If faithfully
Observed, will be
For you and me
A guide to immortality.
—W. T. Sleeper.

There are two errors that follow the Christians that go furthest in the divine life. They are very eager to bring men to Christ, but they neglect to obtain for themselves experience of a higher and more thorough work of sanctification. That love of Christ which they know, they abundantly proclaim, and are rewarded in doing so; but there are depths in Christ's love which they are neglecting to explore. The second error is that of those who give themselves too exclusively to the interior life. They ardently desire personal holiness. Their soul is a watered garden, and they propose, when all the plants shall be fruitful and beauteous, to open the gates that others may come in and participate in their treasures; but in the meantime they almost forget the world without. They are in danger of falling under the power of an insidious form of spiritual selfishness. In the Lord Jesus see the most uninterrupted communion with God and the most unrestrained communion with men.—George Bowen.

The heart that trusts forever sings,
And feels as light as it had wings;
A well of peace within it springs,
Come good or ill;
Whate'er today, tomorrow, brings,
It is His will.

Lord of all! Our Father! Our eternal Lover! Of thy mercy comfort us with the remembrance that thou knowest our frame, thou rememberest we are but dust; for the mean things do so much master us and base things do so bend us to like baseness that our soul cleaveth unto the dust. Pity us when we go wrong through ignorance, but pity us most when we go willfully astray. Love us most when we least love thee. Look on us as erring children requiring more the Father's care. And, Lord God, by thy dear love in Christ Jesus, bring every one of us through such journeying as thy large love may deem best for us into the land where man never falls, nor goes back; where learned lessons are never forgotten, where gathered wealth is never lost, where treasured love is never smitten, where sunshine is perpetual and where the light of God shines forevermore. Amen.

TEACHING CHILDREN SELF-CONTROL.

In considering the question of teaching children to control themselves it is impossible to ignore the tendencies that are theirs through inheritance. Galton asserts that good and bad temper are largely transmissible, and the modifications of temper through the habits of parents will make a deep impression on their posterity. The child that early in life has learned to govern his own spirit has fought not only for himself but for his descendants.

A more important factor in creating power of self-control in the child is the conduct of the mother during those fateful months when the child is being made from her blood, for the characteristics of her blood are largely determined by the character of her thought. Prof. Elmer Gates asserts that the malevolent passions create poisons in the blood which are detectable by chemical analysis. It has been demonstrated over and over again that the nursing child can be poisoned or even killed by the sudden fit of anger in the mother, and we begin to understand why when we realize that the anger actually caused material poisons to germinate in the life-giving fluid. Then we can begin to comprehend how a state of unrest, of fear, of rage, of jealousy, of lack of self-control in the mother will interfere with perfect nutrition of the child and fill its tissues with the poisons which these malevolent passions generated in the mother's blood, and how, after it begins its individual life, these poisons render its condition fluctuating and with a tendency to break out into manifestations of the same passions.

A widespread, deep-rooted opinion holds that the mother may mark the child by a fleeting vision of terror or a momentary fright, and this fear envelopes many women like a pall, making expectant maternity a season of fear and dread. Every slight unpleasant circumstance is magnified into a dread prophecy, and friends are on the qui vive to shut away the loved one from every disagreeable sight. But who thinks of impressing on her mind the thought that her own inward impulses are far more powerful for good or evil than a temporary experience? If, instead of emphasizing the idea of birthmarks through fleeting sensations, the expectant mother were taught that by holding herself serene and self-poised, by rising superior to mere outward circumstances, she could endow her child with regal powers, how much better both for her and her child. It may not be possible for the mother to give her child curly hair or roseate complexion or faultless features by desiring it, but it is possible, by holding beautiful thoughts, by being dominated by noble aspirations, by cultivating sweetness and unselfishness and self-control, to give her child that charm of spirit which shall beautify the plainest face and glorify the humblest life.

To acquire control of self the child must have a sound nervous system, and this can only be obtained through a quiet, natural infancy. An unstable state of nerves, through constant demand upon them for response to caresses of friends or to evince a precocious intellectuality, will result in lessened power of self-control, because it is through the nerves that the commands of the individual are to be carried to his bodily members. If the brain has been constantly disturbed in babyhood it will not be able to generate the nerve force that will control bodily expression. Therefore, if the man is to be ruler of himself, the infant must have that natural, undisturbed development that will allow the vital forces to build up strong nerves.

The first lessons of the child are received through the mental and moral atmosphere that surrounds him. He may not be able to understand the state of rest or disturbance that is about him, but he feels it, is quieted or irritated by it. Every mother knows that the infant in arms will respond to her silent grief with its own quivering lip and anxious face. It could not understand her words, but it feels her sorrow. It is the same with joy. The child is happy because the air about it is permeated with the happiness of parents and friends. So even before the little one can mentally comprehend it can intuitively feel the power of self-control in those around it, and recognizes that anger may be felt and yet not manifested. Its next lesson in self-control will be in imitating that which it has observed. It will restrain its exhibitions of anger because it has seen its elders do so. The child that kicks or throws himself upon the floor in a whirlwind of passion because he cannot have his own way has will power enough to control himself if he could only be taught the great value of self-government. He will soon learn self-control if he finds that he never gets what he cries for, but that, instead, he will more surely have his desires if he is quiet and self-controlled. When he learns that "no" means unalterably "no" he will not waste his strength in fruitless cries.

Self-control may be early taught by not permitting the child to handle everything that is within his reach. Some parents think that they must put all forbidden things out of the baby's way. This policy, if pursued to any great extent, has two results. It either stimulates the child to transgress and attain the desired article by foul means, or slyly to seek other ways of being mischievous. It is indeed a great tax upon a child to be surrounded by many attractive things, all of which are forbidden, and parents should not unduly strain the child's powers of obedience, but while forbidding one thing provide something in its stead. "You must not play with the album, but here are books that are yours to handle and look at as much as you please." "You must not take mamma's vase from the shelf, but here are dishes that are your own." In this way the child realizes that it is not a desire to interfere with his pleasure that prompts the restriction. But some one may say, "If we always give something in place of that we take away we have not taught self-control."

It seems to me that we have taught the most valuable lesson of self-control, which is, if we cannot get one thing there is always something else that we may have, and instead of feeling it a virtue that we can "grin and bear it" and in a way calling ourselves "blessed martyrs," we will look about us to see in what way we can soonest forget our disappointment in something which is perfectly permissible. There was a little touch of wisdom in the girl who, being forbidden to marry, asked if she "couldn't have a tooth pulled then, she wanted some fun." "It rains, you cannot go to the picnic, but you may help me bake," is a lesson for a day when pleasure is interfered with and the child asks, "What can I do, mamma?" instead of pouting because it cannot go, and this is self-control.

The ultimate aim of parental control is self-control, or it should be. Therefore the earlier a child can be taught to judge for himself the better. He will never walk as long as he is carried in arms. He learns control of muscle through use of muscle. He will learn judgment through use of judgment. Let him discuss with the parent the pros and cons of questions of conduct in the abstract, and he will come to govern himself by reason when the abstract becomes the concrete. When he realizes that back of the parent's mandate is a worthy motive, that the decree is not an arbitrary manifestation of power, he begins to learn that there is something of more value than impulse, that as a thinking being he must regulate his impulses and govern his conduct by moral motives.

SYMPHONY OF LIFE.

To live content with small means;
To seek elegance rather than luxury,
Refinement rather than fashion;
To be worthy, not simply respectable;
And wealthy, not simply rich;
To study hard, think quietly,
Talk gently, act frankly;
To listen with open heart to birds and stars,
To babes and sages;
To bear all cheerfully, do all bravely;
Await occasions, never hurry—
In a word, to let the spiritual life
Grow up through and above the common—
This to be my "symphony of life."

The Conversation Corner.

I have no doubt you Cornerers have kept track of the various prizes offered for compositions and pictures and have noticed that D. F. has not awarded his yet, probably because he wished to have the best come last. And now he has given it to a girl whose name begins with the last letter of the alphabet! (You know he always did make a great deal of the Alphabet—especially our boat of that name, which, according to his account, was wrecked near his cabin on the North River, just three years ago this very Thanksgiving eve, when I write this.) I am not sure that D. F. showed me all the competing pictures, but I saw some steamboats from Oregon, a Mt. Washington locomotive, a Marshfield sailboat, a cavalry officer's daughter on a horse at an Indian Reservation in North Dakota, and another girl on another horse in Westchester County, N. Y. But in D. F.'s opinion the wooden bicycle gets ahead of steamboats, engines, yachts and fast horses, for he counts little Miss Z. as "A No. 1!" Here is her simple story about it.:

LYNDON, VT.

Dear Mr. D. F.: I am seven years old. Grandpa let me take his Camera and snap it on Vernon. He is my brother. Grandpa says if you had heard Vernon nail these barrel heads together you would think his bicycle fast enough. Vernon can't ride on his bicycle much, he can only stick on it to ride down hill a little, but he can fall off it as well as he could on a good bicycle, grandpa says, and I say so too and I guess you would if you could see him on it, I think you would. NINA Z.

To prevent any suspicion that this picture and letter presented by D. F. are not bona fide, I will add that going into an office on Beacon Street, near the Congregational House, one day, I found that the stenographer there was from Vermont and she said that she knew these children very well, that it was a true story, barrel-headed bicycle and all, and that Vernon, who is nine years old, invented and constructed the machine. I hope he will apply for a patent, calling it the "Green Mountain Lignum"; also that Nina will receive the Corner Scrap-Book and one dollar extra promised by D. F.; if she does not, let her write to me.

As we have the wheel for our sign this week I will give you the account of a unique bicycle trip from Maine to Montana, explaining that when I heard that this rider had made the expedition I wrote to him in Montana asking him to tell us about it.

Dear Mr. Martin: My trip was long, varied and interesting. I passed through Boston, visited Mt. Holyoke College, thence to Albany and over the Lake Shore route to Chicago, experiencing all kinds of roads, weather and people. From Chicago I set my face westward, making a straight trail over the rough roads of Illinois, crossing the Mississippi at Clinton into Iowa. I was much disappointed in the Father of Waters—a low, sluggish, muddy stream. Beyond it the country changed. Iowa is a fine, rolling country, with well cultivated farms, good buildings and pleasant people. They milk a hundred cows where we milk a dozen in New England, and the pigs grow fat in herds. Usually in June the roads are dry and splendid wheeling. I left Boston June 1, arrived in Chicago, 15th, in Sioux City, the western edge of Iowa, 24th. Crossing the Sioux River into South Dakota, found the road a trail and the traveling fearful at times. Prairies almost absolutely level, branching trails puzzling a veteran to decide which was the right one, the unending sweep of prairie grass, and the great, level horizon. Ranches were very scarce, villages more so. Poor wooden houses often appeared in the distance, four or five miles away.

One day I had a long, exciting chase with a rain-storm. Two storms came, one from the south, one from the north; when separated by a narrow strip of clear sky (a phenomenon I frequently observed on the prairies) they remained nearly stationary, each giving copious supplies of rain. I was caught in the advancing edge of the southern cloud, but having a splendid stretch of road I succeeded by pedaling my best in riding out of the rain. But I could not find the road I expected, and twice, while retracing the road trying to find the proper turn, I got caught in the edge of the same shower. (Now all the roads in that part of our country run either north and south, or east and west; therefore to go northwest you have to zigzag across the country, or, as I did frequently, ride on the railroad, bumping over the sleepers, which is hard and unpleasant.) When at last I found the right road again I soon left the rain behind, but not many miles further I was beneath the northern bank of clouds and received their droppings. I saw numerous cyclone cellars and one town which had experienced one of those destructive whirlwinds. As people buy and fence in new farms they take in a section of the old trails and the new ones have to pass around outside the fences. Sometimes, rather than go around, I jumped the wires and reached my wheel over or wriggled it under.

But I see that I have not room for all of this interesting letter, and so will print the rest next week. But here is a short letter from a Western boy, which I received just in time to read to the children at Mrs. Coffin's party, when Mr. Editor asked them whether they were for McKinley or Bryan.

RIPON, WIS.

My Dear Mr. Martin: Hurrah for McKinley! We are going to have a great parade tonight. And there is a big engine in front of the parade. And I have a pair of stilts.

ROWLEY F.

I wonder if Rowley marched in the parade on his stilts! I fancy his "outfit" resembled the Green Mountain machine more than the Montana one. How I would like to see those boys race, one on his wooden "bike," the other on his wooden stilts!

A ? is asked about those illustrated and paged and indexed Corner Scrap-books and, as "Christmas is coming," I will answer here that I have several copies left. They can be found at the Congregational Bookstore. Price, $1.25; prepaid anywhere for twenty-five cents extra.

P. S. N. B. Since writing the above, I spoke to the publisher about some of my children correspondents, who do not have The Congregationalist for their own, asking whether he could favor them in beginning to take it. He said that he could not reduce the price to them, but that if any such children wanted it he would give them as a "prize" a copy of the Corner Scrap-book in addition to the year's subscription. They can send the $3 direct to him or through me, if they like. It can come in their parents' name or their own as they prefer.

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Do Horses Joke? The Youth's Companion has an interesting account, written by Dr. Roberts, of a horse who had retired from active service but exhibited a remarkable talent for playing practical jokes. One instance was slyly picking up a sheep which was in the pasture with him (easily accomplished by means of his teeth and the sheep's wool), and dropping it over the fence. He seemed to watch for a discovery of the feat, and when he saw that some one noticed the sheep he showed his delight by running, snorting and kicking up his heels. At another time he dragged a heavy maul across the field with his teeth and hid it behind a stump. The men who had seen him do it pretended to hunt for it among the stumps and in fence corners, to the great delight of the old joker, who even tried to divert their attention from the real place when he saw that they were "getting warm."

Do Horses Reason? The doctor gives striking incidents of his own horses. At one time he left "John" at a post while he made his call, taking care to cover him carefully from the cold wind, but forgetting to tie him. He was soon informed that his horse was making good time towards home. After going a short distance, however, "John" turned from the road, made a large circuit and trotted back to the post again, shaking his head in apparent appreciation of the joke he had played his master, by way of reminding him of his carelessness. Another horse had been trained to stop when anything was wrong about the harness. At one time he suddenly stopped, but the doctor could perceive no reason for his doing so. He bade him go on, but he would not stir. He gave him a sharp blow with the whip, but still he refused to move. As though thinking how he should inform his master of the trouble, he then turned sharp to the right until the wheel touched the carriage and then stood still. In pulling the left rein to bring him back to the road he found that it had become unfastened from the bridle. Did the horse reason it out that the necessity of pulling that rein would show what the matter was?

Another Doctor's Horse. My father owned and drove for many years a horse, famous not only for her speed, but for her gentleness and sagacity. She was of Arabian descent and so peculiar in appearance that she was called by a child, "black and white and spotted all over." We children called her "Spot," but my father in her later years usually spoke of her as "the colt." She seemed as faithful and tireless in professional duty as the doctor himself, going over hills and through snowdrifts, night and day, as though having a sense of her part in the good work accomplished. She knew every patient's house and sometimes insisted on calling when some of us were driving who were not doctors. If in the long night rides her master fell asleep, she went on just the same, turning out in proper way when necessary and not slackening speed until she stopped in the home yard. But if any rein or trace or line was out of place, she stopped instantly and looked around inquiringly. One instance I recall of her intelligence. In a time of icy going she needed "sharpening" badly, and knew it. But my father having an urgent call early in the morning, she was brought out of the stable to be harnessed. Taking the remedy into her own hands—or feet—she slipped the bridle and hastened off to the blacksmith usually patronized. The shop was closed, but not discouraged she trotted back, past the house, to another shop, entered it and went to the proper post and almost gave the smith the order! Did not our old "Spot" reason?

LESSON FOR DEC. 20. Matt. 2: 1–12.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

Jesus Christ claimed the world as his own. He believed in mankind. He was sure that human nature would respond to what he offered to it. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth," he said, "will draw all men unto myself." He was moved to say this because some Greeks wished to see him. He looked on them as the vanguard of the world coming to acknowledge his sway. His disciples also believed that he was the rightful king of all nations and that these would acknowledge him when they came to understand him. He told them they should be witnesses to him "unto the uttermost part of the earth." John heard "great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." They saw in the scenes connected with his birth the signs of his final exaltation. Therefore they told of the visit of Eastern sages to do homage at his cradle. With the faith that he is to be acknowledged king of nations let us consider in this lesson:

1. The vision of the wise men. They had seen in the east the star of the king of the Jews. They were not Jews. Yet God had communicated with them. He had made known to them that the world's Saviour had come, and had taught them how to find him. They found Jesus while his own people were still ignorant of him. Are there wise men now, outside of Christian nations, to whom the gospel has not been preached? Does God now hold communion with any who have not heard of Christ from human lips? God heard the prayers of the Roman officer, Cornelius, and revealed to him his will before that heathen, as we should call him, knew of Jesus. Through him an apostle learned that "God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is acceptable to him." That is the lesson the story of the wise men brings to us: that in India, China, Turkey, Arabia there may be many who have not yet heard the gospel, yet are acceptable to God. It is as difficult for some Christians to believe that as it was for Jews to believe that God could look with favor on any outside of their own nation. Yet Christ said, "They shall come from the east and west, and from the north and south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God."

2. The vision of the prophets. The men from a distant land first stirred the leaders of the church to look for the newborn Christ who was among them. But they knew that their prophets had foreseen his coming. They could see the prophets' record, but not him to whom the prophets pointed.

We know the description of Christ given by prophets and apostles. They had the seer's vision. Have we really found the Christ through their words? We call ourselves Christians. But do men who do not bear his name pass by us to lay their offerings at his feet while we are discussing how to interpret the records, to decide where he was born, where he lived, what he did and taught? "There are last which shall be first," Christ said, "and there are first which shall be last." In his great judgment scene he described those as righteous who did not know that they had served him, and who asked him when they had ever done anything for him. He answered them, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." The vision of the prophets cannot be our vision, however familiar with it we may be, till we have seen Christ for ourselves by doing his will.

3. The vision of Herod. He saw the Christ. But his vision of him was distorted. Herod saw the Babe of Bethlehem claiming his throne, his possessions, his all. He said he wanted to worship him. In his heart he determined to kill him.

Christ does claim all that we have. When we feel the pressure of his claims we shall either surrender ourselves to him or we shall want to kill him. To many a man of wealth and power living a selfish life, seeking to extend his possessions, Christ comes this Christmas time, saying, "He that loveth his life loseth it." The man outwardly may worship him. Secretly he hates him. His inward vision of Christ is the vision of an enemy. He may possess his throne now. Government, law, society may be on his side. He may employ priests and scribes to show him where is the Christ, that he may smite him. But the Babe in the manger will prove too strong for him at last. "This child is set for the falling and rising up of many." "He that falleth on this stone shall be broken to pieces; but on whomsoever it shall fall it will scatter him as dust."

4. A further vision of the wise men. Their search was rewarded. They had really had a revelation from God. They found the Christ, worshiped him, and gave him their offerings. Herod helped them. Priests and scribes helped them to find Jesus. But Herod was a worse man because of his search. Priests and scribes were no better for it than before. Only the wise men gained anything by it. They satisfied the yearning of their souls, and they had divine guidance to a safe return home.

Many are seeking the Christ this Christmas, 2,000 years after his advent—some because they dread the effect of his principles on their position, power and property; others simply to see if his principles as enunciated today tally with the sacred record. Are you seeking him? Why? Have you found him? Do you worship him? Are you laying your treasures at his feet? The Babe of Bethlehem is the King of kings. The Father of glory has raised him from the dead, "far above all rule, and authority, and power, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come." Out from the heavens comes to us his message: "He that overcometh, I will give to him to sit down with me in my throne, as I also overcame, and sat down with my Father in his throne."

The laying of the corner stone of the Jones Memorial Building proved to be a delightful occasion for Illinois College. A large crowd stood with uncovered heads as Dr. Jones, with trowel in hand, uttered these words: "In the name and service of God, in the name and service of Christian education, in the name and service of Illinois College, I lay this corner stone." The addresses and other exercises were then transferred to Gymnasium Hall, where prayer was offered by Dr. S. H. Dana of Quincy and ten-minute addresses of reminiscence, congratulation and bright anticipations for the future were given by Hon. M. P. Ayers, representing the trustees, Professor Churchill, representing the faculty, S. W. Baxter from the students, and Ensley Moore from the alumni. Rev. Dr. Schaff spoke of the relation of the college to the churches, Supt. J. W. Henninger on the relation of the college to the public schools and Judge Edward Scott of the relation of the college to the business interests of Jacksonville and central Illinois. President Bradley stated that the movement which seemed to "save the day" in the effort to raise the required sum was the action of Christian Endeavor Societies in voting to endow a Christian Endeavor scholarship. "Old Illinois" gains $45,000 as a result of this movement.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

SIGNS OF PROMISE.

Parallel with The Congregationalist's January Topic for Missionary Meetings.

The year 1896 will go down into history as an eventful and epoch-making twelve months not only in the United States but in Europe, Asia and Africa. Contemporaneous events have rarely exerted an influence so apparent and so powerful upon missionary enterprise. The student of missions who has a broad mind, a discriminating judgment, an intelligent grasp on the relations of things is watching the bearing of the political and social movements of our day upon Christian work with absorbing interest, with mingled feelings of hope and foreboding, but, above all, with deep awe and with a reverent faith in the shaping hand of an over-ruling Providence.

Looking back over the year 1896 and forward to 1897, we may find in the study of conditions in foreign missionary lands reasons for both pessimism and optimism. We might dwell upon the horrible massacres in Turkey, the helpless and seemingly hopeless state of the Armenians, the destruction of mission property and the discouragement of seeing the work of years torn up by the roots. We might indulge in gloomy prognostications concerning the future of Protestant missions in Madagascar under French government, and of Korea under Russian control. We might point to the apparent backward movement in Japan, dwelling upon the disappointing attitude of the Doshisha toward our mission and toward Christianity. At home we might find cause for despondency in the debts burdening our mission boards, or, at least, in the depleted state of their treasuries, making disastrous retrenchments imperative. We cannot shut our eyes to the clouds which hang over the missionary horizon, but we can turn towards what seems the breaking dawn of a new day in some mission fields, and we may find bright signs of promise even in Armenia.

A marked change in the outlook for Chinese missions has characterized the past twelve months. A year ago we were reviewing the disastrous results of war and internal commotions, destruction of mission property and massacres of missionaries and regarding the future with uncertainty. The question whether it was wise to send missionaries to China was even raised. Today our attitude is one of hopefulness. In the interior the intense anti-foreign sentiment has in large measure subsided. Canadian and American Methodists have returned to the scenes of past riots and disorder and the Church Missionary Society has sent out another band of fearless men and women to take the places of its murdered martyrs. Scotch Presbyterians report encouraging progress in Manchuria, where the Christian religion was never held in such high esteem, and Dr. Griffith John sees a reasonable prospect of an advance into Hunan, the central province notorious for its hostility toward foreigners and toward Christianity. But most hopeful of all has been the great spiritual awakening in the Foochow Mission of the American Board, a field that has for years been considered the most barren and unprofitable in the whole region. We have heard of large numbers of converts, of churches, chapels and schoolhouses dangerously overcrowded, of whole villages begging for Christian teachers and offering to provide for their support, of home missionaries sent out by the native church. Other Chinese missions also report widespread religious interest and general accessibility of the people.

Indications of a new spirit of progress in China are found in the opening of mines, the development of manufactures and multiplication of railroads, in the reform clubs and in the sending of a band of young Chinese lads to receive education in the United States. But the visit of Li Hung Chang to Europe and America has more than anything else brought China to the attention of the world and brought Western institutions and ideas to the attention of China. In response to the address of welcome presented to the Viceroy in the United States by representatives of various mission boards, the great Chinese statesman gave Christian missions the most remarkable tribute, perhaps, that they have ever received from a non-Christian source.

No less wonderful than in China has been the work of God in Uganda. The past months have seen extraordinary progress in the development of the country and the extension of Christianity. Steady progress is being made on the Uganda Railroad, and the region around the capital, hitherto uncultivated, is now "like a great garden." A beautiful new church building, accommodating 4,000 worshipers, is now to be found in Mengo. In neighboring districts there are twenty-three churches, while 200 places of worship are scattered throughout the country. Native Christians to the number of nearly 400 have gone out as teachers and evangelists to their own people. A recent letter from Bishop Tucker tells of the ordination of three native clergymen and five deacons, all of whom are to be supported by the native church, and reports the total number of confirmations within eight months to have been 2,052. Large reenforcements, including several women, have been sent out from England during the year. Surely Uganda is not wanting in abundant signs of promise.

From India also come remarkable statistics. In the American Methodist mission, under the care of Bishop Thoburn, 20,000 are being yearly gathered into the church. These new disciples are not the converts of a day but compare favorably in loyalty and steadfastness to the church's probationers in the United States. Miss Child of the Woman's Board, who has recently visited India, mentions among other hopeful signs, "the rapid increase of the English language throughout the country, the desire to learn English making men and women willing to take Bible lessons as a condition of their teaching; the growing number of church members who are well-to-do and whose position entitles them to respect as business men; and the marked improvement in mental, moral and physical stamina found in the second and third generations of Christians."

If in other lands we cannot point to such telling results of missionary work, we can find cause for rejoicing in the marked development of the native pastorate and of the principle of self-support in the Zulu Mission of the American Board and growth along the same lines among the Marshall Islands, Micronesia; in the slow but steady victories of the pure evangelical faith in papal lands; and in the call for more schools, churches and missionaries to meet the increasing needs of the work the world over. Secretary Barton's paper on Japan at the annual meeting of the American Board gives new courage for the continuance of missions in that country, and even in Asiatic Turkey we find peculiar opportunities in the deepened religious feeling, in the closer fellowship between Protestants and Gregorians, above all in the supreme lessons of Christliness which our missionaries have exemplified in character and conduct. Dr. Judson Smith may well say: "The moral impression which their fidelity and patience and love have made far outruns the fruits of many years of ordinary service; and it has reached beyond the suffering people, it has won the admiration of many of the ruling nations and has touched the heart of the civilized world."

The year 1896 has also witnessed steady progress on the home missionary field, though it is not easy to single out signal results. A spontaneous movement among Negroes in the country districts of North and South Carolina and Georgia has resulted in the organization of several Congregational churches. The efforts of Whitman, Colorado and other Western colleges to secure endowments are meeting with response from the churches and generous individuals. The Sheats Law has been declared unconstitutional by the Florida Supreme Court, making possible the continuance of our A. M. A. schools. A significant change in the sentiment of the Southern men toward the Negro was evinced in the cordial invitation to Booker T. Washington to address the students and faculty of Trinity College, Durham, N. C., an old and aristocratic institution for whites, and in the invitation to hold the next annual meeting of the A. M. A. in Nashville, Tenn. Above all, the fact that the Western States favoring sound money in the recent election were the ones in which Congregationalism is strongest, is an eloquent testimony to the influence of home missions.

In spite of debts of mission boards, home and foreign, it cannot be said that interest in missions among our churches and the people at large is waning while great conventions, such as the A. M. A. Jubilee Meeting in Boston, gather enthusiastic audiences and present as speakers men like Justice Brewer and Governor Wolcott. The churches have put forth strenuous efforts to pay the American Board debt, and individuals, as well as organizations, are promptly responding to the needs of the Armenian orphans. The missionary activities of thousands of Student Volunteers and Christian Endeavorers testify to growing enthusiasm of Christian youth. If one fears that the gifts of the church for missions are decreasing let him read Secretary Daniels's paper, No Backward Step, and note the steady increase of contributions to the American Board during the past eight or nine decades; let him mark the success of the C. M. S. in securing the support of a large number of its missionaries by special gifts from individuals, parishes or other organizations. Out of a total of 730 missionaries (not including wives) on the staff of this English society 249 do not draw their personal allowance from the general fund. This idea that it is within the compass of what is possible and feasible for a parish to support a missionary, without diminishing the measure of its ordinary contributions, is one of the brightest signs of promise in missionary enterprise. It seems probable that it may bring about a revolution in the scale of giving, and upon this the future of Christendom largely depends.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

W. W. THOMAS.

The death of Hon. W. W. Thomas brings an irreparable loss to the Second Paris Church, Portland, Me. He was its oldest member and most munificent giver. Aged ninety-three, his life spans the century. He was son of one of the first settlers of Portland, was converted under the renowned Dr. Payson, has been member of this church nearly seventy years. For sixty years director in one of the Portland banks and for forty-seven years its president, this millionaire has been ceaseless in his devotion and benefactions to Christian and missionary enterprises at home and abroad. A champion of temperance, with Neal Dow and others he founded the Portland Temperance Society. During the early years of the war he was twice mayor of the city. He had official connection with nearly all its civic, charitable and Christian institutions, was an overseer of Bowdoin College, a corporate member of the American Board. He transacted business the day before his death. The city government adjourned and the banks of the city closed in honor of his public funeral, and officials and bankers attended the service in Second Parish Church in a body. The pastor, Rev. R. T. Hack, paid eloquent tribute to the honored and beloved veteran. Dr. Asa Dalton of the St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, the pastor longest in service in Portland, also gave an address. The capacious church, filled with the representative men of the city, was an impressive testimony to the commanding power and enduring worth of Christian principle in civic and commercial life.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS.

JEWISH LIFE IN THE MIDDLE AGES.

Public attention has been directed specially to the Jewish race repeatedly within a few years, notably through Mr. Zangwill's novels, and this volume will serve as a trustworthy source of information to all who desire particulars concerning its topic. It also abounds in diversified interest. It is not a story but a study. It deals with the synagogue—the center of Jewish social life—with the community organization, the ghetto, the home life, marriage customs, various trades and occupations, charities, schools and amusements, the attitude of the Jews toward Christians, etc. The author has made exhaustive study of Jewish literature, and apparently has gone more deeply than any one else into the rabbinical correspondence which exhibits the change in the point of view between Jewish life in the middle ages and in the sixteenth century. He causes one to believe strongly in the loftiness of the Jewish character and the wide usefulness of the Jewish people. The tone of the book is kindly throughout toward those who have been hostile to the Jews, and as a rule it seems to be true that the Jews have been far less bitter toward their enemies than their enemies have been toward them.

The relation of the Jewish race to the problem of modern civilization has been brought out more clearly by some other writers, because they have devoted themselves distinctively to that object, which is only incidental here, but clear impressions are made. It is a fact insufficiently recognized, and one which the author well enforces, that the common opinion that the Jews are by nature not only a commercial race but characteristically miserly, and even tricky for the sake of gain, is unjustifiable. It is easily demonstrable that the Jews, when given opportunities in the past, not only entered into a large variety of occupations but distinguished themselves therein, even as they do today. Nor may it be forgotten that the concentration of the attention of the race upon money getting was not due to any inherent or special fondness for that sort of life, but to the fact that almost every other means of gaining a livelihood was prohibited to them. They were forced to become money changers and bankers, and that, too, when this kind of life was practically tabooed, so that, necessary though it was to the world, men could enter upon it only at grave risk, if at all. Others could do other things, but the Jews had only the choice of adopting that occupation or perishing. Having succeeded in it they naturally pursued it, appreciating the immense power which they had gained by its means.

The particulars of Jewish home life here set forth are gratifying, and the information about old marriage and other customs is significant. The chapter on the scope of education possesses special interest, and it is worth noting that there was no learned caste among them, the education of all Jewish boys throughout the world being essentially identical. It will be a surprise to many to learn that after the Reformation Protestants were almost as severe upon the Jews as the Roman Catholics had been. Why this was is not easy to determine. Even Luther was unfriendly toward the Jews, although making considerable use of Jewish assistance in some departments of his work. It is the Jews of the mediæval times with whom the volume deals, and that fact should be borne in mind. Most modern Jews differ from those of the middle ages in many respects, but no one can understand the Jew of the present without some knowledge of the Jew of the past, and no one can do justice to the Jew of either the present or the past without the knowledge contained in this book. We know of no other volume in which so much information is brought together in so small and so available a compass. It is learned without being pedantic and a fine example of thorough and large-minded scholarship. [Macmillan Co. $1.75.]

STORIES.

Katherine Pearson Woods already is favorably known through Metzerott, Shoemaker, and other productions, some of which appeared originally in our own columns. Her John, A Tale of King Messiah [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25], is the fruit of long brooding over the pages of the gospels, supplemented, doubtless, by attention to other sources of knowledge concerning Jewish and Roman customs. Miss Woods has constructed a story which brings Jesus and his beloved disciple, as well as others of the apostolic company, into clear view. She has been conservative as respects wide departure from the historical record, although for the purposes of the romance other individuals are introduced than those delineated by the gospel writers. The maiden Inga is a particularly strong and winsome character, while the evil characteristics of Judas Iscariot and the growth of the devilish element in him are especially well set forth. Such reverent and delicate handling of her material entitles Miss Woods's book to the esteem of all who would orient themselves more thoroughly in the atmosphere and in the circle of men and women which surrounded Christ.——Another story suggested by our Lord's earthly life is The Quiet King [American Baptist Pub. Soc. $1.50], by Caroline A. Mason. It is offered not so much as a romance as a series of Biblical studies, nevertheless most readers will regard it as a story and they will not be in error. They also will find it reverent, dignified and sufficiently graphic and entertaining to hold attention easily to the end.

The Rogue's March, by E. W. Hornung [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50], is a story in which the horrors of the English convict system in the early part of the century are graphically portrayed. An innocent man is convicted of murder upon apparently conclusive evidence, and is only saved from the gallows and sent to New South Wales through the apparently disinterested efforts of a wealthy stranger. The effect of the cruelties of convict ship and settlement upon the moral character is developed in a masterly manner. Naturally the dark side of life preponderates in the book, which has an elaborate and exciting plot and some strong characters.——Generals Whalley and Goffe, signers of the death warrant of Charles the First, whose relations to early Connecticut history are so interesting, are the heroes of The Regicides [Baker & Taylor Co. $1.50], by F. H. Cogswell. The story is crude in some respects and probably exaggerates somewhat the serious side of the Puritan life, but is graphic and effective and makes very real the experiences of the regicides themselves and the perils of the colonists who sympathized with and assisted them.——Some Modern Heretics [Roberts Brothers. $1.50] is by Cora Maynard. It is a powerful and somewhat original story, the pathetic and dramatic features of which impress one deeply. The plot might be more natural, but its development is simple and consistent and the style of the book is exceptionally good. Some features of the story give the impression that it is the author's first production. Whether this be true or not, it is in many ways an example of superior workmanship, and we are sure that no one will regret having read it.

The author of James, or Virtue Rewarded [Stone & Kimball. $1.50], has preferred to remain unknown. James is a not particularly interesting individual, nor are his circumstances specially striking. He is a commonplace hero who becomes a commonplace rascal. One wonders why the book was written at all unless—and this hardly seems probable—to intimate that exceptionally outspoken religious professions are apt to involve hypocrisy and lead to spiritual downfall. Yet the story possesses a certain interest. It is not easy to tell why, but somehow one finds himself following the various characters with attention and sometimes with amusement. In depicting persons the author has some skill. We cannot commend the book as a work of literary art, or as specially valuable intellectually or morally. But we readily concede that many who begin it probably will read it through and without regret.——Mrs. Oliphant's newest book is The Unjust Steward [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25]. It is a Scotch story narrating the temptation of a minister in strenuous circumstances and the outcome. It is a pleasant and profitable tale without strong characteristics but impressing a useful moral and agreeable to read.

Clarissa Furiosa [Harper & Bros. $1.50] is W. E. Norris's latest novel. It is a study of the woman question, which is brought up in the form of an inquiry whether incompatibility of temper is a sufficient justification for the separation of married people. It is answered at last in the negative. The experiences of the heroine are amusing and likely enough to be for the most part founded upon fact, and the minor characters, some of whom are drawn quite as ably as the others, help to render the story interesting. But it is not one of Mr. Norris's best.——The Carissima [H. S. Stone & Co. $1.50], by Lucas Malet, is properly described in its sub-title as A Modern Grotesque. It is a character study of a strange and somewhat bewildering young woman. She is fascinating in many respects although far from attractive. Such a combination of characteristics as hers is hard to be conceived yet possibly may exist. The alleged supernatural element in the tale is as inartistic as it is inherently disagreeable. The author has written with considerable power and with a certain adroitness which often secures the reader's admiration, yet the story is not engrossing and is too far removed from probability in half a dozen different respects to deserve high praise.

In the First Person [Harper & Bros. $1.25] is by Maria Louise Pool. This also is a somewhat disappointing story. Miss Pool knows well how to describe certain types of New England character and the charm of her skill is felt throughout these pages, but the plot of the novel is unsatisfactory and its development is uneven. It contains many fine scenes and passages and is likely to be thought well of, but it does not represent the author's best work.——In Buncombe County [H. S. Stone & Co. $1.25] also is by Miss Pool. It is chiefly a lively and entertaining study of poor white life in the North Carolina Mountains, and reveals afresh the truth that in any country and any conditions of life wide varieties of character exist, and some fine and noble qualities are sure to be discovered upon investigation, the existence of which is not at first apparent. The narrative blends the comical and the serious sufficiently to keep the reader highly entertained.——In The City of Refuge [F. A. Stokes Co. $1.50] Sir Walter Besant has drawn a graphic and entertaining picture of life as it is, or might be, led in a community or brotherhood such as the famous Brook Farm community. If truth were not sometimes stranger than fiction the reader would have a right to protest against things falling out so fortunately for the author's purposes as they do in this book, but the author always can fall back on the familiar proverb. As a piece of description the story is admirable, and incidentally it teaches sound common sense on more than one subject.

The End of the Beginning [$1.25] comes from Little, Brown & Co. Who wrote it we are not informed. It is a somewhat philosophical novel, elevated in tone and animated in manner, setting high ideals of life before the reader, and on the whole is strong and enjoyable. It might have been cut down here and there without detriment. ——The Puppet [Stone & Kimball. $1.25], by Clinton Ross, is one of those stories which, whether justly or unjustly, impel the reader to say that the author has been reading Anthony Hope. Why should he not read Anthony Hope and write in the same vein if he can do so naturally and well? Mr. Ross's story is a good one and abounds in picturesque and spirited incidents. It is sufficiently unlikely to be amusing, and sufficiently probable to forbid downright contradiction. It belongs justly with the Prisoner of Zenda class of books and they need not be ashamed of it.——The Scarlet Coat [Stone & Kimball. $1.25], also by Clinton Ross, is a Revolutionary story, and reproduces the spirit of that time among the Continentals with much success. It is a vivid, stirring story, abounding in adventure and romance, and is a praiseworthy piece of work from the point of view of the literary artist as well as from that of the ordinary reader.

"Some Say" and Neighbors in Cyrus [Estes & Lauriat. Each 50 cents] are two little stories by Laura E. Richards which are published together. They describe New England country life, bringing out both the weaknesses and the virtues which are apt to be conspicuous in little rural communities. The climax of the first story will strike many as exaggerated and unnatural. ——Cynthia's Sons [National Temperance Society and Pub. House. $1.25], by Mrs. Julia McNair Wright, is a spirited narrative in the author's usual elevating manner, dealing with country life and the evils resulting from the drinking habit and the possibility and hopefulness of correcting them.—— From the same publishers comes Will Hilton's Will [50 cents], a narrative of personal sacrifice for the sake of righteousness which is told simply and impressively and should have a good influence.——An important moral truth may be said to form the background of Mrs. Lucy C. Lillie's story, Elinor Belden, or The Step Brother [H. T. Coates & Co. $1.25], but the moral is not brought into the foreground until late in the story and the fortunes and misfortunes of the heroine are numerous and diversified. The book is a little above the average intended for Sunday school libraries yet is hardly an ordinary novel, but, wherever it be ranked it is quite interesting and improving.

Chap-Book Stories [H. S. Stone & Co. $1.25] is self-described in its title. It contains a number of lively and entertaining tales gathered out of the columns of the Chap-Book which now needs no introduction to the public. Among the authors of these tales are Grace Ellery Channing, Maria L. Pool, Clinton Ross and Octave Thanet, and the book is a tempting one to look at and a fascinating one to read.—— An Elephant's Tracks and Other Stories [Harper & Bros. $1.25], by M. E. M. Davis, is another collection, made up from the Atlantic Monthly, the publications of the Harpers and other sources, together with one or two additions prepared for this book. They are excellent examples of the modern short story, varying much in subject, but alike entertaining when read.——The Cat and the Cherub and Other Stories [$1.50], by C. B. Fernald, comes from the Century Co. It was issued first a year ago. The peculiarities of Chinese characteristics serve to point some of its pithiest passages and all the stories have a decided flavor of pleasant unconventionality and keep the reader on the alert.——The Macmillan Co. has brought out Thackeray's Henry Esmond [$2.00], in a charming edition with illustrations by T. H. Robinson. It is bound in a tasteful green and gold, and Mr. Robinson's illustrations are admirably old style in their character and modern in their execution. The volume we trust is only the forerunner of a complete edition of the author's works in this form. The type is clear and easily readable and the cost is low for such a work.

JUVENILE.

Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co. send us Pierette [$1.25], by Marguerite Bouvet. It is a charming little French story of the temptation, the victory and the beneficent result thereof of a French sewing woman and her little daughter, and these simple materials are handled so delicately and attractively that the book possesses an unusual charm. It is pleasantly illustrated. ——The Gingham Bag [Lothrop Pub. Co. $1.25] is by Margaret Sidney. She tells of an heirloom handed down from one generation to another, and of the resulting influences and their consequences. The tone of her book is high, as always. The book might have been improved somewhat in the direction of diminishing its profusion of dialect passages.——In The Hermit Princes [T. Nelson & Sons. $1.00], by Eleanor Stredder, one is taken to Japan and conducted through a series of thrilling experiences which are well described and give excellent pictures of Japanese history and life, while they are entertaining from first to last. It is a book which the boys especially will read and reread with increasing pleasure.——Behind Manhattan Gables [T. Whittaker. $1.25], by Rev. E. A. Rand, deals with the New Amsterdam of two hundred and forty or fifty years ago. We regard it as the author's best work hitherto. It is well studied and gives excellent historical pictures; and as a mere story it is entertaining and wholesome. The life of those times in old New York was peculiarly picturesque and forms a pleasant subject of study, and the book will interest the young and do them good in various ways.

Another of the exciting and instructive stories of camp life is Saddle, Sled and Snowshoe [Curts & Jennings. $1.00], by John McDougall. The scene is the Saskatchewan Valley, and the author has used his extensive experience of open air life effectively in describing its characters in a manner which the boys will appreciate.—— Alice and Her Two Friends [Presbyterian Board of Pub. & S. S. Work. $1.25], by Rev. C. S. Wood, is a wholesome story for young girls, well conceived and worked out and alike entertaining and adapted to promote sincere piety.——The younger children, who are addressed by Penn Shirley, author of the Silver Gate series, will enjoy her second volume, The Merry Five [Lee & Shepard. 75 cents], which deals with varied and interesting experiences on the Pacific coast and is humorous and enjoyable throughout.——A. G. Plimpton is well known as a contributor to the St. Nicholas and other publications, and the eight sketches gathered in The Black Dog and Other Stories [Roberts Bros. $1.25], several of which already have been printed, are well studied and vivacious and, although unpretending, illustrate good work.——Mr. W. S. Phillips's Totem Tales [Star Publishing Co. $1.50] is one of the books which, although intended for and adapted to the children, contains a great deal of material of profound interest to a great many grown people, especially the students of folk-lore. The stories are the fruit of much research among the Northwestern Indians and possess permanent importance. They are illustrated freely by the author, and the illustrations certainly are as unique as the stories.

Baffling the Blockade [T. Nelson & Sons. $1.25] is another book by J. M. Oxley. This feature of the War of the Rebellion, the blockade of our Southern ports, has furnished material for a number of books within a year or two, and this seems to be quite equal to any of them in fidelity to the situation as it existed and in entertaining and commendable features.——Clevely Sahib [T. Nelson & Sons. $1.75], by Herbert Hayens, is a tale of the Khyber Pass and describes the famous attempt of the English to hold Cabul, from which they were driven out. It is a wholesome story for boys, stimulating to sound manhood, thrilling by reason of its dramatic and even tragic episodes, and well written. Its historical pictures are quite true in all their graphic details. It is one of the most excellent books of its class.——Gypsy's Sowing and Reaping [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50] is one of the Gypsy series, by Mrs. Phelps-Ward, which represent her early work in literature but which won and have maintained a high degree of favor. The new issue is attractively sent out and will be received with gratification by the young girls.——Hans Brinker or the Silver Skates [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50] also is out in a new and handsomely illustrated issue, called the New Amsterdam edition. It is a charming book, now become more charming than ever because of Mr. Doggett's pictures. —— The Children's History Book [Lothrop Co. $1.50] contains perhaps two dozen stories, based on events in American history, by well-known authors. It is the execution of a capital idea, and it is exceedingly interesting and cannot fail to start its young readers in the direction of later fondness for historical and other useful reading. It is illustrated successfully.——One more book of sketches is The Ponkaty Branch Road and Other Stories [Lothrop Co. $1.00], by Sophie Swett. New England scenes and characters appear in everyday relations and attitudes, and there is sound sense as well as entertainment in the impressions which are made.

The American Boys' Book of Sports [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00], by D. C. Beard, of course enters a field which has been well filled heretofore, yet this new competitor deserves a large share of favor. It is quite the equal of any book of the sort known to us, and we hardly hesitate to believe it the superior of any. It has certain features which must be peculiar to it, such as the chapter on Tally Ho and Other Cries, which includes the college cries, most of which, by the way, do little credit to the ingenuity or good sense of their originators. The book is divided into sections corresponding to the four seasons, and its directions about games of all sorts, how to make a boat or a raft, about ball playing, bicycling, football, golf, camping out, etc., are all practical and easily comprehended, and abundant illustrations make everything plain. For example, how to build a double-runner is not only described but illustrated from every conceivable point of view, so that the difficulties are reduced to the very minimum. Taking it all in all, there is more information which a live boy really wants, and less that he does not want, in this book than in any other which we have seen.

The two annual volumes in which are gathered the numbers of St. Nicholas [Century Co. Each $2.00] for the year are come to hand. There is not much that one can say in addition to what we have said so often in praise of this remarkable publication. In every respect it touches the highest watermark of excellence which has been attained hitherto. It is a wholesome companion for the young, the value of which hardly can be overstated.——The late Eugene Field is the author of the verses, and Reginald DeKoven, Arthur Foote, G. W. Chadwick and others of the music, of Songs of Childhood [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2 00], and the result is a more than delightful song-book for the children in the home. Some of the poetry is very touching and it will help to keep green the memory of its author. The music is worthy of the verses and the book deserves to be and cannot fail to be a great favorite.——Rhymes and Songs for My Little Ones, by Adolphine C. Hincks and Esther J. Ruskay, Through the Farmyard Gate by Emilie Poulsson, and What the Dragon Fly Told the Children [Lothrop Co. Each $1.50], by Frances B. Coursen, are three little illustrated books for children, the first of which contains short and pretty poems and many pictures, the second some poetry and some prose and plenty of excellent illustrations, and the third, intended for boys and girls a little older, represents a dragon fly as helping the children to take some beginning of intelligent interest in the great poets and their works.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE.

People who cannot go away from home are quite able to travel in these days and to enjoy a great deal of solid pleasure while stretched at ease by the fireside. The four volumes selected by Charles Morris and entitled Half Hours of Travel at Home and Abroad [J. B. Lippincott Co. $6.00] contain selections relating to travel in America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia, gathered from the narratives of a large number of tourists, adventurers and authors and illustrated sufficiently to enrich the interest of the work greatly. The selections have been made with good judgment and the volumes are printed handsomely and cannot fail to be a great resource in many a home during the winter evenings which are coming; nor should it be forgotten that old travelers themselves often enjoy such books as these quite as thoroughly as any other readers.——There are not many men who are at once such expert travelers and trained authors as Mr. Julian Ralph, and his book, Alone in China and Other Stories [Harper & Bros. $2 00], contains nearly three hundred pages, of which the first third describe the writer's experience while traveling in China in a houseboat, and the others are stories suggested by Chinese life, which have appeared in Harper's Magazine. The volume is more than ordinarily interesting and is well illustrated.

Another volume of travel and adventure and the more impressive because of its absolute freedom from all pretense is Mr. Charles Erskine's Twenty Years Before the Mast [G. W. Jacobs & Co. $1 00]. The author was for many years an American seaman, and was a member of the famous United States exploring expedition under the late Admiral Wilkes. He has been over most the world and has kept his eyes open, and, in spite of some crudities, the reader would hardly suspect his lack of educational opportunities had he not frankly declared them. The book is of more than common interest.

Mr. H. C. Chatfield-Taylor's The Land of the Castanet [H. S. Stone & Co. $1.25] includes a series of fascinating sketches of Spain, some of which already have appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. That they lack direct continuity does not detract from their interest because they have enough in common, and their variety is a pleasant feature. The author is an acute observer and a picturesque narrator, and the interior of the book, illustrations as well as substance, is as attractive as the outside, in its red and yellow binding, is striking.——The title of Syria from the Saddle [Silver, Burdett & Co. $1 50], by A. P. Terhune, suggests its contents. The author is a wide awake traveler, who went through the Holy Land just before the recent Turkish massacres, and he has described his experiences in a more than ordinarily entertaining fashion. Although they were not specially novel for the most part, his volume certainly justifies its existence and in some respects coming events cast their shadows before in a manner which he did not fail to recognize. The many illustrations, though now becoming familiar, increase the reader's pleasure perceptibly.

REPRINTS.

Dr. John Fiske's admirable History of the American Revolution [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $8.00] is reissued with illustrations of a high class. Portraits, maps, pictures of contemporary scenery and other illustrations have been introduced, and the result is to make far more attractive a work already conceded the largest historical value. Nothing has been introduced merely to ornament the book, but its reproductions of historical paintings, portraits, seals, medals, monuments, antique furniture, etc., add not only to the sentimental but to the practical and substantial pre-eminence of such a work. Its attractions need only to be mentioned thus to be understood.

Another important historical reprint is Victor Duruy's History of France [T. Y. Crowell Co. $3.00] in two volumes, abridged and translated from the seventeenth French edition by Mrs. M. Cary. Prof. J. F. Jennison, Ph. D., also has supplied an introduction and has continued the work down to the present year. It has long been one of the most popular works of its class, and has earned its high favor by its trustworthiness and its excellent style. Doubtless it is the best among the shorter histories of France, and this edition, which contains nearly three score illustrations, will continue and increase its high repute.

Michael Angelo is one of those historic characters whom generation after generation holds in highest honor and whom, therefore, author after author feels impelled to describe. Among the works which this impulse has produced, one of the most deservedly celebrated is Herman Grimm's Life of Michael Angelo [Little, Brown & Co. $6.00], which Fannie E. Bunnett has translated and a new edition of which has just appeared, illustrated with many photogravure plates finely executed and exhibiting the masterly skill of the great artist. It has been a classic work of its kind for years and this edition is worthy of the subject.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A glance at Messrs. Roberts Brothers' dainty volume, Leaves from Juliana Horatia Ewing's "Canadian Home" [$3 00], which Elizabeth S. Tucker has compiled and which is enriched also by several water color drawings by Mrs. Ewing herself, would attract the reader quite apart from its subject, but the fact that Mrs. Ewing is its theme will cause hundreds to inquire for it and everybody will be delighted with it. It is a book of personal reminiscences and biographical facts, in which the lovely character of Mrs. Ewing and her unostentatious but sincere religious nature and her attractive personal qualities are revealed with successful fidelity. All who have delighted in her successful writings, and they must be all who have read them, will desire to put this volume beside those from her own pen on their shelves.

The Macmillan Company has sent us a most tempting edition of Izaak Walton's The Compleat Angler [$2 00], to which Andrew Lang has supplied an introduction and which E. J. Sullivan has illustrated. The book, of course, is a famous classic, and in the illustrations the artist has entered with wonderful success into the author's spirit and that of the period in which the book was written. We rarely, if ever, have seen illustrations more appropriate or more enjoyable than these. Mr. Lang's introduction is elaborate and discusses Walton himself, fishing and other themes entertainingly. The book should be a holiday favorite.

Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton's annual volume is before us, and she has chosen a felicitous subject, Famous Givers and Their Gifts [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50]. In her familiar entertaining manner and with her customary success in gathering and grouping facts she has described the personality and the benefactions of such philanthropists as John Lowell, Jr., Stephen Girard, Sophia Smith, Captain Thomas Coram, Philip D. Armour Cornelius Vanderbilt, Catherine L. Wolfe, Samuel Williston, William W. Corcoran and others. Her book has high value, not only for its facts but for its readableness, and also for the impulse which is given to every reader not only to admire generosity sincerely and intelligently but also to cultivate denial of self. It is illustrated with portraits of most of the persons described, and it is quite certain to be as popular widely as any of its dozen or more predecessors from the same pen.

The Popular Science Monthly has long been in the practice of publishing sketches of the lives and achievements of eminent scientists, and Dr. W. J. Youmans has compiled a number of these in a volume entitled Pioneers of Science in America [D. Appleton & Co. $4.00]. Benjamin Franklin, the elder Silliman, Audubon, Thomas Nuttall, S. F. B. Morse, Denison Olmstead, Joseph Henry Ericson, M. F. Morey, Louis Agassiz and many others are the subjects, and the successive chapters contain critical estimates of each career, impartial yet sympathetic and appreciative. Portraits are supplied, which help to make the characters real. Such a book is eagerly sought after by young men and exerts no small power in suggesting and guiding their careers, and this book is one of the most rewarding of its class.

The Present Distribution of Wealth in the United States [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1 50], by Dr. C. B. Spahr, comes at a timely hour when men of all parties are feeling that much of our domestic unrest is due to legislation that encourages the unequal distribution of wealth. The reader will find Mr. Spahr's convictions on some points influencing his interpretations of the meaning of certain facts. But, after due discount is made for this, he will still remain the author's debtor, for nowhere else have the statistics of this important economic problem been gathered together so comprehensively and scientifically. Under the heads of property, income and taxation, the author has grouped the latest domestic and foreign official information. Numerous appendices, and a full index add much to the value of the book as a tool.——Externals of Modern New York [A. S. Barnes & Co.], by Mrs. Burton Harrison, contains the twenty-first chapter of the second volume of the late Mrs. Martha J. Lamb's History of the City of New York. It is a detailed account of the modern city and its characteristic features, which is made the more clear by abundant and excellent pictures.

The Romance of Commerce [Crowell & Co. $1.25] is a book in which Mr. J. M. Oxley undertakes to bring out the brighter and more picturesque aspects of the world of trade. Many episodes certainly have occurred in history which deserve recognition for their imaginative and poetical side as truly as their commercial. Such was the famous tulip mania in Holland, as well as the long continued quest for the northwest passage; such has been the history of the Hudson's Bay Trading Company; and these and others Mr. Oxley has described carefully and entertainingly, and the result is a volume full of profound interest as well as instruction. Old and young alike will enjoy it.——The second volume of American Orations [Putnams. $1,25], edited by Professors Alexander Johnston and J. A. Woodburn, deals entirely with the anti-slavery struggle. It has been carefully revised and includes some new material. Orations by Rufus King, William Pinckney, Wendell Phillips, John Quincy Adams, Charles Sumner, Calhoun, Webster and Clay compose it, and Professor Johnston has supplied a very valuable introduction on the general subject.

A Second Century of Charades [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00], by William Bellamy, appears to be the sequel to his former book in the same line. The contents are in verse and a key is included. The poetry necessarily yields a little sometimes to the requirements of the charade, but serves as an agreeable medium of communication and concealment together. The author's first book was successful, and this one also is enough to keep a keen mind acutely at work for a long time.——Mr. Herbert Ingalls, author of The Boston Charades, also makes his second appearance with The Columbian Prize Charades [Lee & Shepard. $1.00]. His verse is sufficiently good for the occasion, and the offer of ten prizes by his publishers for correct solutions will stimulate eager rivalry in guessing the answers of his eight-score puzzles.——Miss Katharine I. Sanford, author of the third volume, A New Book of Charades [James T. White. 50 cents], is a new author, but her work is quite the equal, at the least, of either of the others. Its fifty-two charades are clothed in poetry, the frequent gracefulness of which, as well as a pleasant adroitness and aptness of expression, are noticeable features. A distinguishing peculiarity of this book is the fact that the answers, instead of being either omitted or revealed openly, are concealed in anagrams, which adds much to the interest of the guesser.

NOTES.

—— The Magazine of Art announces an increase in its size by the addition of sixteen pages to each issue.

—— The Expositor is soon to start a distinctively American edition, and The Critic Company announces a new magazine, The Month.

—— Prof. William M. Sloane of Princeton, author of the life of Napoleon which has just been finished in the Century, is invited to the Seth Low professorship of history at Columbia College.

—— It was Dr. Edward Hazen Parker, and not Dr. Edward Haven Jackson, as we said two weeks ago, who wrote the lines inscribed on President Garfield's tomb, beginning, "Life's work well done."

—— The Boston Public Library has received the gift from the family of the late George Ticknor of Mr. Ticknor's handsome mahogany library desk-table accompanied by seventy-two volumes of old engravings.

—— Booksellers are said to be aware of a growing demand for books about natural history and country life. This is something to be thankful for, but such a demand cannot be very novel. Is its increase due to the bicycle?

—— Current Literature says that George Macdonald is seventy-six years old, R. D. Blackmore is seventy-five, George Meredith and Mrs. Oliphant sixty-eight, Miss Braddon fifty-nine, Sir Walter Besant fifty-eight, Ouida fifty-six and William Black fifty-five.

—— Capt. A. T. Mahan, who has just resigned from the United States navy, intends to devote himself to literature. His work on The Influence of Sea Power upon History has made him famous and very few other living American authors are so honored abroad.

—— The London publishers have been giving their opinions about book reviews and seem to estimate them sensibly, as is natural. They agree that a thoughtful notice by a writer who understands the subject is of instant and very great help to a book. Nothing else is.

—— The Superintendent and Teacher, though only about one year old, has become an influential Sunday school journal. It discusses live topics in live and attractive ways and has had in every number many helpful suggestions. It owes much of its success to its managing editor, Mr. F. P. Shumway, whose connection with it ends with the December number.

—— The Chiswick Press was founded by the Whittingham family, which, as The Publishers' Weekly remarks, "served its art as loyally in London as did Aldus and the Didots, Plantin and the Elzevirs, in Venice and in Paris, at Antwerp and at Amsterdam." The Grolier Club recently held an exhibition of its productions. It has done a great deal to promote the appreciation of really artistic books.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Dec. 20–26. The Joys that Were Born Into the World with Christ. Luke 2: 8–20.

This old world was not altogether a stranger to happiness before Christ came, but he quickened susceptibility to enjoyment, made more evident its exhaustless sources and added new and peculiar joys due to him alone. If we are to generalize we may perhaps sum up what may be termed distinctively Christian joys under three heads.

First, the joy of living. Christ's coming down to the plane of earthly life, passing through every phase from babyhood to manhood, thereby identified himself with all the phases and experiences of life. If the King of heaven considered it worth while to live the life of earth, it must be because he considered the earthly life itself valuable and rewarding to every one who lives it aright. Nor was his an exceptional career. He did not fence himself about from the attacks of enemies, from the daily routine, from the hard and disagreeable experiences involved in the mere fact of being alive, from pain and physical weariness, from mental travail, from temptation and all the changing moods of the spiritual life. Yet his was pre-eminently a joyous life, for he knew how to draw upon fountains, the waters of which always run bright and clear.

To Christ, especially, we owe the joy of loving. This, to be sure, is a universal passion of the heart, but Jesus showed men how to love not intensely only, but sympathetically, unselfishly. He lifted love from the plane of animal feeling into the celestial region, and the beloved disciple echoes his Master's thought in saying, "Every one that loveth is born of God." Jesus by his revelation of the Father showed that love is at the heart of this universe, and that all our human affections are grounded in the love that was from the beginning and was manifested unto us.

The joy of serving comes into clear view with the advent of Jesus,

A servant with this clause makes drudgery divine.

Before he came, to be sure, fidelity to duty and generous deeds were exhibited in many a place throughout the world, but the precepts and, above all, the example of Christ throw a great flood of light upon the whole matter of doing for others. We learn the reason why—that it is because they are our brothers; we learn the object—that it is to help them to be Godlike; we learn the method—that it is by tact and patience and forbearance. More than all, we lay hold of the motive which is to sustain us when the objects of our service are ungrateful and unresponsive. That motive is summed up in the words, "As I have loved you."

Parallel verses: Ps. 8; John 16: 24; Eph. 6: 6, 7, 8; Col. 3: 23, 24; 1 John 3: 1, 18; 1 John 4: 7, 8.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, DEC. 4.

Mrs. Austin Phelps presided and, after reading Acts 20: 16–38, alluded to Mr. Moody's anticipated visit to Boston and to the work which may be accomplished, provided Christians in the various churches with renewed consecration co-operate with him. She then spoke of Paul, her own "special hero in the New Testament."

In connection with prayer for the "unconfessed Christians in Japan," Mrs. Brown of Harpoot brought a message from Mrs. De Forest of Japan, with an extract from a recent letter from Dr. De Forest, illustrating the needs of this class in that country. Mrs. Brown also reported Harpoot and its vicinity as comparatively quiet.

Miss Kyle gave other messages from Japan in letters from Miss Adams of Okayama and Miss Case of Osaka, showing great encouragement in work among the women. Mrs. Smith of Ahmednagar, expecting to sail within a few days for her home in India, in a familiar way carried her audience along with her from house to house. She showed how she gains the sympathy and confidence of the women and then tells them the old, old story.

Miss Child gave a message from the Misses Ely, now in this country, a request for prayer that the way may soon open for them to return to their beloved work in Bitlis.

The Burglar Who Moved Paradise

By HERBERT D. WARD

A newly-married couple's strange and funny experiences: they begin at the supreme moment of the proposal: in the midst of the wedding: on the honeymoon and in their search for a home. Beautifully illustrated, this new novel begins in the Christmas Ladies' Home Journal.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

A Western pastor writes: "I am holding a two weeks' series of meetings, at which in the simplest, quietest and most direct way I can, I am pointing out the privileges of Christian living. There is 'no machinery' and 'no process' at these meetings, but the attendance averages about 200, and I can see a deepening purpose to make the work this winter tell." We congratulate this pastor upon finding a form of evangelism suited to his people. The membership of his church represents largely the intellectual and cultivated classes, who have numerous social engagements and who might, perhaps, not be disposed to respond to what is technically known as revival efforts. We believe that in many churches there can come about this winter a perceptible deepening of spiritual life and it behooves pastors and officers to study their own parishes and then to adopt such measures as are likely to prove effective.

Probably no Congregational church in St. Louis has started out under more favorable auspices than the Fountain Park, with its able and earnest young pastor, attractive location, generous equipment and fine constituency. May it be equal to its opportunity and prove indeed a new stronghold of the Christian faith.

The success of that Boys' Brigade in Oregon in binding its members to the church and through them interesting the parents will encourage similar efforts elsewhere. The San Francisco pastor, too, who secures a weekly hearing in the Sunday school, evidently believes in sweetening the stream at the fountain.

It seems a pity that our denomination should allow the sacrifice of a church property in Omaha, worth $20,000, for lack of the use of $4,000 or $5,000 for a few years on good security and with every prospect of repayment.

Cleveland churches believe thoroughly in an educational supplement to their regular work. So do other churches—but not many of them have undertaken so extensive a work as these Interior leaders in the field.

We commend the Business Men's Class in Kansas City to the attention of pastors who deplore the scarcity of men in their congregations.

HONORS TO A WORTHY WOMAN.

Rev. C. M. Geer begins his second year as pastor of the First Church in Danvers Center with a hopeful outlook. The historic church, now nearly 225 years old, brooks no "dead line." Seventy years ago the late Dr. M. P. Braman brought a bride to his new field of labor, and the ladies of the benevolent society, in whose organization in 1832 Mrs. Braman took an active part and was its first president, recently recognized the occasion by sending her a gift of flowers and a beautiful gold-lined silver fruit dish. The bearers of the gift were Rev. Mr. Geer and Dr. and Mrs. Rice. Mrs. Braman, just on the verge of her 92d birthday, welcomed the visitors with her old-time courtesy, and with remarkable vivacity recalled many incidents which occurred during her 35 years among the people whom she holds in unfading memory. In the home of her son in Auburndale she receives many callers, who esteem it a privilege to meet the saintly woman. After Dr. Braman's death, Dr. C. B. Rice, a recent graduate from the Bangor Seminary, was called to the First Church. A successful pastorate of 30 years followed, which he resigned to become secretary of the Ministerial Board of Pastoral Supply. Mr. Geer, a graduate of Hartford Seminary, came to his people fresh from his studies in Germany, and the hearty support of church and parish have been given to him. The Maple Street Church, organized in 1844, a worthy daughter of the mother church, has been under the efficient care of Rev. E. C. Ewing the past 13 years. One of the interesting features of the Sunday school is a large class of about 70 men. Mr. G. W. Fisk is the superintendent. A home department has been organized recently.

AN ILLINOIS COUNCIL.

William Horace Day was recognized as pastor of the First Church, Aurora, Dec. 1. The council was large and representative. The seminary and many of the Chicago churches sent delegates. The sermon was preached by Prof. W. D. McKenzie. The public exercises were largely attended. Mr. Day has recently returned from a two years' residence in Germany, where he enjoyed unusual advantages for study. Previously he had served as assistant pastor of the New England Church, Chicago, having charge of its Sedgewick Street Mission, where he was successful. As the son of Dr. W. F. Day, so long pastor of the First Church, Ottawa, now of Los Angeles, Cal., he has become familiar with the region in which the duties of his pastorate are to be discharged and is among the friends of his boyhood. The examination of the candidate was eminently satisfactory. Accepting the creed of 1883 as the expression of his doctrinal views, his answers to questions put by members of the council showed familiarity with modern thought and at the same time gave evidence of soundness in the principles held by our evangelical churches.

BOSTON YOUNG MEN ALIVE TO WORK.

The second meeting of the newly organized Young Men's Club of Boston met to the number of about 70 the evening of Dec. 2 at Hotel Brunswick. The organization from the outset has developed a special interest in making itself practically valuable to the denomination in its vicinity, and appropriately to the suggestions given in the addresses of the initiatory evening the young men at their second gathering probed into the important subject: Our Denominational Problems, and were led in their consideration of the sub-topics (a) National, by Rev. G. M. Boynton, D. D., and (b) Local, Rev. H. A. Bridgman. The first speaker took a broad view of the denomination in its polity, comity and evangelization as a national body, and the second address reviewed the nearer problems such as can be reached to a large extent by the new club in its own locality. Some excellent suggestions were enumerated and the meeting throughout was one calculated to assist the planning of active efforts. At the close of the formal addresses a brief period of discussion ensued. It was voted to accept an invitation to be represented in the Municipal League of the city and also to send a congratulatory message to Dr. R. S. Storrs on the 50th anniversary of his pastorate in Brooklyn. Rev. H. G. Hale, pastor of the new Leyden Church, Brookline, was a guest of the evening and acted as chaplain. Fifteen applications for membership were received.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Andover.

The Monday evening class in English Literature meeting with President Harris has begun the study of Tennyson.——On Dec. 1 Mr. B. E. Ray gave an interesting report of the American Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance.——A class in singing has been started under the instruction of Mr. Georg Fresé. ——Rev. J. W Buckham of Salem preached Nov. 28. ——Professor Taylor is seminary preacher for December.

Hartford.

At the missionary meeting last Wednesday afternoon Dr. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, formerly of Berlin, Germany, gave a suggestive talk on the Inner Mission of Germany, dwelling especially on the work of training "deaconesses," and caring for destitute laborers and tramps in the "labor colonies."—— Professor Beardslee has begun his Middle Year elective course on The Person of Christ and Professor Hartranft his course on the Biblical Theology of the Post-Exilian Prophets.——Milton N. Frantz, who graduated from the seminary last year and has been taking post-graduate studies, has received a call to Hampton, Mass., and will immediately begin his pastoral work.

Yale.

The Senior address before the school last Wednesday by Frederick Lynch on Character the Ground of Service was thoughtful and suggestive.——G E. Ladd was the Senior Class preacher on Saturday. ——The subject of the Leonard Bacon Club was: Resolved, That the influence of the realistic school of literature is harmful.——Last week papers were read before the Biblical Club on Maccabees and before the Political Science Club on The Negro Question.——The Civil Service Reform Club was addressed on Wednesday evening of last week by Hon. Theodore Roosevelt of New York ——The Christmas recess will extend from Dec. 23 to Jan. 5.

Chicago.

Members of two advanced divisions in Hebrew are preparing essays on Isa. 40–66, with respect to introduction, historical setting, theological teaching and divine character of the book.——An almost weekly series of councils for ordination, installation and for recognition of churches in Chicago and vicinity has made heavy demands on the faculty.——Monday night the Mission Band gave a reception to the student volunteers.——Dr. M. P. Parmelee of Trebizond addressed the students Friday noon. Saturday afternoon Mr. Abraham Bisno of the Socialistic Labor party addressed the Inter-Seminary Economic Club at the Chicago Commons on The Co-operative Commonwealth.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

WIS.—Winnebago District Convention met in Seymour, Rev. C. W. Damon, pastor, Nov. 30-Dec. 1, with good attendance. The sermon was preached by Rev. Josiah Beardsley, home missionary addresses were made by Sec. H. W. Carter and district missionary F. N. Dexter. The topics were: The Aggressive Pulpit and the Aggressive Pew, What Is Self-Consecration? The Baptism of the Holy Spirit and The Effect of the Family Altar in Individual Christian Life. The convention closed with an able sermon by Prof. E. H. Merrell.

CLUBS.

N. Y.—The Central New York Club met in Syracuse, at Plymouth Church, Dec. 6. The addresses were: Vacation Days in Palestine, by Rev. F. S. Fitch; The Pilgrim Shrines of England and Holland, by Rev. W. E. Park, and an address by Rev. N. M. Calhoun of Keuka College.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

CHELSEA.—Third. Rev. S. M. Cathcart was ordained as pastor last week. The council examined and approved the candidate in the afternoon and interesting exercises occurred in the evening. Dr. W. L. Phillips of New Haven preached the sermon and Dr. A. H. Plumb offered the prayer. The pastors of sister churches in the city and others participated. Mr. Cathcart is a graduate of Yale Divinity School, and has already been working with the church for a short time. The prospect is excellent for aggressive work, and the membership is united under a strong and energetic leader.

MEDFIELD —Rev. N. T. Dyer, who has been called to the First Church, Ashburnham, will find it a hard task to leave his people. He and they have stood together through a severe persecution in consequence of his firm stand against a liquor nuisance in the town. The church has unanimously requested him to withdraw his resignation, and many of the congregation have promised to double their subscriptions if he will stay with them.

SALEM —Tabernacle held its 10th annual reunion Dec. 4 with a large attendance. Reports showed all departments to be in a flourishing condition. The church and S. S. memberships are the largest in their history. Deacon J. H. Phippen resigned as treasurer of the church after 35 years of service, during which time more than $74,000 has passed through his hands to various charitable objects. Dr. W. A. Farnsworth of Cæsarea, Turkey, was a welcome guest.

LOWELL.—First. The adjourned meeting of the council was held Dec. 2, continuing nine hours with an intermission of one hour. On the conclusion of the records and statements made by the party calling the council the other side presented a statement prepared by the six deacons and three other members of the standing committee. This statement had been prepared by vote of the so called Trinitarian Church, but had not been submitted to the First Church for official indorsement. Rev. George F. Kenngott presented a number of documents which he wished to have considered, and made a brief statement of his own action during the controversy and of his present position. A long address was made by the chairman of the trustees of the incorporated Trinitarian Church. The council went into private session, but owing to the many matters before them for consideration adjourned for two weeks without taking any formal votes.

FOXBORO has had a red letter day lately in the centennial celebration of its existence. The history of 100 years has been such as to be reviewed with pleasure. Many visitors from neighboring and distant places gathered, and former pastors were welcomed on their return to the old parish. One of them, Rev. M. B. Angier, gave the historical address. Other speakers spoke briefly in a reminiscent style. The many changes which have occurred in the membership and meeting houses were alluded to, and special rededication services were held not long since after the many recent renovations and additions. A bountiful collation was one of the features of the anniversary program. Rev. J. W. Flagg is pastor.

WORCESTER.—Dr. Elijah Horr read a paper before the Ministers' Meeting last week on Revivals, Their Philosophy and Methods.—Union. Dr. J. E. Tuttle began his work as pastor, Nov. 27, much to the delight of the congregation. The people still worship in the chapel waiting for the church edifice to be finished.—Pilgrim. The Men's Association held a fellowship meeting Dec. 3. It was ladies' night and over 200 persons sat down to the banquet. Representatives of the various men's organizations in churches of the city were present and spoke of their work.—Lake View. Poor health is the cause of the resignation of Rev. J. E. Dodge. He will continue to reside in Worcester for the present.

Maine.

FARMINGTON.—Rev. E. R. Smith has been preaching on Church Institutions. He is assisted in pastoral work by a church "council," composed of heads of departments, who meet with him each month. The choir, under the direction of Professor Stockbridge of Portland, is a great help and steadily improving. A contribution of $40 toward the A. M. A. debt has been given by five churches in the vicinity.

ELLSWORTH.—The pastor, Rev. D. L. Yale, has invited all the pastors and S. S. superintendents of Hancock County to a free conference on the efficiency of Bible study and S. S. work generally.

Skowhegan and Calais have been deeply stirred lately by revivals, the former being aroused more than ever before, and the latter witnessing 600 persons resolve for new lives.—A fair in Freeport secured $115 —Services have been held successfully in the vestry of the new house in Ashland, and progress is noted on Little Deer Isle's building.—South Berwick has a monthly teachers' meeting for study, which is of great value.—Kennebunk's benevolences increased $100 last year.

New Hampshire.

CONCORD.—South chapel is nearly finished. It cost about $15,000 and is one of the finest in the State, with all the modern conveniences. On the upper floor is an audience-room for the weekly prayer meetings and social purposes, a ladies' parlor, the pastor's study and the S. S. library. The finish is in the best Georgia pine extending to the roof and presents a handsome appearance. The basement includes a kitchen with all its needed accessories and a dining-room capable of seating 300 at the tables. The work affords fine facilities for the accomplishment of distinctive ends.

LITTLETON.—For the first time since its organization in 1803, the church has published a manual sketching the past religious condition of the town and its own present force. The edifice now used was built in 1834. No pastor was settled till 1820, when the membership was but 35, a gain of only 25 for 17 years. During its history about 700 have been connected with it. The present membership is 234. Twenty-one ministers have served the church for longer or shorter periods, of whom 10 have been settled pastors. The present pastor is Rev. J. H. Hoffman.

Vermont.

WATERFORD.—Union was organized with 24 members Nov. 6. Seventeen members came on confession. Rev. Edward Fairbanks, D. D., preached the sermon. The new body is the outgrowth of work begun here two years ago by the young lady evangelists. There was a union meeting house here, but there had never been any church and for years past little religious work.

RUTLAND.—A Men's Congregational Club has been lately organized in the church under the leadership of the assistant pastor, with the threefold object—to promote Bible study by a half-hour's session each Sunday, to secure better acquaintance among the members and to stimulate good citizenship by informal discussions upon topics of present day interest.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Highland. An Armenian service was held on Sunday evening, Nov. 29, at which an Armenian pastor spoke and the collection was for the Orphanage Fund of The Congregationalist.—Pilgrim. The S. S. collection, Nov. 29, was given for The Congregationalist's Orphanage Fund, the amount being $50. The C. E. Society is busy with the dollar disks for collection to the general Armenian fund, having already sent $25. By request of the Men's Club, Prof. C. F. Kent of Brown University gave an address on a recent Sunday evening on The Message of the Book of Jonah, according to the higher criticism.

Connecticut.

STAMFORD.—Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher is quite ill at the home of her daughter, the wife of Rev. Samuel Scoville. A short time ago, in leaving her bed, she slipped and fell, striking her head on the floor and rendering her unconscious. She was found in this condition some time later. She is slowly improving and hopes to be removed to her home in Brooklyn shortly.

MERIDEN.—Center. The members and people attending this church raised $8,800 a week ago Sunday on a debt of $10,000 recently contracted in making extensive repairs. It is expected to raise the remaining $1,200 before Jan. 1. Rev. J. H. Grant is the recently installed pastor.

SOUND BEACH.—A council of the churches of the Fairfield Southwest Conference held last week found the church in a prosperous condition religiously and financially, and voted to recognize it.

The West Cornwall chapel is undergoing general cleaning and repairing, and now has a new heater.——The meeting houses in Canton Center and Westport have been reshingled.——The women of the Deep River church cleared about $90 at a recent fair.——The Sharon edifice will be equipped with electric lights.——Special efforts in which Miss M. B. Lord assisted at Higganum resulted in 20 conversions.——The Danielson pastors have held a preliminary meeting in advance of special meetings to be arranged.——Simsbury at its recent sale of seats realized $2,000, and Kensington, through the efforts of two persons, has secured $730, which covers its debt by more than $150.——The women of Elmwood sent a barrel valued at $70 lately to the Wyoming frontier, and those of Stafford Springs a box valued at $110 to Georgia.——The Norfolk Sunday school superintendent, Miss Eldridge, has arranged a free trip for the whole school to New Haven.——The King's Daughters of Thomaston recently raised $80 for the church debt, and those of Suffield $68 for church repairs.

CLEVELAND.—Plymouth has opened its Winter Night College with an enrollment of about 150 and with every promise of a successful year. The college meets weekly. Brief opening devotional exercises are held and then the company breaks up into circles for an hour's study, after which all come together again for a brief program of miscellaneous exercises, arranged by the different circles in turn. The subjects of circle study this year are sociology, electricity, English literature, current topics, French, history of Christianity, mechanical drawing and hygiene. The fee for membership is 25 cents. The term covers 20 weeks, and the leaders serve without compensation. The plan has proved itself to be thoroughly practical, and it is admirably adapted to many churches which are not so situated as to engage in more extensive and varied lines of so-called institutional work.—Pilgrim. The institute opens with enthusiasm. About 375 are enrolled in its classes, among which are French, German, music, penmanship, gymnasium, and in the fine arts, travel and municipal affairs clubs. The sewing school, kitchen garden and kindergarten enroll about 475 children. A special class in Bible study, led by Prof. Henry C. King of Oberlin College, had an attendance of nearly 200 on the opening night, Nov. 19. Professor King also leads a class of about 200 members once a week at the Woodland Avenue Presbyterian Church.

CHICAGO.—Last week Sunday night this church, the 74th in the city, was received into fellowship at the Sedgwick Street Chapel of the New England Church, which they have recently presented to the Chicago City Missionary Society. The property is valued at $12,000. This latest church, named St. James, uses the German language, and has called Rev. Nicholas Bolt, formerly of St. Paul, as pastor. It is situated amid the densest German population

A Group of Little Men Photographed from Life in Apparel Purchased in

MESSRS. A. SHUMAN & CO.'S

Juvenile Outfitting Parlor.

We are constantly originating novelties in fetching apparel in which it is such a delight to array little men, and we beg to call attention, for example, to the styles shown in the above group, viz.:

Figure 1, representing our Single Breasted Reefing Jacket; 2, Sailor; 3, The Marlborough Reefer; 4, Double Breasted Reefer with Sailor Collar; 5, Middy Reefer; 6, Double Cape Overcoat; 7, Middy Reefer; 8, Sailor; 9, Creedmoor; 10, Nautical; 11, Tuxedo; 12, Eton; 13, Vestee; 14, Eton with Silk Vest.

Our Juvenile department, where these natty and stylish children's garments are shown, with its cosey appointments, its picture gallery of children who have been clothed therein, its magnificent oil paintings and its facilities for convenience and comfort, make it a favorite resort for mothers in search of Juvenile apparel

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

In general trade there is a fair volume moving. The holiday season bids fair to be an active one, but no great business revival is looked for until after New Year's. Unseasonable or very severe weather in the South and Northwest has checked the movement of merchandise in those sections. Dry goods job less actively and the demand for shoes has suffered some diminution. The wool market is more quiet, manufacturers buying stock only as it is needed. On the other hand, the woolen mills report the receipt of very fair orders for spring delivery, and many mills have increased the number of hands or are working on full time.

In iron and steel the prospects are less satisfactory, the collapse of the steel pool, or combination, being feared. Prices in this branch of trade are easier, especially on nails, because of the dissolution of the trust in that staple. Bessemer pig iron has declined fifteen cents per ton and tin plate prices are being cut. Hides have unexpectedly weakened, although leather keeps pretty strong. Wheat is the great staple that maintains a strong front in the face of everything and even shows advancing tendencies. But this is not strange when the failure of the wheat crop in other lands is considered and the heavy demand which is being and will continue to be made upon the American supply. Bank clearings for the whole country last week showed the heavy gain of thirty-four per cent. over the previous week, due to holiday trade and to the usual December disbursements.

in Chicago. The membership is 50. A few days before an English-speaking church was recognized in the same building with a membership of 81, and Rev. L. A. Townsend was installed pastor. The chapel in which these churches were organized is used on Sunday for a succession of services and Sunday schools in German and English from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M.

TOULON celebrated its 50th anniversary Nov. 29. Rev. G. A. Francis is pastor. This is a substantial, steadfast church. The second half-century of its existence begins with courage and hope. A fitting feature of the celebration was an extra home missionary offering.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Mayflower ladies have held a successful Christmas sale for three days, netting about $200.——South Side. Special services are in progress, with growing interest and attendance.——Brightwood. The Y. P. S. C. E. is engaged in a series of musical and literary entertainments, which take the place of the old-time sociable.——At the annual meeting of the city benevolent society an immense congregation gathered. Dr. J. A. Rinthaler of Chicago made the principal address. About $8,000 were raised.

Michigan.

BIG ROCK.—This is the first church building erected in Michigan's widest and most scattered parish, which contains three organizations with an aggregate of 91 members, worshiping in eight schoolhouses, widely distributed and all under the nurturing care of Rev. Stephen Vaughan, who is doing a self-sacrificing work in a hard field. The new church building has cost about $1,200 and has been dedicated almost free of debt

DETROIT pastors held their monthly meeting at Hotel Ste. Claire, Nov. 30. Each pastor was to respond to his name in a five-minute talk on what had interested him most during the month. Difficulties and encouragements in pastoral work, notes on books and current happenings supplied enough matter for interesting conversation. Dinner was served and an enjoyable evening spent

Almont has given $32 to home missions.——Lewiston has had a revival resulting in 70 reported conversions and 12 additions.——Bay City has been helped and renewed by the recent Bible conferences in town.

KANSAS CITY.—First. A class of business men, formed early in the fall, to study the relations of church and society, had such interesting discussions that they have been transferred to Sunday evening, in place of the regular service at present. They take the character of lectures on applied Christianity, by leading business and professional men of the city. They are largely attended.——Olivet. The promise of a $2,000 loan from the C. C. B. S. gives encouragement in the struggle for a building.

ST. LOUIS.—Compton Hill. Judge H. H. Dennison, an old and prominent member and father of Rev. R. C. Dennison, now supplying the pulpit, died of apoplexy Dec. 2.——People's Tabernacle. The pastor, Rev. William Johnson, and Rev. Firth Stringer of Reber Place Church are conducting revival services.

Iowa.

NEWBURG, now 16 years of age, has its first house of worship. In all these years the services have been held in a schoolhouse. The new edifice seats comfortably 200 and cost about $3,000. It was dedicated Nov. 22, free of debt, no aid having been received from the C. C. B. S. At the morning service Secretary Douglass assisted in raising $660 needed to pay the last bills and $100 were quickly raised for a bell. Rev. R. F. Lavender is pastor.

Minnesota.

ROCHESTER held its eighth annual banquet and thank offering, Nov. 20. It was in charge of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, but all the church participated. Rev. Henry Faville gave a stimulating address. The offering, over $60, represents but a small part of the value of such an occasion, uniting as it does the social, intellectual and missionary life of the church. Rev. J. F. Taintor is pastor.

CAMPBELL has received the gift of a 1,000 pound bell, has liquidated some of its indebtedness, received helpful families and is holding a series of meetings, with conversions. Meetings have also been held at the out-station, Tintah, which have strengthened its religious life.

Union evangelistic meetings have been conducted at Winona for three weeks by Evangelist C. N Hunt with good results.

Kansas.

KANSAS CITY.—State Evangelist Veazie conducted special union services Nov. 8–15, with excellent spiritual results. In recognition of this service $50 were contributed to the C. H. M. S. Mr. Veazie began services at Sabetha Nov. 16, and from there will go to Oneida. In January he will conduct services at Sycamore, Labette County, and union meetings in Carbondale.

Nebraska.

OMAHA.—Plymouth. The loss of the church property, valued at $20,000, and the disbanding of the church are threatened by the foreclosure of a mortgage of $7,500, only $2,700 of which the people are able to raise at this time.——The Congregational pastors and officers have entered upon a movement to promote greater fellowship and co-operation in Christian work. Upon invitation of Rev. Jacob Flook, 22 of them gathered in the parlors of Hillside Church Nov. 19. They will meet with First Church on Forefathers' Day.

LINCOLN.—Vine Street. Rev. A. F. Newell was warmly welcomed by a large congregation Nov. 29. He had been absent nearly six months and was gratified to find that all departments of work had been maintained efficiently during his absence. He is now so far recovered from his serious accident as to be able to resume work. A reception was tendered him by the congregation Dec. 4, at the home of Superintendent Bross. Rev. G. J. Buck, who has been supplying here, will engage in evangelistic work.

WILCOX.—Rev. G. W. Murphy of Wallace has been assisting Rev. W. H. Le Bar in special meetings for 10 days. The interest was deep and pervasive, and a number of hopeful conversions resulted. Several persons who held church letters are also ready to become members and engage in Christian work.

ARCADIA had a happy communion service Nov. 29. Ten persons, all adults, and representing eight different families, were received to membership on confession. The church, which heretofore has lost by removals, especially welcomes these accessions.

H. M. rallies are the order of the day. Mrs. Caswell has been visiting the Omaha churches, making addresses at First, Hillside and St. Mary's Avenue. ——At Vine Street Church, Lincoln, the offering, always generous, exceeded that of any previous

If you cannot get a Bicycle, you can get a Scroll Saw, which is better. The one means pleasure, the other business. The one a continuous outgo, the other a continuous income. The Bicycle sends the boy abroad, the Saw keeps him at home. They are both alike good exercise. If a boy wants a Scroll Saw, it is a sign that he can use it to advantage. We have the names of many thousands who have turned these saws to great profit during the past fifteen years. Give an ingenious boy the tools and he will see to all the rest. We sell the best foot-power saw (called the No. 1 Rogers) with Drilling attachment, Blower, Tools and Designs, for $3.50. The Goodell Lathe, as seen in the above cut, costs $12, with Scroll Saw Attachment, and all necessary tools and designs. We are now the headquarters for all things in the scroll-sawing line, including Foot and Hand Machines, Star Saw Blades, Designs of every kind, Wood, Clock Movements, etc. Send money for what you want, or buy from hardware dealers

BOSTON SUPERINTENDENTS' UNION.

The gathering last Monday evening was the annual meeting, and a noticeably large attendance responded to the call. President Hathaway was in the chair. The business session resulted in the election of Mr. J. W. Brown, president; Mr. A. D. Dimick, vice-president; Mr. C. N. Goodrich, secretary; and Mr. T. W. Travis, treasurer. The general attention which the broadened scope of Sunday school work demands and receives today was the theme of a suggestive paper by Prof. W. A. Mowry, Ph. D., whose activities as an educator especially fitted him to instruct the union as to an enlarged work.

RODMAN—In Wellesley, Mass., Nov. 29, Rev. D. S. Rodman. He was ordained in 1849 and from that time until 1854 was pastor of the church in Cheshire, Ct. He was one of the charter members of the Congregational church at Montclair, N. J., and was active in the preparation of its articles of faith, covenant and rules of order.

A CHRISTMAS OPPORTUNITY.—The time of all the year for the purchase of an easy-chair is at hand. The Paine Furniture Co. name special prices during the three weeks preceding Christmas, and they are the lowest prices of the year. The full leather library chair, which they offer in another column at $19, would be cheap at any other season at $25.

THE publishers of the People's Bible History state that more than $100,000 was expended by them before the volume was completed and ready for the public, and that this large expenditure does not represent the cost of paper, binding and other incidentals connected with the actual material production of the work, but the sum required in accumulating the material. The list of contributors is a long and noted one, including Hon. W. E. Gladstone, who framed the introduction comprising some eighteen pages, Dr. Lorimer of Tremont Temple, Boston, and many other most able thinkers and students. An attractive announcement in another column gives a full description of the book, together with a list of contributors.

MORE curative power is contained in a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla than in any other similar preparation. It costs the proprietor and manufacturer more. It costs the jobber more and it is worth more to the consumer. It has a record of cures unknown to any other preparation. It is the best to buy because it is the One True Blood Purifier.

HOOD'S PILLS are the best family cathartic and liver medicine. Gentle, reliable, sure.

Keep up hope. There are thousands of cases where recovery from Consumption has been complete. Plenty of fresh air and a well-nourished body will check the progress of the disease. Nutritious foods are well in their way, but the best food of all is Cod-liver Oil. When partly digested, as in Scott's Emulsion, it does not disturb the stomach and the body secures the whole benefit of the amount taken. If you want to read more about it let us send you a book.

Peter Möller's Cod Liver Oil, always of the highest standard of quality, is now prepared by a new process, whereby the Oil is kept from atmospheric contact from the beginning of the process of manufacture until it is safely corked up in bottles, thus preventing contamination of any kind and excluding all impurities.

Give this new Oil a trial. Ask for Peter Moller's Oil and see that the bottle -- a flat, oval one -- bears our name as agents. Notice the date in perforated letters at bottom of the label.

year.——At Albion the kindergarten department made a special offering to the children's work of the society, and the total collections of the day far exceeded expectation.——The church at West Point gave more liberally than ever before.——At Beatrice the auditorium was profusely decorated with flags. The pastor presented the work eloquently, the Sunday school poured out the contents of its birthday box for the cause and there was genuine enthusiasm throughout the day.——Chadron, West Point, Wisner, Crawford, Tremont and Exeter have also been visited recently by Mrs. Caswell and Superintendent Bross.

North Dakota.

FARGO.—First observed its 15th anniversary Nov. 29. The pastor reviewed the prominent events of the history of the church. An historical sketch by the clerk showed that it was organized with 23 members, and that more than 300 persons have been connected with it. Early struggles in getting a place of worship were recalled. Twice it was driven from halls because the saloons underneath wished to use them for drinking and gambling, then into the court house, until the chapel was built and became a home. In 1888 this was rendered useless by a storm, when the chapel at Fargo College offered shelter. Thence it removed to the fine brick edifice now occupied. The work of the various departments was set forth. Other features were a paper on the Relation of Congregationalism to Civil Government and an address on Its Relation to Education. Rev. J. F. Dudley, D. D., is the present pastor.

In the large section of country in Nelson and Grand Forks counties which was devastated by hail last summer the people are very poor and in many cases suffering. Especially was this the case during the terrible storm of Nov. 25–27. If any one who has second-hand clothing, especially for children, will send it, freight paid, to our missionaries there—Rev. U. G. Rich, Michigan City, and Rev. W. B. Cunningham, Niagara—he may be sure it will be distributed to needy persons, and that actual suffering will be relieved.

Montana.

BILLINGS.—After three years of efficient service Rev. P. B. Jackson has resigned. The whole community part with him with great reluctance. Under his ministrations the church has attained a degree of prosperity before unknown. The congregations have been marked by the presence of an unusual number of men. At the closing services, Nov. 23, the audience-room was filled to its utmost capacity, and the reception tendered him the following evening was the largest gathering of the kind the town has ever witnessed. Mr. Jackson expects to take a field in the South, for which region he is peculiarly adapted.

GREAT FALLS.—The work is being pushed with vigor by the new pastor, Rev. W. N. Moore. At his suggestion the church has resolved to make an annual contribution to each of the seven Congregational societies. A Congregational Club has also been formed, with the intention of fostering the social and literary spirit in the congregation. This club will take charge of the evening service once a month, a paper suitable to the occasion being read by one of its members.

Rev. Joseph Pope of Columbus includes within his field a large share of the ceded strip of the Crow Indian Reservation. Accompanied by Supt. W. S. Bell, he recently spent 10 days in this region visiting the seven different points where Sunday schools have been established, and where occasional preaching services are held. This region is being rapidly settled and presents a promising field, if only the means were at hand to cultivate it.

California.

EUREKA has entertained the Humboldt Association, consisting of seven churches. In connection therewith the pastor, Rev. Griffith Griffiths, held evangelistic services, Rev. Messrs. G. A. Jasper, A. S. Parsons and G. H. Merrill assisting him.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Third. German classes and a Chautauqua Circle are flourishing. The latter numbers 26 members. The pastor, Rev. William Rader, assists in the opening S. S. exercises, making a five-minute address.

Oregon.

PORTLAND.—Mississippi Avenue. Rev. H. W. Young has begun his fourth year. Since he came 68 members have been added to the church, 150 to the S. S. roll and a Junior C. E. S. has been organized. All other activities have had encouraging growth. While this is a mission field, the year closes with all bills paid.——Hassalo Street. The Woman's League devotes half its time and funds to ANY WOMAN CAN MAKE $100.

We want you to become interested in the best, most interesting, most instructive, handsomest woman's publication in America. It contains more matter, more interesting stories, more columns, more interesting departments, more good reading than any other publication of similar character. Its departments are most comprehensive, and cover all the topics that engage woman's attention. All our contents are original and protected by copyright. Our paper is the wonder and admiration of the publishing world. Our December issue is the finest ever published, and it required 125,000 copies to fill our paid subscription list. The yearly subscription price of

is $1.00, but in order to introduce into thousands of new homes, we offer to send a three months' trial subscription (which will include our beautiful illustrated and magnificent Christmas Double Number, a work of art in three colors) for only ten cents in silver or stamps. Just think of it! We give you in those three months

OVER 400 COLUMNS OF ENTERTAINMENT.

Of course the 10 cents is merely a nominal sum. It would hardly pay for one of the three numbers, to say nothing of the cost of this advertisement, but we know that when you see our paper you will want it right along, and will get your friends to subscribe. Then, again, as soon as we get your three months' subscription we will make you an offer whereby you can make $100 on a new plan in the easiest possible way. Don't overlook this part—in fact, it is this $100 proposition that encourages us to give you that trial subscription of three months for only ten cents. Only a limited number of offers for this $100 will be made, and you shouldn't delay your application. Our publication has been established ten years. Money back if you are not satisfied. We refer you to any mercantile agency or New York City bank for our standing. missionary purposes and the other half to the local church.——Sunnyside. Rev. J. J. Staub's Boys' Brigade now numbers 60 members and is a success. A reading-room has been provided and the father of one of the boys is arranging to put in a gymnasium. Nearly all the boys are regular attendants at church and Sunday school.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

A movement of significance is the proposal of the Student Volunteer Leagues of our metropolitan centers to co-operate with young people's societies in forming mission study classes and stimulating systematic giving. The plan has been successfully tried in New York and Philadelphia, and was inaugurated in Boston at People's Temple, Nov. 29, before 1,000 delegates from local societies. The Boston League contains eighty students who plan to become foreign missionaries, twenty of whom stand ready to speak on missions and to organize classes. Their aim is to use existing agencies and to encourage support of denominational boards and courses of study. The president of the Boston League may be addressed at the Y. M. C. A.

ACHING joints announce the presence of rheumatism which causes untold suffering. Rheumatism is due to lactic acid in the blood. It cannot be cured by liniments or other outward applications. Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, removes the cause of rheumatism and permanently cures this disease. This is the testimony of thousands of people who once suffered the pains of rheumatism, but who have actually been cured by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Its great power to act upon the blood and remove every impurity is the secret of the wonderful cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A Recent Testimonial.

SEPT. 20TH, 1896.

The Fruit Dish and Spoons reached us. We are more than pleased. It may interest you to know that Mrs. Brown who secured the order is 82 years old. MRS. E. W. BROWN, Dunmore, Pa.

You have certainly read the description of our Famous World's Fair Souvenir Full-size Teaspoons, advertised so extensively since the Fair closed, but unless you have SEEN THE SPOONS—unless you have handled them and personally examined their Matchless Elegance and rich, rare, artistic beauty, you positively cannot half realize what a Wonderful, Superb Bargain we are now offering. They have sold enormously. The delight and surprise occasioned upon their receipt has been testified to by Thousands upon Thousands of the Best People Everywhere—people who are leaders in Taste, Thought and Refinement.

Every visitor to the Fair knows that the price of these spoons on the Fair grounds was $1.50 apiece, or $9.00 for a set of six, or $18.00 for the entire collection of twelve different spoons, and here we sell you a set of six for only 99 cents. ∴ ∴ ∴

JUST THINK OF IT!

The spoons are divided into two different sets, as follows: SET No. 4 comprises these six buildings—Manufacturers, Horticultural, Woman's, Fisheries, Machinery Hall, Transportation. SET No. 5 comprises these six—Administration, Art, Agriculture, Electrical, Mining, Government. ∴ ∴ ∴

THE DEPARTURE OF THE PILGRIMS FROM DELFS-HAVEN, JULY, 1620

From a Contemporary Dutch Painting.

IN the next place, for the wholsome counsell Mr. Robinson gave that part of the Church whereof he was Pastor, at their departure from him to begin the great worke of Plantation in New Eng'and, amongst other wholsome Instructions and Exhortations, hee used these expressions, or to the same purpose; We are now ere long to part asunder, and the Lord knoweth whether ever he should live to see our faces again: but whether the Lord had appointed it or not, he charged us before God and his blessed Ange's, to follow him no further then he followed Christ. And if God should reveal anything to us by any other instrument of his, to be as ready to receive it, as ever we were to receive any truth by his Ministery: For he was very confident the Lord had more truth and light yet to breake forth out of his holy Word. . . . For, saith he, It is not possible the Christian world should come so lately out of such thick Antichristian darknesse, and that full perfection of knowledge should breake forth at once.—From Edward Winslow's Hypocrisie Unmasked, printed in 1646, in reply to charges made against the Colonies.

YOURS FOR 5 CENTS A DAY

A SUPERB REFERENCE WORK

treating over 60,000 topics (10,000 more than any other encyclopedia) covering the entire field of human knowledge, thought and endeavor, including THE ARTS, SCIENCES, PHILOSOPHY, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, GEOGRAPHY, ASTRONOMY, GEOLOGY, METEOROLOGY, NAVIGATION, EXPLORATION, DISCOVERY, AGRICULTURE, HORTICULTURE, COMMERCE, FINANCE, ETHNOLOGY, ZOÖLOGY, BOTANY, CHEMISTRY, PHYSIOLOGY, MINERALOGY, ELECTRICITY, THEOLOGY, LAW, MEDICINE, POLITICAL ECONOMY, STATISTICS, etc.

FRESH FROM THE PRESS

THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA is brought down to the present time, and contains hundreds of articles on subjects not treated in any other reference work. Another important feature in which it stands absolutely alone is its very full appendixes, which embrace over 100 subdivisions, including a BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, A DICTIONARY OF TECHNICAL TERMS, A GAZETTEER OF THE UNITED STATES, STATISTICS OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS, STATE AND TERRITORIAL ELECTIONS, RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES, STATISTICS OF THE POPULATION OF THE WORLD, AND A VERITABLE MINE OF OTHER INFORMATION ON THOUSANDS OF SUBJECTS OF UNIVERSAL INTEREST AND IMPORTANCE.

IT IS NOW THE STANDARD

With over 3,500 engravings of superb quality and wonderful variety, including numerous engravings of distinguished Poets, Authors, Physicians, Chemists, Philosophers and Scientists, and with over 300 colored maps and charts from the VERY LATEST EXPLORATIONS and SURVEYS, delineating Continents, Empires, Countries, States, Cities, Towns, Citadels, Solar, Lunar, and Planetary Systems, and every portion of the known world, and forming a Complete and Indexed Atlas of the globe. THE STANDARD AMERICAN is the best illustrated and the best mapped Encyclopedia in the English language.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER

Although the distribution was to close Dec. 1, we have decided to continue it to Christmas, since the peculiar fitness of the work as a holiday gift makes its introduction in this way most valuable to us.

To secure widespread and favorable publicity for THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, we have decided to place a few introductory sets in each community throughout the country for comparison with all other reference works as to plan, scope, lateness of treatment and general practical and educational value. We feel that every set will create a demand for others. While the distribution will be general in extent, it will last for a limited time only, after which our regular subscription sale will begin, at prices ranging from $48 to $72 a set, according to style of binding. Now, however, to quickly and thoroughly introduce the work, as above stated, we make the price merely nominal (about the cost of manufacture), the distribution to close Dec. 25 at latest, or sooner if we consider a sufficient number of these introductory sets to properly introduce the work at the special price has been distributed.

HOW TO SECURE ONE OF THESE SPLENDID SETS

SEND $1 to THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PUBLISHING CO., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and a full set of eight volumes of THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, in cloth binding, will be forwarded to you AT ONCE. The balance is payable at the rate of $1.50 monthly for one year, or about 5 cents a day. If you prefer the half morocco binding, the monthly payment will be $2.00, and for full sheep $2.50 per month for one year. We recommend the half morocco style, which is particularly elegant and serviceable, and will last a lifetime. If not as represented any set may be returned within ten days and money will be promptly refunded. Owing to the nominal price at which these introductory sets are supplied, the cost of sending must be paid by the purchaser, but our entire confidence that the volumes will be gladly received and cheerfully paid for is shown by sending a $48.00 set of books on an advance payment of only $1.00. Please indicate whether you wish the work shipped by freight or express. Freight is cheaper, but takes longer. We also feel that you will thoroughly appreciate this great work and speak favorably of it to others. Send 2-cent stamp for postage on 22-page illustrated pamphlet with sample pages, colored map and portraits of famous inventors. Address

AND OTHER POEMS.

—BY—

Henry Stevenson Washburn.

"Poems whose sweet simplicity and mellifluous meter are not their only charms."—N. Y. Observer.

"Mr. Washburn knows how to dignify and enrich common themes by the glow and the occasional sparkle of his verse."—Congregationalist.

"A volume of strong, earnest and tender poetry. One of the daintiest and most attractive of the poetry books of the year."—Boston Transcript.

"They are pre-eminently songs of the hearth and the wayside. The melody flows as the brook runs, limpid and rhythmic, without artifice."—Watchman.

"Its entire contents are flushed with the true song spirit. In many of the verses patriotism makes the words glow and the verses ring with spirit and force due to sincere and deep feeling."—Independent.

"Mr. Washburn has made his way most affectionately to the hearts of the American people. He has evidently been a zealous lover of nature and humanity, and so it is that he responds to both with such heart and soul that he easily captures the better side of life."—Pilot, Long Island, N. Y.

"The opening poem, the name of which appears on the title-page, is already as much of a classic as 'Home, Sweet Home,' and the other verses in the volume are characterized by sincerity of feeling and simplicity of style. They appeal with equal force to both the cultured and the uncultured, for they spring directly from the heart, and are the product of a sound intellectual development."—Sat. Eve. Gazette.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

The Bible as Literature. By Prof. RICHARD G. MOULTON, A. B. BRUCE, D. D., HENRY VAN DYKE, D. D., J. M. WHITON, Ph. D., Prof. JOHN F GENUNG, W. E. GRIFFIS, D. D., Prof. L. W. BATTEN, Ph. D., Prof. ALBERT P. COOK, and others. With an introduction by LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

One of the most important religious books of the year.

The Gospel in Brief. Harmonized and translated by COUNT TOLSTOI. A summary of the larger work. Prepared for popular use by the author. (Authorized Ed.) 12mo, $1 25.

This new book of Tolstoi's will attract wide attention. It is the scientific presentation of his later teachings; it is his gospel, his message to a misbelieving and unbelieving world.

Seed Thoughts for Mothers. Collected by Mrs. MINNIE E. PAULL, compiler of "Sunshine for Shut-Ins." 18mo, cloth, ornamental, 75 cents; hand painted, gilt edges, $1 25; padded Grecian morocco, gilt edges, $1.25.

A collection of prose extracts full of suggestions for the training of children and the encouragement of mothers.

Things to Live For. By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D. D. 16mo, 271 pp., parti cloth, gilt top, $1 00.

Dr. Miller is full of sympathy with human weakness, suffering and sorrow; and this is perhaps largely the secret of the success which he has had in reaching so large a public.

The Story of a Busy Life. Recollections of Mrs. MINNIE E. PAULL. Edited by the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D. D. 16mo, 275 pp., portrait, gilt top, $1 00.

A very helpful and cheering book. Every discouraged mother and wife, every poor, struggling girl, every person to whom defeat seems inevitable, might well take new heart from reading this simple, affecting biography of a plucky, victorious woman.

The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia is not simply for the learned and the educated, though all scholars from our college presidents down, testify to its immense usefulness to them. It is for everyone who wishes to succeed in life, whether he is merchant or manufacturer, banker or broker, clerk or engineer, physician or lawyer, or whatever his occupation. It is useful at all times and on all occasions, whether one is engaged in reading, writing, conversation or work. This, which can be said of no other work ever published is true of

The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia.

A LIBRARY IN ITSELF

Embodying in one comprehensive work all the advantages of Dictionary, Encyclopedia, Atlas and a great many other works hitherto indispensable in any well-equipped library

AS A DICTIONARY IT is not only the most comprehensive ever published, but it is the only one that covers the whole language from the earliest time to the present, and that gives the latest and best results of scholarly research in etymology, spelling, pronunciation, and definitions. It gives every shade of meaning of every word, amplified by illustrations, quotations, and synonyms. In addition to this, it includes a collection never before instituted in any one work of the technical terms in all the sciences, arts, trades, and professions. It has a grand total of over 500,000 DEFINITIONS

AS AN ENCYCLOPEDIA IT covers far more ground than any other, for it adds to the scientific knowledge generally found in such works the plain, practical, every-day knowledge which is generally omitted, and which is the information that is most sought for. Hence the work is of the greatest value to every one, whether merchant, manufacturer, teacher, student, or professional man. It occupies a field of its own. There is absolutely no other work like it. It covers all knowledge on all subjects. It pronounces proper names—a feature not found in other works of reference. It contains 150,000 ENCYCLOPEDIC ARTICLES, 300,000 QUOTATIONS, 8,000 ENGRAVINGS.

AS AN ATLAS IT is complete and thoroughly up-to-date. It contains one large map for every State of the Union and for every foreign country. It does not stop where other Atlases stop, but gives much information not found in them, such as the history, description, etc., of cities and countries. It contains NEARLY 100 DOUBLE-PAGE MAPS.

NOTE.—This is the genuine, new, enlarged and improved edition in ten volumes direct from the press of The Century Co., New York, but must be ordered through us if you desire it at this reduced price.

IN EDUCATION. It is the only work that will answer the question of the little child, of the grammar and high school pupil and of the college student. It is an indispensable aid from the time the child begins reading and arithmetic until he graduates from the university an educated man. There is no other reference work in the world which affords so many aids to the education of the young. By reason of its thousands of illustrations of animals, birds, fishes, trees, plants, buildings, statuary, machines, vessels, coins, utensils and the like, it is to them a constant source of interest, entertainment and education.

IN THE HOME. Nowhere else can one find such clear authoritative practical answers to the thousand and one questions that are constantly arising in these days of books and lectures. The Century will help you in building a home and in furnishing it; will tell you about dress, about the table, about disease, about books, persons, places and things. The plain every-day information so often wanted is always given in The Century.

IN BUSINESS. It is the recognized authority on all questions of commerce, finance, trade, insurance, etc. For the first time in any one work, The Century includes all of the terms used in the different trades and pursuits. It will not only tell the business man how to spell and pronounce, but will place at his disposal a fund of information of the greatest value in his daily work.

IN THE PROFESSIONS. It gives much information not found in any law, medical or theological work of reference, and in every case, the information is the latest and is authoritative. No professional man wishing to be well equipped can afford to be without it.

IN LEISURE MOMENTS. When one wants information about works of art or buildings, about music, about books, about the characters in books, about famous places, actors,—on these and on every other subject The Century acts the part of a friend. Its beautiful pictures and its wealth of quotations are not equalled by any other work ever published.

OUR OFFER

By an arrangement with The Century Co., Publishers, to form a limited club for the purpose of introducing The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia in its final and completed form, we are enabled to offer to a limited number of our readers single sets of the work at the same low price at which they are sold in lots of one thousand. THUS PLACING EACH INDIVIDUAL ON A PAR WITH THE LARGEST WHOLESALE BUYER. Those who order now before our club limit is reached, will save over 40 per cent. of the regular price, and will be allowed to pay for it in SMALL MONTHLY PAYMENTS. Remember, this club offer was made for introductory purposes, and was limited from the start Every day you delay, therefore, diminishes your chances of securing one of these sets at this SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY RATE.

FACTS Worth Remembering for 1897

TO begin the new year's church business right you should have a good Church Record Book. The best is the PILGRIM CHURCH RECORD, published by your own society at $2.00 and upward.

HAS your Sunday School Library been replenished recently? Remember some of the best books are issued by YOUR OWN SOCIETY. Some of the new issues are very attractive and teach important lessons.

EVERY Congregational Sunday School should, and most of them do, use the PILGRIM LESSON HELPS. If your school does not, isn't 1897 a good time to begin? Samples free. Our S. S. Record Books are also the best.

NOW is the time for ministers to get some good books for home reading and study. OUR GENERAL CATALOGUE gives our reduced prices on the best books from all publishers. Send for one.

EVERYBODY should have a list of the year's S. S. Lessons, Y. P. S. C. E. Topics, etc, handy for reference. Our PILGRIM SUNDAY SCHOOL TREASURY has all this and much more. 4 cts.; $2.00 per 100; $2.40, postpaid.

WHY not start a HOME DEPARTMENT in your Sunday School? It is the greatest Sunday School extension movement of modern times. Hazard's Home Department book, 25 cts., tells you all about it.

YOU cannot afford to longer use Cruden's Concordance now that WALKER'S is such an immense improvement upon it, and only $2.00. We want agents to sell Walker's. It has 50,000 more references than Cruden's.

EVERY college girl should have the "MARY LYON YEAR BOOK," containing a daily thought from this great pioneer in women's higher education. $1.25; beautifully bound. $1.00, postpaid, to any one mentioning this advertisement.

ARE you aware that business sent to the Congregational bookstores helps SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSION WORK? Our business department is the largest single contributor to it, appropriating $3,000 to $5,000 annually.

REMEMBER that the appropriation we now make could be doubled if we had EVERY CONGREGATIONALIST AS A CUSTOMER. May we have you, and your church and school?

The Sunday School Times

During 1897, Dr. Miller, whose devotional books have already reached a circulation of over half a million copies, will write in his helpful, personal way a series of articles for THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES. His theme will be "The Devotional Side of the Sunday-School Teacher's Work." These articles will, of themselves, be invaluable to Sunday-school workers, and will help wonderfully to make lesson-preparation and lesson-teaching effective. Other articles will be contributed during the year by such Sunday-school workers as Justice David J. Brewer, B. F. Jacobs, William Reynolds, Dr. James A. Worden, Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, Mrs. W. F. Crafts, Miss Bertha F. Vella, Alfred Day, W. H. Hall, and George W. Pease.

THE religious press heartily indorses Mr. Moody's appeal to the churches to devote themselves wholly and unitedly during the next month to a series of daily meetings for spreading the gospel. He bases this appeal in part on the fact that 3,000 churches in the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations alone reported last year no accessions on profession of faith, and he asks if this is the result of pastors' preaching higher criticism or politics or discussions of the labor question or of giving stereopticon shows. To this some of the papers have replied that a very large proportion of these churches have had no preaching at all, as they are without pastors and many of them have no meetings and only a nominal membership. But when this is granted, still meditation on the slow growth of the churches ought to move all Christians to earnest, united effort to save men. The opportunity is peculiarly great, now that political matters which have absorbed attention are put aside for the time. Many are praying continually for a great revival of religion. Signs of its coming already appear. Why should we not begin at once expectantly to pray together and plan and work for it?

Our readers will detect the flavor of Forefathers' Day which pervades the columns of the paper this week. The articles by Dr. Griffis and Mr. Dawson, setting forth the æsthetic and architectural adaptations of the Puritan idea, open a comparatively new field to exploration. It may, perhaps, surprise some at first to discover this side of Puritanism, but our contributors have made it clear that there is nothing in the Puritan movement essentially hostile to the proper cultivation of art. On the other hand the influence of the Congregational leaven in our political structure is brought out by one of our Western superintendents of missionary activity, while other authors and editors deal with subjects germane to the thought of Forefathers' Day. We trust the material furnished this week will be of service in connection with the forthcoming celebrations of this our own peculiar anniversary.

The quick and noble response of our constituency to our appeal for relief of the Armenian orphans has gladdened the officers of our American Board, members of national relief committees, women like Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset and all who are doing anything in their power to help the sufferers in faraway Armenia. Letters have arrived from Mr. Peet, agent of the American Board in Constantinople, who says that the cable conveying $1,500 reached him on Thanksgiving Day and formed a matter for special praise and thanksgiving among the American residents in Constantinople. Since then three more remittances, each larger than either of the two earlier ones, have been forwarded by telegraph, and next week we shall cable a special Christmas gift, which we trust will be made before next Tuesday fully equal to any that have preceded it. As we intimated in our first editorial on the subject, we think it wise to bring our fund to a conclusion at Christmas. Whatever comes to us after that date will be transmitted to Armenia by mail, and acknowledgments will be made of all contributions. The fact that since our inauguration of this special form of relief the same method has been adopted by relief organizations and taken up and widely commended by the press renders it less necessary for us as a paper to continue to keep the matter prominently before the public. In having started the movement and brought it to its present dimensions we consider that we have fulfilled our special part. Our most sanguine expectations have been surpassed in the response to the appeal, twice the amount originally asked for having been already received.

There seems to be a greater disposition this year than ordinarily to restrict Christmas giving, or even to do away with it altogether, in the interest of the claims of numerous benevolent causes. The movement known as the Christmas Gift Transfer, and indorsed by prominent Christian leaders, has gained considerable headway. The idea of it is the abandonment of giving within one's own circle of friends and the devotion of the money thus saved to missionary work. It is forcibly argued that Christ's birthday demands first of all the conferring of gifts upon him and that such a tangible expression of personal devotion to him would not only help to speed forward his kingdom, but would produce a great impression upon the world. Certain individuals have gone so far as to send out circular letters to their friends requesting them to refrain from personal gifts and asking that the expression of affection take the form of an offering to Christ instead of to themselves. While we may not all be inclined to rigid abstention from giving or receiving gifts, any effort to do away with extravagant giving deserves commendation. It would be cruelty to children to minimize this side of the Christmas joy, but grown people, especially those who bear the name of Christ, ought to have courage and sense enough to refrain from perfunctory and useless giving which is often as much of a burden to the recipient as to the giver.

One of the significant sentences in President Tucker's tribute to Dr. Quint at the recent memorial service in Park Street Church, Boston, was to the effect that he was never so necessary to so many interests as he was on the day of his death. The truth of this remark gains emphasis every week as cases arise in which his insight and judgment would be almost invaluable. He had not been dead a week when an ecclesiastical situation 3,000 miles away was brought to view which required the wisest and most delicate handling. The complications in connection with the First Church, Lowell, which are now being examined into by a council, are such as to make many of those engaged in that work wish for an hour's conference with Dr. Quint. It is true, to be sure, as Dr. William Hayes Ward said at the memorial service, that God raises up men to meet the recurring needs of his people, and certainly our denomination both East and West is not without men competent to guide our churches through perilous straits. There will always be calls for such services to the denomination and we rejoice to think that men are coming forward who will be utilized more and more in this direction.

To bring all the church members into the prayer meeting is of prime importance. To bring them there with interest already aroused in the topic is to insure a meeting of spiritual power. As one means to promote this end we invite special attention to the prayer meeting topics in our Handbook for 1897, and especially to their relation with the topics for daily Bible readings. These are so arranged as to keep the subject of the prayer meeting constantly in mind, and to associate closet and family prayer with that of the church. If pastors and teachers will impress on their hearers the necessity of daily devotion, of time set apart for it and of the ways in which these selections and topics may be used to suggest spiritual meditation, we are confident that quickened spiritual life in the churches will follow. These topics are not offered with the expectation that they will be slavishly followed. Occasionally subjects of immediate and local interest will naturally take the place of these. But it has been found of great advantage to have spiritually suggestive subjects at hand when others do not demand attention. No doubt the large majority of the churches use topics prepared for the year. Those presented in our Handbook have been chosen with great care, in the hope of deepening the spiritual life of all the churches.

UNIVERSALISM VERSUS ORTHODOXY.

The Christian Leader, quoting from one of our recent editorials which discussed the significance of the topics at the autumnal conferences, infers that we intimated that "Universalist principles have superseded orthodoxy." At a meeting in Boston last week one of the speakers is reported as declaring that the Universalist Church has overthrown "the three great barriers of orthodoxy"—the divinity of Christ, the vicarious atonement and eternal punishment.

In our judgment both our contemporary and the speaker referred to have failed to apprehend the doctrinal attitude of Congregational churches. We are confident that the belief of these churches in the divinity of Jesus Christ was never stronger than now. They emphasize his humanity far more than they did a generation ago, but his humanity is of supreme significance to them because he, the only begotten of the Father, manifests God to men. They do not attempt, as once theologians did, to define the Trinity, but they stand firm in their conviction that "the Word was God" and that "the Word became flesh and dwelt among us."

These churches believe as confidently as ever that Jesus Christ is the one mediator between God and man, that through him is preached unto us the forgiveness of sins and that there is no other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved. They do not hold to any one theory of the atonement set forth by theologians as fully comprehending its meaning. But they know by experience that Jesus Christ died for our sins and rose again for our justification. That experience many Congregationalists may not profess to be able to put into a theological formula, but it is the most real and precious experience of their lives.

These churches believe in retribution for sins in the world to come. They do not, perhaps, call it damnation. They do not undertake to describe hell. They do not affirm that there is an eternity of conscious suffering for sinners unchanged and unforgiven. But they do not believe that sin goes unpunished or that sinners who reject redemption through Jesus Christ are going to heaven. They do not preach salvation for men except through him, and if they leave undetermined the nature of punishment it is simply because they feel that the doom of the impenitent is beyond their comprehension. These, we believe, are in substance the positions held on what have been called the three bulwarks of orthodoxy. If our friends of the Universalist denomination have evidence to the contrary, they have not thus far furnished it.

THE PILGRIMS AND CHURCH UNITY.

An Episcopal clergyman has gathered, during the year, a long list of newspaper reports of entertainments given by churches of different denominations to get money for religious and charitable uses. He has published his list in the December Forum, with the conclusion that the cause of such discreditable performances is the division of the church into sects, and that the remedy would be found by bringing them all into the Episcopal fold. It will require a much more powerful voice than Mr. Hale's to lead any sect to respond to the call, "Follow me," into another denomination. But it has become quite common to urge organic church unity as the goal at which Christians should aim as a kind of panacea for all religious defects and disturbances. This is a fit time to ask what the fathers of New England thought of church unity.

The Pilgrims were driven from their country by religious persecution. But they were not persecuted because they disbelieved any part of the creed of the church which drove them away. Their one offense was that they would not accept church unity. They claimed the right to administer their own religious affairs, to choose their own officers, compose their own prayers, administer the sacraments in their own way and conduct worship as seemed to them most appropriate. They insisted that their fellowship in such worship should be limited to those who gave evidence of holy living.

These things the Episcopal Church denied to them. That church was supported by the state and received from the state authority to enforce its requirements. It had separated from the Catholic Church, but it would allow no separation from itself. It forbade that any should unite to worship God except in the forms which it prescribed, in the places it appointed and under the direction of leaders which it had selected. It enforced its requirements by severe penalties. Some who attempted to worship God apart from the church were fined and imprisoned. Many were ostracized and financially ruined. Some were banished and some were hung. Clergymen who advocated toleration were deprived of their living and silenced.

It was because of these persecutions that the Pilgrims left their homes and fled to Holland. They finally secured from their king the reluctant concession that they might expect to be let alone if they came and settled in the trackless wilderness of the New World. But the spirit that drove them away and yet would rather have held them and compelled their submission has not yet died out of England. The Established Church has succeeded in stamping with a negation every religious organization which it could not control. It calls them separatists and schismatics, and has compelled them to accept the names of Dissenters and Nonconformists. It has imposed on their members serious disadvantages in citizenship, in society, in education, in seeking appointments to public office. It has compelled them to pay taxes for its support and to acknowledge its authority in the most sacred experiences of their homes. It has yielded to their demands for equal recognition of their rights only inch by inch, when compelled by determined and persistent attacks on its intrenched positions. The Episcopal Church in England has thus demonstrated once more the truth confirmed in all history that church unity tends to the worst of all tyrannies, the control of men's consciences by an organization claiming divine authority.

Eight years ago the Episcopal Church put forth the Lambeth proposals, looking to church unity. Of the four propositions, three were acceptable to most Christians. The fourth was simply a claim of that church to pass on the appointment of every officer who might minister to men in the name of Christ and of his church, and to confer on each one so appointed a peculiar grace. The proposals have led to a great deal of discussion as to how church unity may be brought about, but to little more. The descendants of the Pilgrims have learned a toleration which their fathers did not receive and knew not how to give. But they will never put their necks again under the yoke of bondage of a united church till they have unlearned the lessons which made the Pilgrims the founders of a free country in which the only authority of any church is the convincing power with which it appeals to the consciences of the people.

Church unity robbed the Pilgrims of their homes and their liberty. It drove them to found a nation in which, by the grace of God, men have come to learn that he is no respecter of persons, but whoever worships him in spirit and in truth, by whatever forms, is acceptable to him. While this nation remains a republic the only church unity possible is that in which each religious denomination shall manage its own affairs, while it seeks also the prosperity of every other in which it recognizes the presence of God. When such harmony among all the churches of Christ shall have brought about some kind of federation in which each organization shall recognize the rights and promote the welfare of all the others, there will be fulfilled the real Christian unity for which our Lord prayed and which his disciples long to realize.

DR. QUINT AND CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS.

The Transcript persists in its statement that Dr. Quint was in favor of Congregational churches granting to their members letters recommending them to "Christian Science" organizations. It says:

> We have a certified copy of the letter in regular Congregational form given at the suggestion of Rev. Dr. Quint by the Fair Haven Congregational Church, dismissing and recommending the person in question to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston. That church has received the letter and has admitted the person into full membership. Does this satisfy our neighbor?

We never questioned the fact that the letter here referred to was granted. The pastor of that church wrote to us as follows:

> The clipping you inclosed from the Transcript is only partially correct. My church was asked to grant such a letter as is there stated, but, not being sure of the proper course to pursue, at my suggestion the matter was laid over for one week. This was the second or third week in October last. During the week I was in Boston and saw Dr. Quint in the library of the Congregational House. He was then just about to leave. After speaking with him upon another matter, I stated the request that had been made to the church here and asked him what we ought to do. To this he replied that he had been giving this very matter much thought of late, and he did not see any reason why such a letter should not be granted. I think he would have talked longer with me upon the point in question had he not been called away to speak with some one else. But Dr. Quint did not say one word to me about discipline for the church refusing to grant such a letter. I regret very much that I have no written statement from him on this matter.

Remembering the opinion often expressed by Dr. Quint on this subject, and having at hand the statement concerning it which he dictated a few months ago, we were convinced that Dr. Quint either misunderstood the pastor's question at the brief interview referred to above or that his answer was incomplete or not fully understood. The statement which Dr. Quint dictated was to the effect that letters ought not to be granted recommending members of Congregational churches to Christian Science organizations, but that persons desiring to unite with these or other organizations with which Congregational churches are not in fellowship should not be censured for so doing. He advised that when a member of honorable character has made it clear that he is not in agreement with the faith of the church, the church might consent that he be no longer under its watch and care and that his name be dropped from the list, and he thought that the person withdrawing from the church should receive a certificate to that effect. This, we believe, is the position generally held in Congregational churches.

The Transcript appears to prefer the report of Dr. Quint's verbal and hasty reply to a question instead of his deliberate written statement in answer to the same question, which we printed but which our contemporary seems to have failed to notice. We prefer the latter. So also, probably, will most other persons who value Dr. Quint's opinion.

PURITAN OR PARISIAN IDEALS?

Col. T. W. Higginson is never happier than when he is combative and he has rare facility in arraying himself against conservative forces. His latest protégée is McMonnies's Bacchante, and in defending her and those who have ordained that she shall stand in the courtyard of the Public Library he goes out of his way—so it seems to us—to asperse those who differ with him. He suspects that it will be found "that the great majority of those who have voted to condemn the harmless creature, in religious conventions, have never even seen her, but are like the good clergyman in Lowell's Biglow Papers who writes about 'the pernicious heresies of the Liberator, a paper of which I have never, I thank God, read a single line.'"

Now it is true, doubtless, that the average clergyman of Boston has not the leisure that Colonel Higginson enjoys nor does he pretend to be the authority on art that Colonel Higginson might reasonably claim to be, but we believe that he is quite as prone to base his opinions on facts ascertained by himself as any member of society of equal prominence and responsibility. We will hazard the statement that most of the Boston clergymen who have felt it their duty to speak out on this subject have only done so af er first visiting the library courtyard and inspecting the Bacchante. Colonel Higginson will not make friends for the Bacchante or improve his own reputation by such slurs. Moreover, men like President Eliot and Prof. Charles Eliot Norton of Harvard, President Warren of Boston University and Hon. William Everett and Judge Robert Grant happen to agree with the clergymen. Will he also attempt to laugh these men, his peers, out of court?

The truth of the matter is that this case has assumed more than local and temporary importance, and its discussion now is most opportune. It is time for the people to decide whether the ideals of the Puritans or the ideals of the Paris of today are to govern in this land; whether our artists, authors and dramatists are to be encouraged in a course that will some day bring them to the nether depths which Paris witnessed last week when Sarah Bernhardt was placed on a throne and exalted as the "divine" interpreter of life; or whether they are to be held to an ideal of art which exalts only the good, the true and the beautiful. If those who have just risen from reading the great historical romance, Quo Vadis, came from it with one impression clearer then another it was this, that a people as carnal, selfish and æsthetic as were the Romans of that day deserved just such a ruler as Nero and just such a fate as ultimately overtook them; and the news dispatch from Paris last week describing the glorification of Sarah Bernhardt read as if it were an up-to-date chapter of Sienkiewicz's great novel. We are confident that Boston will decide ultimately to be faithful to the highest ideals, and will err, if at all, on the side of chastity, not lubricity.

THE NEW MISSIONARY MONTHLY.

In Congregational Work the missionary enterprises of the Congregational denomination are for the first time unitedly presented in one periodical. The first number, for January, 1897, is a well-printed quarto of twenty pages. The first page is filled by a comprehensive salutatory, and each of the six societies has a department filled with editorial and contributed articles—all interesting and pertinent. They are, substantially, of the same character as those published in the periodicals and pamphlets issued by the societies to increase interest in their work. If Congregational Work is to take the place of these publications the reduction of expenditures will be large. The A. M. A., for example, last year, receiving contributions from churches, Sunday schools, other organizations and individuals amounting to $184,551.15, spent on the American Missionary, above receipts from subscribers, $5,975.63, and in printing and distributing pamphlets, circulars, etc., $8,136.93, making in all $14,112.56. This does not take into account the time of officers of the society spent in writing and editing.

Reckoning on this basis, the annual cost of giving printed information of the work of our six missionary societies must be a large one, and the most of it is paid out of the contributions received for missionary work. This new periodical is to be issued ten times a year at ten cents for each annual subscription. The substitution of it, therefore, for the various missionary periodicals will, if it serves their purpose, be an important step in economical use of our benevolent gifts; while, if it only supplements these publications, it will simply increase, at added expense, the same kind of reading matter. It is important, then, for all our churches to make Congregational Work so thoroughly successful that it may be seen to meet the need for which other missionary publications have failed adequately to provide. It is gratifying to learn that the new paper starts off with a circulation of over 73,000.

HOW HISTORY HINGES ON CHRIST.

All human history before him led up to him. All since his day has had to be studied in its relation to him in order to be understood. He is its central, supremely vitalizing figure. The ages before him were conscious of their large ignorance of spiritual things and longed for his advent that the truth might be bestowed upon them more abundantly. More recent ages, whatever their differences of religious theory or practice, have been at one in the belief that in him the fullness of spiritual truth had been revealed.

Human history is more than a record of the rise and fall of nations. It takes chief account of principles. It is a narrative of the stern battle of truth with error and of the gradual but certain victory of truth. It all hinges upon Jesus Christ, as one studies it, because he first embodied truth and in his triumph over death and sin truth itself won its most signal, conclusive conquest. Had he fallen, the race would have been ruined. Because he overcame we ourselves are assured the possibility of overcoming.

Moreover, the regeneration of society, religion apart, depends upon the acceptance of his teachings. No philanthropy wins confidence, however beguiling, if its objects do not think they see in it some practical illustration of what he commanded. The line along which the settlement of international controversies, the great disputes between capital and labor, and other disturbing factors in the modern social situation, is precisely that along which the suggestions and commands of Christ point us forward.

Individual salvation depends upon him. National redemption also must come through him. More and more does it become evident not only that he is the central figure of human history, but also that it actually hinges and depends upon him.

CURRENT HISTORY.

Our Foreign Relations.

Both the German and the Spanish press have not failed to criticise with asperity the resolute action and unconventional language of our Administration, to which we referred last week. But it must be confessed the Spanish press and people have shown more restraint than would have been predicted as possible under the circumstances. The Spanish cabinet is said to be preparing a diplomatic note to be sent to other European Powers, in which the Spanish answer to President Cleveland's charges will be incorporated, and there, doubtless, also will be inserted a query respecting the attitude of European Powers toward us should we proceed to enforce the Monroe Doctrine as it is interpreted by this Administration, or interfere with the contest in Cuba as the champion of outraged humanity and civil liberty. That there is some likelihood of the latter course must be apparent to those who have read the joint resolutions introduced in the Senate last week by Senators Mills, Call and Cullom, and if it prove true, as is now reported, that Maceo, the ablest of the Cuban revolutionist leaders, was not defeated and killed in honorable combat, but was betrayed by one whose palm had been crossed with Spanish money, and was then foully assassinated when on his way to accept the invitation of a Spanish official to a parley protected by a flag of truce, then there is no predicting what our legislators may propose to do. Party and sectional lines have broken down completely, and the Cubans have champions among the most conservative legislators in Congress who favor immediate interference.

The opposition which has developed in Venezuela to a ratification of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States which will settle the long-standing dispute by arbitration is not likely to prove successful, but it is well worth considering. For it voices, doubtless, a feeling that must be more or less prevalent elsewhere in the Latin-American States. We have asserted, under Mr. Olney's interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine, that not only are American questions hereafter to be settled by Americans, but the method he has selected in settling this Anglo-Venezuelan dispute asserts just as plainly that we are to decide just how all other American States are to settle their grievances with European Powers, and that all they have to do is to ratify our will. Now as it happens that the continental Powers of Europe have not accepted, as Lord Salisbury has, our latest interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine, and as it is at least conceivable that the Latin-American Powers may not always docilely submit to our assertion of hegemony, it is evident that if we do not appreciate now how pregnant and far-reaching have been the steps which we have already taken in this phenomenal year we would better begin to do so. What all this implies to a keen, English man of affairs is set forth in Mr. Sidney Low's article in the December Nineteenth Century. His summing up of the matter deserves to be pondered, for if we have reversed our historic position, and have entered upon the great career of responsibility which the new policy clearly implies, we should do it with eyes open.

Civil Service Reform.

The annual meeting of the national Civil Service Reform League last week was one of the most encouraging and inspiring gatherings which the men who have long labored in that good cause have ever been permitted to attend. The president, Hon. Carl Schurz, in his review of the year's gains and losses, was able to report a larger net gain than ever before noted in any one year, a gain seen not only in the withdrawal from the spoilsman's clutches of many thousand Federal offices, but also in the enactment by States and municipalities of statutes and ordinances which will exempt many of the smaller civic units from the control of politicians. From every side comes the same tale of increased efficiency of the service, lessening of expense to the taxpayer and betterment of social conditions. Most significant of all, our legislators, in sheer self-defense, are turning to such law as now exists or such as may be enacted to protect them from the clamor of those who seek office and the wrath of those who fail to get it. Many of them are finding it utterly impossible to attend to their ever increasing and more complex legitimate duties, so persistent is the demand of their constituents that they shall serve as mere office brokers. Hence with such a feeling dominant among congressmen, and so outspoken and long-tried a friend of the reform as Mr. McKinley in the White House, it would seem probable that during the next Administration the entire Federal service would be put on a rational basis of merit and permanency of tenure. Surely with his past record to keep untarnished by avoiding any future defection, and under obligations as he is to men of all parties for his election, Mr. McKinley cannot afford to fall below the ideal which his predecessor, in the main, has kept before him, nor do we believe he will. With our consular service put on a sensible business basis, and the fourth class postmasters removed from the arena of petty local politics, we shall be in a condition four years hence to make our bow to the new century with a face that is not ashamed. It was a sad day for this country when the Jacksonian spoils theory took root.

Governor Morton's decree last week approving a reclassification of the service list of New York gives great encouragement to the reformers there, and is just as great a disappointment to Mr. Platt and the Republican machine. Would that it could be a happy omen of a more grievous disappointment for the same "boss," who flatters himself that he has a chattel mortgage on the seat in the United States Senate now occupied by Senator Hill. The Empire State should have a senator of imperial proportions. Unfortunately the only gentleman thus far named as likely to dispute Mr. Platt's claim to the honor is Mr. Joseph Choate, who with all his culture and ability has of late become too prominently identified with the interests of the favored few to make him the ideal senator.

The Control of Corporations.

President Cleveland in his message stated, what was apparent long ago to any one who had studied the record, that Federal legislation against trusts had proved inoperative, chiefly, if not wholly, owing to the imperfections of the law. He seemed to think that perhaps the solution of the problem was to come through legislation by the several States. Attorney-General Harmon in his annual report, just published, also calls attention to this, and admits that unless Congress will amend the law so as to meet the objections which our judges have raised in construing it, it is quite useless to expect relief through the Federal courts. Moreover, he states that the funds at the disposal of the Department of Justice which can be applied to the investigation, preparation and prosecution of cases is wholly inadequate. Congressmen will prove their statesmanship by instantly grappling with this matter. They need not wait for a special session.

Just at a time when the people of New York are getting out injunctions restraining their city fathers from giving away a franchise worth millions, Boston, thanks to the energy of a few of its intelligent citizens, rejoices in the all but completed understanding by which the West End Railway, in return for the use and control of the underground subway through the heart of the city, consents to the imposition of such a tax upon its gross receipts as will, within the limited time for which the monopoly is granted—twenty years—reimburse the city for all expense incurred in building the subway and also produce a revenue which can assist in lessening the rate of taxation. But New York is improving also. One of its aldermen has dared to suggest formally that the city purchase and assume control of the natural monopoly of manufacturing gas for public and private consumption, and the idea meets with more favor than could have been predicted without provoking a smile a few years ago.

State Control of Municipal Affairs.

The sudden nominal conversion of two of the Boston Board of Police Commissioners to agreement with the chairman of the board, Gen. A. P. Martin, in belief in a licensing policy which will not permit the planting of more saloons in certain of the better grade residence districts of the city was caused by Governor Wolcott's letter to the Police Board insisting that they define their policy immediately so that the citizens who voted for or against license on the 15th might vote intelligently. Good men differ as to the motives which influenced the governor thus to use his influence, and there is some difference of opinion as to the reasons for the change of base by the majority of the commissioners, but all will agree that the governor was justified legally in doing as he did, and that it is well now and then to have the fact emphasized that the commissioners are State, not local, officials, and responsible only to the State. So long as men like Governor Wolcott and the late Governor Greenhalge are at the helm, the city has not much to fear from this anomalous condition, and it probably is the best practical solution of the problem. But the fact remains that a governor of a different stripe might be more responsive to the behests of the organized liquor dealers of the city than to those of any other class of the community; and in theory, at least, Bostonians are held to be incompetent to suppress vice, detect and punish crime, or to control the saloon.

Statistics Concerning Family Life.

The Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics sent forth last week another part of its analysis of the census of 1895, and to all interested in family life and tenement house problems it will prove to be indispensable. How could the comparative sterility of the native stock be more surely indicated than in the statement that whereas the average size of a family in Suffolk County is 4.79, in Nantucket it is only 3 07. Again, how gravely have modern industrial conditions affected the family life when it can be chronicled there are 14,380 females and 7,456 males who live singly in lodgings, and either provide their own meals or dine in restaurants. Families of three persons are most numerous, both in the cities and towns, and it seems to be the norm by which this generation is to be judged. As Suffolk and Nantucket Counties have the highest and lowest average size of family, so they also have the highest and lowest rates of congestion. Holyoke has the highest and Newton the lowest rates among the cities. The quality of the house which shelters the family is usually an important index of its character, and it is interesting to note that by far the greater number of the houses in the State are of wood, and but one story and an attic high. The number of houses has increased 34.91 per cent. since 1885, and the State now has dwellings which would accommodate an increase of 12.62 per cent in population. The predominance of the wooden house in New England was a phenomenon which W. Robertson Nicoll of The British Weekly especially noticed when recently in this country, and he returned home convinced of its superiority to the average British domicile of brick or stone.

The statement just put forth by the National Democratic party leaders indicates permanent hostility to their former Democratic allies, now led by Mr. Bryan, and to their former Republican enemies if they persist in devotion to a protective tariff.

The force of public opinion has just compelled Great Britain's largest railway corporation to recede from its position of hostility to some of its employés solely because they were trades unionists. A strike involving all British railways and putting a stop to all traffic impended, and the public refused to submit to any such penalty for any such cause.

The revelations of the Berlin tribunal respecting the intriguing at the German imperial court, the rottenness of life in official circles and the venality of German journalists have come at an inopportune time for those German patriots so recently shocked by Bismarck's revelations respecting Germany's devious foreign policy. Berlin correspondents assure us we have no conception of the unrest and dissatisfaction with affairs, domestic and foreign, which prevails among thoughtful Germans.

There are some indications of an understanding between Russia, France and Great Britain which will bring to pass such reforms in Turkey as will put an end to the reign of terror and injustice, but no scheme for partitioning territory or deposing the sultan is likely to be forthcoming. Great Britain's calm acquiescence in Russia's diplomatic victories in China is unexplainable on any other basis than that some rapprochement between the Powers hitherto hostile has been perfected, the fruits of which will soon be seen in the near East.

IN BRIEF.

The careful summary of the statistics on intemperance in Massachusetts on another page furnishes food for serious thought. May it suggest some adequate remedy!

The Bible Society, through the falling off of legacies, finds its work painfully limited and appeals for liberal gifts. Would it accept contributions for distributing the Revised Version of the Bible?

Eminent ministers advocate in the Homiletic Review the riding of bicycles on Sunday. But they would probably confine Sunday riding to going to church. They would not encourage it for pleasure. Yet there is genuine pleasure in riding a bicycle to church over good roads.

It has been happily suggested that the Jews who are indignant over President Cleveland's reference to Christ in his Thanksgiving proclamation should turn their attention to the Declaration of Independence and other national and state documents which close with "Given in the year of our Lord," etc.

The Puritan has "gone into commission," to use a technical phrase, is now one of our navy, and by many is considered the most formidable vessel we have. Thus do our naval officials recognize the share of the Puritans in making our past history. We have not heard of any serious proposition to call any vessel of our navy The Cavalier.

The national House of Representatives at Washington has decided not to allow liquor to be sold in the Capitol building by a vote practically unanimous. Hon. Elijah A. Morse of Massachusetts is entitled to the credit of securing this decision, for which he deserves the thanks of all good citizens. It remains for the Senate to make this vote into law.

Colorado College has now only $31,000 to raise to secure the Pearsons fund. This amount must be pledged before Jan. 1, 1897. If the friends of the institution work heartily together for the next two weeks the anxiety of President Slocum and of his brave colleagues on the faculty will be entirely relieved. Every dollar given in the present emergency will count for many times what it would at any other time.

As it is obviously impracticable, with our limited space, to report fully the annual meetings of the 5,400 Congregational churches in the United States—most of which occur at this time of the year—we ask, in the interest of fair treatment of all, that only brief accounts be sent of the distinctive features or the noticeable progress of the year. Further condensation by us may sometimes be necessary in view of the large amount of such matter that pours in upon us at this season.

A recent letter from Prof. Williston Walker reports that the condition of his father, Dr. George Leon Walker, has changed but little during the last few weeks, but whatever variation has been noted is in the direction of gain. He cannot speak beyond "yes" and "no," nor can he write, but his mind seems to have most, if not all, of its old-time quickness and vigor. He is beginning to read a little, and found in the Springfield Republican the notice of Dr. Quint's death. The news was a great shock and grief to him.

Dr. Pentecost is authority for the statement that if he accepts his call to the Presbyterian church in Yonkers, N. Y., then Rev. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) will be called from Liverpool to the Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London, where Dr. Pentecost now is. Ian Maclaren sailed for home this week. May he have a bon voyage! William Winter, at the Lotos Club dinner in New York last week, referred to Dr. Watson as "the finest literary artist in the art of mingled humor and pathos that has come into literature since Sir Walter Scott."

We have often referred to the excellent work done by Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick in her school for girls at San Sebastian, Spain. She has conducted the school at great disadvantage through want of books. She and her fellow-teachers greatly need a library suitable for the higher education of women, and any gifts of money or volumes for that purpose would be highly appreciated. She does not want theological tomes that have outlived their usefulness. Mrs. Gulick's address at present is Castile, N. Y., and she would gladly answer inquiries as to what books would be serviceable.

Dr. John Henry Barrows, who has been in Germany for the last few months and who is probably now on his way to India, will return to Chicago next April. The general expectation is that he will accept his call to the Kenwood Presbyterian Church, where Mr. Vrooman has been preaching. Dr. Barrows helped to organize that church and in it are many of his old parishioners. It is near the university, in which he holds a professorship. Some Easterners have cherished a hope that Dr. Barrows on his return would be drafted for service a little nearer the Atlantic seaboard. He will, however, in Chicago quickly resume his old place among the leaders of thought and work.

Andover is agitating a unique plan for preserving a permanent memorial of the two hundred and fiftieth year of its corporate existence which was celebrated last summer. It is to purchase and turn into a public park "Indian Ridge," well-know to thousands of Andover alumni and alumnæ as a beautiful resort, and geologically famous since President Hitchcock discovered it in 1846 and Rev. G. Frederick Wright connected it with a system of glacial kames in 1875. A mass meeting was held last week in the interest of the project and Professor Wright, Dr. E. W. Donald and others made stirring addresses. Mr. Draper, the veteran publisher, offered to bear one-tenth of the expense of purchasing the Ridge.

Mr. Locke Richardson is to be credited with a new, ingenious, and by no means forced, interpretation of the words Shakespeare puts in the mouth of the character in Henry the Fourth who describes the death of Sir John Falstaff. Reasoning that since Falstaff of all Shakespeare's characters showed the greatest familiarity with Scripture, therefore in his dying hour he might be expected to quote it if ever, Mr. Richardson asks why it may not have been that when Falstaff "babbled of green fields" to Mistress Quickly he was calling to mind the immortal Twenty-Third Psalm and its reference to Him who made the Psalmist "to lie down in green pastures." Horace Howard Furness, the eminent Shakespearean scholar, thinks this suggestion is bound to be accepted.

A happy omen of better days was displayed in New York city lately, when the six leading ministerial associations of the city, the Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Congregational, Presbyterian and Reformed, met to discuss The Ideal Newspaper. Huntington's letter gives fuller particulars. It is significant that this first meeting of its kind should discuss so timely and practical a theme. "The garbage press" is Theodore Roosevelt's name for the newspapers which make descriptions of wickedness their principal attraction. The name is a good one and ought to stick. That Christian parents are so careless in allowing papers of this description to come into the hands of their children is a matter of regret as well as of surprise. If garbage of this sort had the odor of its physical correspondent it would not be permitted to remain in any decent man's house for an hour.

The mission boards of the various denominations propose a plan for simultaneous meetings throughout the whole country. The plan includes a sermon on missions from every pulpit Sunday, Jan. 10, a mid-week prayer meeting for missions, district missionary rallies in the larger cities on Thursday evening and an interdenominational mass meeting on Friday evening. The committee representing the boards issues an appeal which we heartily indorse. They say:

The opportunity for world-wide evangelization was never so great as at present. Ability has kept pace with enlarging opportunity. The Christian Church has the men and the means. Her responsibility has therefore proportionately increased. Yet on fields long occupied and white unto harvest the supply of laborers is utterly inadequate. The established work is crippled. Re-enforcements are needed. Advance is impossible until gifts are enlarged, while the church at home is suffering from the very "heresy of inaction." In the hope of quickening the church to a due conception of its blessed privilege and solemn responsibility in the sacred enterprise of missions we issue this appeal, and as the representatives of the foreign mission boards in the United States and Canada we suggest the inclosed plan of campaign.

THE CENTRALIZATION OF FORCES.

The thoughtful paper read by Dr. Alexander Lewis of Worcester before the Boston Ministers' Meeting last Monday considered the concentration of forces with reference to pastor, people and church. He affirmed that the pastor's powers should be bent upon the spiritual upbuilding of his church, and in order that he may devote himself to this end he should be relieved of many outside calls and of much work in the church, which may properly be performed by an assistant, and which often makes serious inroads upon his time and strength. He believes that the people must be brought into vital relations with the church, and in this connection referred to the number of "church tramps" in any of our cities, and the duty and difficulty of inducing these people to connect themselves with some church. After this localization has been affected each member of a church must be given some definite, personal work to do, for which he will be personally responsible. Dr. Lewis described a letter which he is sending to his own church members, asking them to signify upon a printed blank which of five branches of church work they are at present engaged in, or may be counted upon for activity in during the coming year, and he believes that in this way may be suggested to them the fact that the time one has to devote to the church should be carefully proportioned and divided between the meetings where one is to receive and those where one is to give.

There should also be special work for each church. Churches, like individuals, have their own problems to solve and their own work laid upon them to do. No church need feel called upon to adopt a plan of work simply because it has been successful in another church. Dr. Lewis advocated strongly the union of churches of all denominations in observing a season of special work and prayer, and said that in his judgment the Lenten season was the best time for such services.

During the short discussion which followed, an expression of opinion on the part of the working pastors present showed that thirty-one prefer some time other than the first week in January for special services of prayer. Sixteen have been in the habit of observing some time other than the first week in the year, and thirty expressed themselves as favoring a week early in the fall, when the church work for a new year is being planned and entered upon.

A PLAN OF FRATERNITY AND BENEVOLENCE.

To Pilgrim Church, Dorchester, Mass., many inquiries have gone of late from all parts of the country as to its Pilgrim Fraternal Association. The fourth year has just closed with good reports and a favorable outlook.

It is an inspiration to any pastor in these days to see from forty to sixty men of the church and congregation mingling in social and fraternal intercourse. At no service or sociable can this be accomplished with the freedom and enjoyment that the men have at these monthly meetings. After the roll-call and business and the talk or entertainment, simple refreshments are served, consisting of coffee and doughnuts, crackers and cheese. The table is spread by the sexton, and every man helps himself, thus throwing the participants together in a way to encourage acquaintance and good feeling. Many of the members have furnished a profitable and often amusing talk on the business in which they are particularly interested, and it is surprising how much undiscovered and undeveloped talent and entertainment may be brought out in this way. Laymen can talk admirably on such subjects, and their resources of anecdote and humor are abundant. So the double value of enjoyment and instruction is evident.

Next to the fraternal intent of the organization is the benevolent feature. The members aim to be of service to one another and the church. If a member is laid aside by sickness a full week he is entitled to $5. The aid is continued, if need be, for not more than eight weeks in any one year. Should death ensue, the sum of $50 additional is paid to the family toward defraying necessary expenses. Two such cases have come to the association the past year, and in both instances the aid furnished was timely and invaluable. A brother, overtaken by misfortune in his family or in his employment, may be assisted at the discretion of the advisory board to the extent of $20. In two instances such help has been a source of great satisfaction.

There is room for such an association in most of our churches. Fraternity and relief are worthy handmaids of religion. The cost to members of the association is but fifty cents per month, and while few miss that amount from their individual income many may be greatly helped by the combined result.

GRATEFUL AND APPRECIATIVE HEARTS.

The friends who have sent aid for the destitute widows and orphans will be interested to read extracts from a letter from Harpoot written not much over a month ago by a daughter of Dr. Goodell, of sainted memory, the wife of Dr. Barnum of Harpoot.

Many women bring us stockings they have knit, or shawls they have crocheted from wool prepared by themselves, and beg us to buy them, saying, "Our children are hungry," or "We want to get bread." We buy their articles and then give them away to others as the cold weather is advancing.

Miss Daniels is giving a warm meal several times a week to those of her needy pupils, who only have dry bread at home and sometimes a scanty supply of that. Gifts from America are making this possible. It is a pleasure to see the school children now supplied with dresses and sacques, but there are many needy ones still, for clothes will wear out, even with the best of care. A few days ago ten orphan girls arrived from Arabkir, to be sent to the Broosa Orphanage near Constantinople. Almost every one needed a change of underclothing and stockings. Several needed dresses and warm jackets, and all required combs, soap, towels, etc. Besides, beds, pillows and quilts for the journey had to be made, and now ten more orphan girls from this city and region are to be sent to the German deaconesses' school in Smyrna. Similar provision must be made for them. It was touching to see the joy of one little orphan girl over a pair of shoes given to her; she kept putting them up to her face as though caressing them.

We use the money very carefully, so that it may go as far as possible and do the most good. We are thankful for every dollar sent. As we visit the desolate homes about us, our hearts often ache as we look around the bare room where there used to be rugs and cushions but which now is so destitute of all comfort, and we wonder how the family will keep warm, where the coal will come from, or if they will have any, and how they can buy food for so many mouths when there is no work, no industry for them. How often women come to us begging for work. "I don't want you to give me money," said one; "only give me work, work." How can the poor people live without help from abroad? We have faith to believe that Christians in other lands will not forget their suffering brethren and sisters in Turkey.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

A Symposium.

The Clerical Union, by invitation, united with the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran and Reformed pastors in a joint gathering at the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church last Monday forenoon. After singing, prayer and an address of welcome from President Erdman of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association, the appointed topic of discussion, The Ideal Newspaper, was taken up. There ensued about as lively a time, probably, as either of the bodies represented was accustomed to. The first address was a written one by Dr. D. J. Burrell. The theme was evidently one on which he had thoroughly made up his mind and of which he was aching to free it. His paper was as full of wit as was ever a duck's egg of meat, and his satire was as plentiful as his wit. He could not rein himself in for classification, but bunching our daily and Sunday newspapers in a mass, he brought down the lash of his condemnation in a style that reminded one of the good old slave driving times "befo' de war."

Dr. Burrell enumerated the papers' crimes and shortcomings, their taste for vile police reports, murders, scandals, divorces, their careful spying out of all manner of indecency, as if of set purpose to make a paper as unfit as possible for introduction into a decent family. There was so much of truth in his arraignment that the hearts of the bulk of the audience were with him despite the full vein of overstatement which they were willing to allow was adopted for emphasis. He failed to describe the "ideal" newspaper, apparently leaving us to infer that it is just what the actual is not. A later speaker, however, described it, and said we should see it in the millennium!

Then followed addresses, "limited to five minutes" — the minutes being of elastic length—from Drs. J. W. Johnston, R. S. MacArthur, H. A. Stimson and John Hall. These rather softened down the tone of the opening essay, laid a fair share of the blame upon the buyers of objectionable prints—some of them church members—but for whose demand the supply would cease. A committee was appointed to consider the matter and see what can be done to secure cleaner papers. It consists of Dr. J. M. Buckley and the five minute speakers named above.

Conference of Churches.

The autumnal conference of the Manhattan-Brooklyn Conference of churches met with the Broadway Tabernacle Church, Dec. 3, nearly all of the (about forty) churches being represented. Mr. Charles P. Pierce presided, and Rev. E. H. Byington acted as scribe. Rev. F. B. Richards, assistant pastor, in behalf of the Tabernacle, welcomed the delegates. A minute on the death of Dr. A. C. Perkins, late president of the conference, prepared by Rev. D. B. Pratt and advocated by Dr. Meredith, was passed. The new Manhattan and the Patchin Avenue (Brooklyn) Churches applied for membership. Rev. A. E. Colton of Patchogue presented the claims of the Long Island Latin School, opened there under his care, and it was commended to the favor of the Education Society. The main question discussed was Church Expenses and How to Meet Them. It was led by Dr. R. J. Kent, who has attained great success in the working of the pew rental system in his Lewis Avenue Church. The Central Church's plan (Dr. Behrends) was presented by Mr. E. H. Crumpton, Plymouth's by Rossiter W. Raymond, and Tompkins Avenue's (Dr. Meredith) by Mr. G. W. Hebard. In the evening a minute in honor of Dr. Storrs, prepared by Dr. Behrends, was passed by a rising vote. Messrs. S. B. Capen of Boston and B. F. Blair made addresses on the Duty of a Christian Citizen, both of which met with a hearty response.

Evangelistic.

Notwithstanding the growing crowds, necessitating overflow meetings on week days and Sundays and the visible increase in religious interest, Mr. Moody could not be prevailed on to stay here longer. He goes to Sing Sing on Monday, the 13th, saying that the churches hereabouts can and should do this work themselves. A few of them have already begun extra meetings. He is earnestly moving to induce the churches of the country to devote the month of January to evangelistic work, giving up for the entire month their social engagements, amusements, etc., and giving the time so saved to prayer and work for souls. His own meetings greatly increased in power during the last week of his stay. Before an audience of about 2,000 every morning and 2,500 every afternoon the devoted evangelist sometimes preached as though he was inspired. The better portion of the city press has given him a daily audience of many millions, and he says he hears from it continually from all parts of the land. He has repeatedly said that these five weeks in New York have been the happiest five weeks of his life.

Four neighboring Brooklyn churches—Dr. Gregg's, Presbyterian, Dr. Dixon's, Baptist, Dr. Banks's, Methodist, and Rev. C. Myers's, Baptist—are to unite in evangelistic services immediately after the Week of Prayer, Rev. Dr. J. W. Chapman of the Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, giving a week's work to each church. In the eastern district also a movement is on foot to secure a series of union meetings, to be addressed by Drs. Meredith, Dixon, Parkhurst, Iglehart and Burrell, to begin in the Week of Prayer in the churches of Drs. Duryea, McElveen, Wells and others.

Natural History.

This study is decidedly booming with us. The Museum of Natural History has lately opened its large new sections, giving room for the display of many specimens heretofore completely useless because practically invisible. Bronx Park is now definitely fixed upon as the homes of the Zoölogical Garden and Botanical Park. All the collections of Europe in both departments, not one of which has a site equal to Bronx Park, have been carefully examined for the securing of their best features, and the work will shortly be driven with a will.

And now, at last, the Castle Garden Aquarium is open to the public, with its incomplete, but large and varied, collection of salt and fresh water fishes, to which additions are to be made, as rapidly as may be, of specimens native and foreign that for rarity or beauty are worthy of careful study. The collection of trout alone, of nearly every known variety, every disciple of Izaak Walton will own is worth a long journey to see.

Ian Maclaren at the Aldine Club.

Among the pleasant compliments shown to Dr. Watson (Ian Maclaren) in New York one of the most enjoyable on both sides was the afternoon "reception" given him by the Aldine Club. There he and Mrs. Watson met socially a large number of the authors, editors, publishers and bookish people who make up the select membership of the club. The free personal interview gratified the curiosity and deepened the interest of many whose admiring esteem the large-hearted Scotsman had already won by his unique literary work. HUNTINGTON.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

The Economic Conference.

More than usual enthusiasm has manifested itself at the sessions of this conference, held at the Chicago Commons for three days and at the Hull House two days. Special interest was shown in the addresses of Dr. Gladden, Mr. Ernest Crosby and Mr. H. D. Lloyd. Dr. Gladden emphasized the impossibility of leading any satisfactory life which does not recognize the fundamental principles of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Dr. Gladden is never radical but always reasonably Christian. Mr. Lloyd spoke on the money of conscience, which would do away with gold and silver and content itself with a certificate issued by Government indicative of value whether of labor or of production, to be current everywhere and to prevent any one from ever wanting work. Mr. Crosby gave an interesting account of the theories of Tolstoi, whom he has had the privilege of visiting. The blessings of the single tax were also set forth and the privileges of free speech of the most radical kind enjoyed to the utmost.

Visit of the Secretaries of the American Board.

Chicago has been favored the past week in the presence of two of the secretaries of the American Board, Drs. Smith and Daniels. The former, as stated last week, has given our theological students a comprehensive course of lectures on missions, with special reference to the origin, development and present proportions of the work under the care of the American Board. He was also in demand to address various meetings. Secretary Daniels is in the Interior to attend with Dr. Hitchcock, district secretary, a series of rally meetings which it is hoped will deepen the interest in foreign missions. He will speak two or three times every day while in the West. He was present at the Ministers' Meeting Monday morning and received a hearty welcome. He was also able to meet with the co-operating committee of the Interior, and give it some suggestions as to its duties. This committee is devoting itself with energy and wisdom to the work of spreading information as to the needs of the foreign field, and as to the advantages which come to a church from the regular observance of the monthly concert. It aims to secure a contribution large or small from every church in this vast territory and as far as possible from every member in it. It has also, in connection with the co-operating committees of New York and Boston, issued a valuable list of books relating to missions and which all our larger churches might easily and wisely put into their missionary libraries.

Ministers' Meeting.

The large attendance showed more than ordinary interest in the topic discussed. This was a review by Prof. E. T. Harper of Prof. George Adam Smith's first volume on the Minor Prophets. His paper was a thorough and comprehensive presentation of the facts brought out by Professor Smith's exposition, whose work on the whole was approved and the volume recommended for study. Professor Smith, said the reviewer, has the happy faculty of making the prophets live in our days. The International Sunday School Lessons were handled rather severely and the "hop, skip and jump method" condemned. The suggestion was offered that a book like the one under review be made a guide in Scripture study and that attention be confined to single sections of the Bible until the members of our classes master them. It is hardly probable that the sweeping condemnation of the international lesson would express the opinion of all who had taken much pleasure in listening to the professor. The feeling was general that a good deal may be said in favor of present methods of Sunday school study, and that even if not wholly satisfactory it may still be difficult to discover others which will be better.

A Long Step Forward.

The conviction has been growing in these parts that the period of destructive criticism is nearly over, and that it is time to be gathering up its results and formulating them for use. Accordingly, Dr. F. A. Noble of the Union Park Church has arranged with professors in four of our theological seminaries, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational, for a series of twelve addresses to be given on successive Sunday evenings, beginning Feb. 14, on such vital subjects as The Philosophical Basis of Theology; Evidences of a Personal God; Higher Criticism and the Pentateuch; Credibility of the Historical Books of the Old Testament: Prophecy, Object, Scope and Use; Inspiration, How to Be Defined and Accepted; Place of Christ in Modern Thought; How Far Apostolic Interpretation of Christ Is Authoritative; New Testament Interpretation as Affected by Recent Studies and Investigations; Evolution Theories and Christian Doctrine; Systematic Theology, Is There Still Need of It? The Teaching of Jesus in Regard to the Hereafter. The speakers are to have a full hour for the discussion of their themes, and are to be untrammeled in their utterance. They will speak what they believe and will be responsible for the views they present. It is expected that the addresses will be gathered into a volume and presented to the public. It is hoped that the conservative yet liberal-minded men who have been selected to prepare these addresses, by a calm, clear and perfectly honest statement of admitted facts, will be able to remove a great deal of the skepticism which now exists in certain circles and which greatly hinders Christian work. It will be seen that in the choice of the subjects Dr. Noble has covered nearly the entire field of religious criticism, and has so worded the different themes as to make it possible to touch upon every difficulty which any honest, earnest investigator may feel.

A Double Anniversary.

We mean that of the opening of the Auditorium in Chicago, seven years ago, and the celebration at the same time of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Chicago Athenæum, a literary and scientific school which has done not a little for the culture of the Western metropolis. Unitarians chiefly were the early promoters of the Athenæum enterprise. For many years Rev. E. J. Galvin was its efficient superintendent. The Auditorium was built by the contributions and energy of Mr. Ferdinand Peck, who presided at the meeting Wednesday evening, and after introducing President Harper, who spoke briefly in commendation both of the work of the Athenæum and of the influence which the Auditorium has had in molding our social life, gave way to Dr. Edward Everett Hale, the principal speaker of the evening. His topic was How to Make Men. He seemed to take it for granted that the erection of the White City and the construction of such buildings as the Auditorium prove the existence of men worthy the name in Chicago. He insisted that we should not be satisfied with a system of public school instruction which sends boys into the world at the age of fourteen, and girls only a little older, wholly unfitted to be leaders in the business which may employ their energies. Hence the importance of evening schools like that furnished by the Athenæum. He would have every youth learn the value of time and how to use it profitably. He would encourage him to save the hours which are generally wasted for the reading of history. He would do all in his power to educate our youth in the history of our country and of other countries, in the character and capacity of our own people, in the language of our own time, in the mysteries of steam engines and electrodes, in the laws of nature, and in what constitutes a man, so that young people may know the difference between a small man and a great man, between a genuine man and one who is only his counterfeit. Dr. Hale's final emphasis was on the need of cultivating the habit of self-help, through which alone success is attainable. FRANKLIN.

FROM SCOTLAND.

Model Glasgow.

We are sometimes pointed to as a model municipality, and it is hoped that the new town council will do even more than their predecessors to justify the compliment our city has earned. Sir James Bell, our late lord provost, was certainly a model chief magistrate and municipal ruler. In retiring from office he gave an interesting and hopeful review of the work and improvements carried out during his reign. Our rates are lighter than in any of our large cities. The tramway service, although the fares have been reduced to the cheapest limit, has been highly successful and bears witness to the good sense and management of our corporation. But it is now felt that we must soon change to a more rapid method than that of horse haulage, and our authorities expect that, with faster and cheaper cars, the city will become still healthier and extend much more widely.

The population in old Glasgow is more dense than in any other city. The manager of the tramway department has just returned from an inspection visit to America. Letters from a correspondent specially sent to your principal cities have been appearing in our leading newspaper, and they point to the probable adoption either of the cable or the overhead electric system. Our civic rulers deserve credit for the number of parks and open spaces they have provided for the health and recreation of the people. The purification of the Clyde is coming within measurable distance, and we do not despair even of seeing the pall of smoke that hangs too often over us effectually dealt with, if not altogether dispelled. There is still need, however, of introducing district free libraries, and especially of lessening the public houses and giving the people direct control of the ruinous drink traffic.

Growth of Christian Endeavor.

The recent visit of Dr. Francis Clark furnished striking proof that this American movement is growing rapidly amongst us, and, like other things, is working upward in accordance with the law of evolution. Dr. Clark was much encouraged by the magnificent welcome given to him by the Scottish Endeavorers, who filled our large St. Andrew's Hall to its utmost capacity. There is work for this movement to do in America, as Dr. Clark pointed out, in purifying the political atmosphere and in training young men and women to stand up publicly for the Christian ideals of righteousness. The same work is needed here. We have just concluded our municipal elections, and the newly-formed "Christian Progressive" Union shows how this program of the C. E. societies, as sketched by their enthusiastic founder, can be vigorously and directly applied in guiding public opinion and the large but undisciplined army of municipal voters. The attention of our churches has now been drawn to the presence and force of the Endeavor movement, and the problem is how to relate the churches and these thriving societies in a friendly and fruitful alliance. The starting last month of Scottish Endeavor, as the monthly organ of the movement in our country, is the latest sign that the Endeavor Union has come to this part of the world and has come to stay. We have now 344 registered societies in Scotland and a total membership of 15,000.

Academic Barbarians!

Our heroic youths of Gilmorchill University have just been distinguishing themselves as a physical force party. Not content with electing by their votes Mr. Chamberlain over Mr. Augustine Birrel, M. P., as their lord rector for the next term, they organized a torchlight procession through the streets to signalize the triumph of conservative and unionist sympathies. The usual termination of this enthusiastic procession is one of the city theaters, where, for the time being, the students mingle with "the gods" of the upper gallery and turn their torches into palms of victory. On this occasion they made for the Skating Palace in one of our thoroughfares with results damaging to numberless panes of windows in that institution and provocative of diverse pains in their own Grecian and other heads! The entrance to the Skating Palace was barred, a large hose procured from the superintendent of the city's fire department was turned on and the subsequent conflict between police and students was serious enough while it lasted. The case was happily disposed of this week by the presiding magistrate, and the eight students apprehended and charged with malicious mischief were let off with the Scotch verdict of "not proven."

Popular sympathy will go with this verdict, but probably the students, who were exasperated by the turning on of the water hose and still more by the batons of the police, will reflect wisely on this latest outburst of enthusiasm and conduct their next celebration with more restraint and order. Our universities are still a happy training ground. "These are our young barbarians all at play!"

Theological Colleges.

The usual commencement has been made in our divinity halls by one or other of the professors giving the opening lecture. Dr. Dods discussed at the New College, Edinburgh, the need of scientific training in theology and the relation of criticism to the practical work of the ministry. The theological sympathies of Dr. Dods are well known as those of an enlightened and advanced scholar, and his plea for the toleration of criticism, and for the cure of erroneous results by more and better criticism, was temperately and sensibly stated. Prof. A. B. Davidson of the New College, Edinburgh, still holds a unique place in the affections and admiration of students. His quiet but caustic remarks in the case of ignorance, or, still more, want of preparation, are as much relished as the freshest witticisms, and whet the appetite for the rare and original treatment of Old Testament characters and subjects given in his class lectures. Some professors may write too much, but the only regret in Dr. Davidson's case is that he does not write more. His promised book on Old Testament Theology will be eagerly waited for.

Principal Hutton of the United Presbyterian College called attention in his opening address to Mr. Gladstone's Studies on Butler, and this, along with Mr. Balfour's book on the Foundations of Belief, was also referred to by Professor Flint of Edinburgh. But the address of greatest freshness and practical interest was that delivered here by Prof. G. A. Smith on his experience of the colleges and universities he visited in America, and their superior endowment and equipment for study and research. Probably Dr. Smith's appeal to our wealthy laymen to come forward with funds, in friendly rivalry with some of your citizens, for the better endowment of our theological institutions will not pass unheeded. It was clear to Dr. Smith's hearers that he has gained physical as well as intellectual stimulus from his visit to your climate.

The announcement he made of the recent improvement in Prof. Henry Drummond's health was very welcome. Unfortunately another colleague, Dr. J. T. Candlish, is still laid aside by severe illness. Principal John Caird, D. D., of Glasgow University has recovered from the attack that interrupted the delivery of his Gifford Lectures, but there are outward signs of his advancing age. Rev. Dr. Paton Gloag of Galashiels has taken up the work of the chair vacated by Professor Johnston of Aberdeen.

Union of Churches.

The union of the Congregationalist and Evangelical Union bodies in Scotland is now arranged, and will take effect formally on the first of January, 1897. This result has not been reached without difficulty and mutual concession, but it is another proof that ecclesiastical Scotland is getting weary of the division of the churches and longs for union and reconstruction on as wide and inclusive a basis as possible. Rev. T. E. Davies, formerly of Elgin Place Congregational Church here, a vigorous opponent of this union, has been called to the Congregational church at Beckenham, near London, and is preaching with success to his new hearers. The union between the Free and United Presbyterian churches will be vigorously pushed forward this winter. A public meeting held at Dundee indicates that this movement is also hopeful.

Christian Symbolism in Puritan Churches.

By Rev. William Elliot Griffis, D. D.

What concord between Puritanism and symbolism? In first view there seems none, either in worship or church architecture. Above all, the Puritan sought for:

> The Veritas that lurks beneath
> The letter's unprolific sheath.

Penetrating to the core and fountain of truth, he cast away type and shadow. Men had too long used the likeness to hide the reality. Nevertheless, there is no divorce between Calvinism and art. The iconoclasts were Anabaptists if anything. Calvinism liberated the state and society from a corrupt church or, rather, corporation. It did not neglect the body while feeding the soul, but demanded a free and honorable citizen life addressed to human nature. It made no war against beauty, but it changed the standards of worth. Thoroughly democratic, it brought art to the common people and into the home which it glorified. It had little sympathy with nude art, because in the creation of that woman is first forced to conquer her shame. It taught an unbounded love of safeguarded liberty. It emancipated art from the monopoly of the noble and the priest, the rich and the powerful, and gave it to the common man. Giving art back again unto itself, it disclosed a field hitherto unknown in that everyday human life which Jesus himself glorified. It was in a Protestant republic that art found its richest bloom. Calvinism is not vandalism.

The Puritan is not a hater, but a lover, of beauty. Give him but one mediator between God and man, brush away the monopolies, the scaffolding and the symbols ordained by selfish human corporations, and his desire for what God makes and loves is found to be deep and abiding. The Dutch Puritan not only kept his palette and chisel, his organ and his music, but he turned his country, a morass by nature, into a lovely picture of art. He made the home a model, and clothed the citizen, burgher, and boer alike, in costumes clean and bright. The French Puritan was an insatiable lover of courtesy, fine manners, home comforts and adornments. The German Puritan held to the richness of his inheritance from his forest forefathers, while sloughing off the corrupting foreignism of Rome. The English Puritan's dress, wool and white linen, in its simple dignity, with clean body and nothing false on face and hair, is even today the delight of the artist. It was the Puritan Milton who sang of

> The high embowéd roof
> With antic pillars massy proof,
> And storied windows, richly dight,

as well as of "full-voiced quires" and "pealing organs."

Furthermore, if the descendants of Pilgrims and Puritans who (mistakenly) deem their fathers to have buried beauty in the "image-storm" do count it duty to follow in ancestral footsteps, then we can understand why Congregationalists, British and American, lose so many of their children. A steady stream of carriages before the doors of "the Establishment" beyond sea, and many of the Puritans' descendants in the American Episcopal churches do but show that human nature craves the symbol when robed in beauty.

As matter of fact, unshackled from the compulsion of a state church and in free America at liberty to choose, lovers of beauty have come to a new mind. Increasingly they follow the Scriptures which they so love in wisely making use of the symbol in letter, color and form. Behold their "platforms," "declarations," creeds and confessions—structures built of the "letter that killeth," especially when too much abounding. They are recovering also, "for glory and for beauty," whatever is an aid to worship. Even the Congregationalists have their saints and holy places, after whom, after which they name their churches and think it no sin—Robinson, Eliot, Winthrop, Harvard, Maverick, Pilgrim, Plymouth, Mayflower, Leyden. They, too, love beauty in pictures. Witness the tasteful publications, with generous use of Christian symbolism, of the C. S. S. and P. S., and their homes and church parlors. Behold the tremendous revolution wrought in meeting house architecture. So, also, the historic spirit waxing nobly strong, they honor and reverence, but without idolatry venerate, precious relics from home lands beyond sea, even building them into their church walls. Already they have in their calendar of days, Week of Prayer, one Sunday for prison reform, another for missions or local charities, this festal day or that, enough to make a new Christian year. Behold also their enrichment of worship, prayer, praise and song, with responses, the people taking part instead of the parson monopolizing all.

In a word, the children of the Puritans are less Protestant and more Christian. They are no longer afraid of Rome. Giant Grim has become a quiet prisoner. They do not protest against the pope and his corporation. They watch them. Readiness is shown even to receive the Romanist, when purged, into the true, that is the Congregational, fold. The Puritan descendants honor, according to the eternal fitness of things, what is local, historic, providential. They see God in history. Reasonable play is allowed the affections of life and proprieties of feeling in memorials and gifts which take artistic form. They would be clean every whit. Their prayer is, "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head." Nor, wiser than what is written, would they reform beyond Scripture limits. What "for glory and for beauty" Jesus and the apostles have suggested and what within the realm of symbolism is shadowed forth in Biblical parable, metaphor, allegory, trope and proverb, they believe may be used for edification. Hence, their readiness to embody in art, for holy use on font, table, book, tablet, program, church wall, front or roof, for temporary decoration or for permanent memorial, what will teach not legendary, but Biblical truth. Are not these the facts?

Believing that we state no more than truth, may we not here, with practical intent to aid building committees, architects of Congregational church edifices and all those who would beautify God's sanctuary and make the place of his feet glorious, suggest the riches and the limitations of church ornamentation?

Avoiding what is purely sectarian and all that suggests the church legend of Christ and his associates rather than the reality of gospel record unstained by factitious or belated tradition, we suggest the following as legitimate and appropriate within the Congregational meeting house:

1. Symbols taken wholly from Scripture.

2. The use of what will ascribe and manifest in beautiful forms glory and thanksgiving to God because of his signal providences in the history of our fathers and of their children.

3. Grateful acknowledgments of local blessings, advantages or talents.

4. The expression within carefully marked limits of those human affections, implanted in us of God, and out of which duties spring, such as the filial, paternal, fraternal and patriotic.

Puritanism rightly interpreted believes not only that God was but that he is. It does not, as in Roman Catholicism, lay stress upon the physical sufferings of Christ but upon his whole life (as well as upon his last agony), and his life in us as the hope of glory. Hence while we may, rightly I think, make visible expression of the cross, the nails, the hammer, the crown of thorns, the scourge, the reed, sponge and spear, these will be in subordination to the more joyous symbolism so richly set forth in his own parables. The coin, the lamp, the sower, the woman with leaven, the hid treasure, the pearl of great price, the ten virgins, the good Samaritan, the prodigal son, the publican and the Pharisee have all not only a permissible but an honored place in that Christian symbolism that knows no sect. Surely it is as right, as it is much more beneficial, to teach these ever fresh truths in the guise of plastic and manual as well as literary art, and by the permanent stone of the wall or glass of the church windows as by the types, lithograph or chromo.

First of all, near the pulpit should be the necessary articles of furniture significant of the two sacraments, the eucharist and baptism, which Christ ordained—the communion table and the baptismal font. On these three features, or elsewhere in the edifice, may be represented the appropriate Scripture emblems of the corn and wine, or wheat and grapes. The lily, the lamb, the lion, the dove, the olive branch, the palm, the burning bush, the tongues of fire, the Alpha and the Omega in Greek letters, or the four Hebrew consonants of the name Jehovah, the burning candle, the Bible and the communion chalice, or bread trencher, the seven-branched golden candlestick, the four faces of the living creature in Revelation, the ox, the lion, the eagle and the man, are all Scriptural emblems, and there are many more that could be used with edifying effect. In America the trailing arbutus flowers may surely have a place in our symbolism, as a token of God's kindly providence and loving message to the Pilgrims. The "lily among thorns" is a symbol of a holy life amid worldly temptations, and of a church pure amid errors lifting itself up to the light of God. No age can wither, nor custom stale, the appropriateness of this symbol in churches allied with that of Scrooby, Leyden and Plymouth.

In God's care for the sparrow and the raven, his clothing of the lily, in the migration of birds, in the sweet alternation of the seasons, in the deep instinct of the furred, the feathered or the finned tribes we have symbols manifold and touching. Surely we have Christ's implied authority for the use of these whereby we may glorify God, even as we are exhorted so to do in the Bible.

Reserving for a future article treatment of temporary decoration and the outside of the meeting house, may we all ever pray, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish thou the work of our hands upon us, yea the work of our hands establish thou it."

CONGREGATIONALISM AND THE ELECTION.

BY REV. ROBERT P. HERRICK, C. S. S. AND P. S. SUPERINTENDENT FOR MINNESOTA.

Now that the smoke of the political battle field has somewhat lifted we can already discern certain elements which contributed to the great victory of Nov. 3. To be sure the interplay of the forces, moral and political, will be the study of statesmen for years to come. But even now the main lines along which the battle was fought and won are apparent, and one naturally asks himself, "What part did our own well-loved denomination have in this great victory?"

The late political contest, which began over an economic question, soon shifted to other grounds and in the end was settled as a question of national morals. To most of those who voted for the Republican ticket the chief interest centered in the victory of honesty over repudiation, in the triumph of the doctrine of national authority in the face of theoretical rebellion, and in the preservation of the national judiciary from the assaults of partisanship. I do not mean all those arrayed against the Republican party saw these questions in this light, but those who supported with such ardor the Republican cause were convinced that the morality of the question at issue was as we have stated.

It should be noted, also, that Congregationalism has cultivated the judicial temperament more than most other religious bodies. Its proportion of educational institutions, and of educated men, is beyond that of most other religious bodies in America. This policy has produced a habit of mind in the denomination as a whole which is disposed to carefully weigh a matter of importance before it is passed upon. This deliberation is manifest in our national gatherings where questions of moment are often kept before the churches for consideration for years before the decision is reached. You cannot easily stampede a Congregational church or a Congregational community however sensational and overwhelming may be the immediate presentation of a new theory.

This disposition to consider a matter of moment in a fair-minded way, and to avoid hasty conclusions, has been apparent among us in the great struggle just ended, and has enabled our denomination to bear a noble part in this latest saving of the nation. The national census of 1890 gives diagrams to show the relative denominational strength in the different States of the Union. There were only fifteen States where the numerical strength of Congregationalism was sufficient to include them in this table for comparative purposes. The first twelve of these fifteen States went strongly for the principles of national honor. Of the remaining three, California was also on the side of victory for national morals. The thirteenth and fifteenth States were Nebraska and Kansas, the former the home of Mr. Bryan and the latter inheriting even to our own day the extremist tendencies of the brave old Abolitionists who fought for free soil before the war.

In the newest States, such as Washington and the Dakotas, Congregationalism has absorbed into our church at least fifty per cent. of members from other denominations who were alien to our methods and ways of thinking. In some of the newer churches there is not a single original Congregationalist to be found in the membership, and the minister is often a contribution from another denomination. Give these churches in Washington and the Dakotas time to assimilate our great fundamental Congregational principles and the second generation will show the same conserving force found in the older States. In Iowa and Minnesota, to which forty years ago the Congregationalists of the East sent out the Iowa Band and the young men, Richard Hall and Charles Seccombe, thoroughly imbued with Congregational ideas, and into which all the years since the Christian churches of the East have been pouring home missionary funds as well as planting educational institutions, we see great majorities for national honesty and national preservation. While Congregationalism is numerically on a par with other denominations in these States, it is true that popular thinking has been wonderfully dominated by our own denomination. This is due to our traditional policy of reaching and educating the leaders in the political and intellectual world. More than will ever be duly realized is the nation in this latest great success of popular government indebted to the toil and sacrifice, the gifts and the prayers which Congregational New England has projected into the great middle West. There are two great duties laid upon us as a denomination in view of this result.

There is the obligation resting upon us to do for the whole nation, as a denomination, what we have done for less than one third of the States. We owe to the preservation of this great land and to the conserving of the principles of liberty itself to do again in the South and Southwest what we have done so nobly in the North. With a profound conviction that a belief in God and an obedience to him is essential to our national preservation, we must continue our policy of educating the leaders. I wish that our next National Council might devote at least one-half day to the consideration of the lapsed condition of our denominational educational interests and the opportunity that is offered in this great nation of ours for further efforts along a line which cannot be neglected if the republic is to stand the shock of further political battles such as we have just come through.

The second duty laid upon us involves the consideration of the country neighborhood as distinguished from the village and city. Put a group of people on farms beyond the reach of Christian institutions and allow them to neglect the Christian Sabbath and its services for a series of years and you will find them returning to godlessness and dropping out of touch with the sentiments of Christian civilization. As the most carefully cultivated rose, neglected for years, returns to the original scrawny bramble, so the neighborhood of godly, patriotic people, when similarly neglected, will become imbued with religious indifference, and patriotic indifference as well. The public schools will take care that they are educated in books, but not in morals. Now allow a blatant talker to come into such a community and present some selfish scheme of repudiation and you have the combination that did much toward threatening the political integrity of this nation a few weeks ago. Some two decades ago we joined with other denominations in the cry, "Look out for the strategic centers," and our home missionary work has largely followed that plan and congested its work in the cities and villages for twenty years. As the cry was lifted a few years ago, "Back to the land," so we need today to lift up the new cry, "Back to the country school district and to the rural neighborhood with the religious institutions of our fathers."

In the West our missionary effort is strung along great parallel lines of railroad like beads upon a thread, while the country for thirty or forty miles in between has been practically neglected. We cannot soon forget how after the first shout of victory was lifted on Nov. 4 we were held in painful suspense because it seemed possible that later returns might endanger the apparent victory. We were waiting for returns from just such neighborhoods as I have described and it was this vote that threatened for a brief time the whole result. To secure the perpetuity of this Government by a free people in the future struggles of organized selfishness against righteousness we must turn ourselves with profound concern to the evangelizing of these thousands of neglected country districts through the West and the far West.

THE PROTESTANTS OF THE ZILLERTHAL.

A STORY OF PERSECUTION AND EXILE.

BY W. D. MCCRACKAN.

The name of the Zillerthal in the Tyrol suggests strolling singers and zither players. Natives of that valley have at various times made world-wide reputations for themselves by their musical talents and their jolly dances. As a race they display the good and evil characteristics of mountaineers perhaps more strongly than the inhabitants of any other Alpine district, for they are inclined to be open-hearted and expansive in their social intercourse; they dearly love a fight occasionally; they are not overindustrious; they cling to their old customs, and they spend a good deal of their time in the inns.

Nothing more picturesque can be imagined than the local costumes, now unfortunately in process of disappearance. The men, for example, wear buckskin breeches. The knees are left bare to grow brown with exposure; woolen stockings cover the calf of the leg down to the ankle, which is also bare. A felt hat with a feather—the inevitable feather worn by every man and boy in the Tyrol—sits jauntily on the head, and a thick jacket of gray homespun is the rule. As for the women, they have discarded almost every part of the ancient costume except the hat. This is of black felt, not unlike in shape to the cap usually assigned to Mercury in classic sculpture—a simple and essentially beautiful headgear. It is enlivened by a gold cord and two tassels that hang in front down to the brim. As for the rest, the whole population seems strictly controlled by the local Catholic clergy, and the valley is well sprinkled with churches and chapels from end to end.

Amid such surroundings one does not look for traces of a Protestant movement. Yet, curiously enough, the Zillerthal not quite sixty years ago was the scene of an evangelical revival which led to persecutions and eventual expulsions. The seeds of the Reformation were once sown almost as plentifully in the Tyrol as in other German-speaking lands. The people of the Zillerthal, in particular, seemed to be carried away by the thoughts of freedom from ecclesiastical domination which the new doctrines promised them. Luther's teachings and, later, those of the Anabaptists threatened to detach this whole Alpine world from Rome, until the authorities, by systematic house searchings, by the burning of heretical books—not to speak of the use of torture, hanging, quartering and other inquisitional methods—managed to stem the tide. The counter or Catholic Reformation finished the work of so called redemption, and the Tyrol became, what it is now, the most ultramontane of lands. In 1619 the clergy seemed to consider their task complete.

Curiously enough, however, the Reformation, in spite of these elaborate persecutions, still counted a few adherents in scattered places throughout the Zillerthal, so that expulsions occurred at various times during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Contact with foreign countries of Protestant persuasion nourished the movement, as well as the surreptitious importation of Lutheran books by those men of the valley who traveled about in Europe as peddlers.

In 1816 the sect of Inclinants, as they were called, begged to be allowed to form a parish of their own. This demand was rejected, but a few years after a deputation waited upon the Austrian Emperor Francis in Innsbruck in order to renew it. Although Francis showed himself well disposed towards the petitioners, his answer was exceedingly noncommittal, and the succeeding years found the position of the Inclinants more precarious than ever. It was especially their refusal to go to confession at Easter and their persistent appeal for the reception of both elements in the communion which angered the Catholic clergy. Every means of persuasion was employed, but to no purpose. Even Protestant travelers and tourists were forbidden to visit the Zillerthal. It was thought that a system of complete isolation would cure the offensive heresy.

At length the question came up before the Diet of the Tyrol, where it dragged along through shifting complications until, in 1837, an imperial decree was launched, which commanded all those Inclinants who were not willing to return to the Catholic faith to emigrate within four months from date. They could choose either foreign countries or other provinces of the Austrian empire, where Protestant communities already existed. It was virtually a decree of expulsion.

With the same resignation and endurance which had marked their conduct in the past the Inclinants set about making arrangements for their departure from the land of their fathers. Only those who know the intense love for their native soil which characterizes the Tyrolese can appreciate the heroism of this sacrifice.

A certain Johann Fleidl, at once one of the poorest and yet most highly esteemed of their number, was sent to the king of Prussia with a petition which begged his majesty to let them form a colony somewhere in his country. The mission was successful. Before the four months had passed 427 inhabitants of the Zillerthal left their homes, and after three weeks' march arrived at Schmiedeberg in Silesia, where shelter was temporarily provided them.

Eye-witnesses have described this train of sorely tried but determined men and women passing down the mountain paths with their movable belongings loaded on carts or carried on their backs, family by family. The children walked on ahead, then the mother, while the father brought up the rear with the household effects. The sight was so pathetic that even the most bigoted populations through which the Inclinants made their way were moved to show sympathy and to lend their aid. In many cases the exiles were too poor to employ horses, and were themselves harnessed to carts. Perhaps a faithful house dog trotted by their side, or a birdcage was perched upon the top of the load, but for the rest only the most necessary articles were carried along.

The clergy alone along the route remained impassive or hid themselves in their parsonages. From the valley of the Inn the exiles passed through Salzburg with the greatest order, and clad in their Tyrolese costumes, until they reached their destination. Lands were eventually assigned to them in Erdmannsdorf at the foot of the Riesengebirge, where the descendants founded a colony called Zillerthal. It is said by travelers that the houses still recall the peculiar architecture of the Tyrolese chalets. The costumes have still been preserved in a certain measure, and the dialect especially is handed down from father to son almost unimpaired. The colony is essentially an agricultural one, dairies and market gardens forming the principal means of support.

At first frequent communication was kept up with the kinsmen in the old Zillerthal. This was particularly the case during the lifetime of Princess Marie, later Queen of Bavaria, who took a deep interest in the exiles and in the success of the colony. She was in the habit of taking frequent trips into the Tyrol to report progress or to carry messages from one family to another. But at the present time the Prussian colony has to a great extent grown away from its parent valley and the feeling of kinship is gradually yielding before the difference in religious belief. The expulsion of Protestants from the Zillerthal is now practically forgotten in the Tyrol, which continues to be as submissive to its clergy as ever.

The Acts and epistles furnish the topics for the Sunday School lessons next year, and the American Institute of Sacred Literature offers examinations in four grades for pupils and teachers, an outline course of study covering these books for adult classes, a course of reading for teachers and also a correspondence course for those who wish to do the most thorough work. Finally, for ministers and Bible students, critical and exegetical courses are offered in both English and Greek through correspondence. The fees for individuals taking these examinations and courses are from fifty cents to $8. Information may be had by addressing the institute at Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

THE BURDENS OF INTEMPERANCE.

BY WARREN F. SPALDING.

The Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor has just published a report upon its investigation of the effects of intemperance in its relation to pauperism, crime and insanity. The volume of 416 pages contains more valuable information upon this subject than any other I have ever seen. The investigation was thorough and the results are stated very clearly and comprehensively. It is not a book to be read, but one to be studied with the greatest care. The following abstract may be of value to those who are not accustomed to statistical reports, as well as to many who will not be able to obtain the report. It deals only with the three questions already mentioned, and does not touch the invaluable facts presented in the report regarding the effects of license and no license, or those regarding the use of tobacco and drugs by paupers, criminals and the insane. The report also shows the nativity of all the persons whose cases were considered, classifying them as "citizen born," "alien" and "naturalized," and giving the birthplaces of their parents. This part of the report shows how heavy is the burden of immigration upon Massachusetts.

INTEMPERANCE AND PAUPERISM.

The investigation of pauperism covered 3,230 cases, 2,633 males and 597 females. As 352 of these were of children under 15 years of age, whose pauperism had no relation to their own habits in regard to the use of drink, they should be excluded from the consideration; 2,878 cases remain—2,428 males and 450 females. It was found that 1,966 of the 2,428 males and 140 of the 450 females were addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors. In the cases of 211 males and 38 females the liquor habits could not be ascertained. There were 251 male total abstainers and 272 females of the same class. It will be noticed that the proportion of abstainers is very much larger among women than among men—272 of the 450 women and only 251 of 2,428 men. In other words, there is very little pauperism among men who abstain from drink, but women, being more dependent upon others, lapse into pauperism when the source of support fails.

It does not follow in all cases that the pauperism of persons who are addicted to the use of intoxicating drink is due directly to this habit. The investigation was therefore carried a step farther. The same 3,230 cases were analyzed, the question being, "Is the person's present condition of pauperism due to the use or abuse of intoxicating liquors?" In 1,274 cases the answer was "yes," in 1,427 it was "no" and in 529 cases the facts could not be ascertained. The percentage of persons whose pauperism was due to drink may seem small, but it must not be reckoned on the entire number of cases. The 352 under 15 years of age should not enter into the account. Of the remaining 2,428 males and 450 females, the pauperism of 1,217 males and of 57 females was found to be caused directly by their own drinking habits. We have already seen that 1,966 males and 140 females were addicted to drink. These 1,217 males whose pauperism was caused by drink are almost two-thirds of all who drank at all, while only 57 of the 140 drinking women traced their pauperism to this habit. It is of interest to note that only 477 men and 28 women are reported as "excessive" drinkers, so that fully one-half of the pauperism of the drinkers was directly traceable to moderate drinking.

Two other important facts must be noted. In 156 cases the pauperism was found to be due to the drinking habits of one or both parents. In 47 other cases it was due to the intemperate habits of legal guardians (not parents), and in 99 other cases it was traced to the intemperate habits of other persons. Presumably most of these cases were of persons under 15. If we add the 1,274 cases in which the pauperism was due to the drinking habits of the pauper and the 302 in which it was traceable directly to the intemperance of others, we have 1,576 cases of pauperism (out of 3,230) in which drinking habits were the cause of the pauperism. In other words, one-half of the pauperism of persons committed to State institutions is due to intemperance. In many other cases it is doubtless remotely responsible, but this is not demonstrated. (The paupers supported by towns and cities were not investigated, and State paupers supported outside the State institutions were not considered.)

INTEMPERANCE AND CRIME.

In considering intemperance as a cause of crime all the commitments to Massachusetts prisons for a year were investigated. There were 26,672 cases—23,581 of males and 3,091 of females; 15,543 males and 2,032 females were committed for drunkenness, and 608 males and 49 females for drunkenness in connection with other crimes. In other words, 18,232 of the 26,672 commitments—nearly 69 per cent.—were for intemperance. There were 7,430 commitments of men and 1,010 of women for other offenses. It was found that 3 367 of these men and 273 of the women were intoxicated when their crimes were committed. This adds another 13 per cent. of all the cases, so that 81.97 per cent. of all the commitments were found to be for offenses committed when the offender was intoxicated.

Returning to the 7,430 cases of males and 1,010 of females in which drunkenness was not the offense charged, the question was raised whether the offender was sober or in liquor when he formed the intent to commit the crime. It was found that 3,303 of the 7,430 men and 262 of the 1,010 women were in liquor when they formed the intent. This is 42+ per cent. of the entire number. The form of the inquiry was further changed, in the interest of thoroughness, to ascertain whether the intemperate habits of the criminal led to a condition which induced the crime. (The offender may have been in this condition as a result of intemperate habits, though sober when he planned the crime or committed it). It was found that 3,931 of the 7,430 men and 363 of the 1,010 women who committed these other crimes—about 51 per cent. of the whole number—were induced to do so by conditions growing out of their intemperate habits. That is, 3,565, or 42+ per cent., were intoxicated when they planned the offense, and 629 others, 8+ per cent., were induced to commit crime by conditions due to intemperance, though sober when the crime was planned.

Still another question was propounded in the investigation: "Did the intemperate habits of others lead the criminal to a condition which induced the crime?" An affirmative answer is given in 3,611 cases (3,173 males and 438 females) of the 8,440 crimes other than drunkenness. It also appears that the intemperate habits of others were responsible for the conditions which led to drunkenness itself in 12,023 cases of drunkenness, and 481 cases of drunkenness in connection with other crimes. (The value of the answers to this question cannot be estimated without a very careful study, nor can it be treated within the limits of this article. Great caution should be exercised in drawing conclusions from them without such study.)

Summing up the relations of intemperance to crime these facts appear: That 68+ per cent. of all the commitments were for drunkenness, simple or complicated with other crimes; 42+ per cent. of the other crimes were planned when the offender was intoxicated, and in 8+ per cent., though the plans were made when he (or she) was sober, the condition which induced the crime was due to intemperance. Adding the 18,232 cases of drunkenness and the 4,294 cases of other offenses due to intemperance, we have 22,526 cases in which a direct connection between intemperance and crime can be traced, out of a total of 26,672, or 84+ per cent.

INTEMPERANCE AND INSANITY.

The third important branch of the investigation covered 1,836 cases of insanity—974 males and 862 females. There were 488 cases in which the habits of patients could not be ascertained. Of the 1,348 cases in which the facts were known, it was found that 515 males were drinkers and 184 were abstainers; 156 females were drinkers and 493 were abstainers. Tracing the effect of the drinking habits, it was found that in 383 cases (296 males and eighty seven females) the insanity was due to intoxicating liquors. There were twenty cases in which the intemperate habits of parents and 184 cases in which the intemperate habits of grandparents were found to be the cause of the insanity.

The cases of 422 delinquent, defective and pauper children were considered. In 114 cases their dependence or delinquency was due to the drinking habits of parents.

WASHINGTON AS THE SEASON OPENS.

BY LILLIAN CAMP WHITTLESEY.

During the past six months delegations from all parts of the country have visited Canton. Now that it is definitely settled that a large and important delegation from Canton will come to Washington in the early spring, the capital city is preparing its welcome. It is a time honored custom for the citizens of Washington to make all plans for the inauguration of a president and to settle the bills—this without regard to party. The coming man is considered the guest of the city, and all unite to give him a hearty welcome on the initial day of his term of service. It is the spontaneous tribute of a people who have no vote and no representative in the Government to a new administration. We have a population more than five times that of Nevada, which has three electoral votes. Our people, judiciously scattered, would have yielded the combined vote of Idaho, Montana and Wyoming, nine electoral votes, enough to have visibly reduced Major McKinley's majority had we been of the same mind as the people of those States, but we are not.

A prominent business man is usually chosen to act as chairman of the inaugural committee, a suite of offices is selected and the preparations go smoothly on. The street pageant by day, the illumination and fireworks by night and the ball are, on each succeeding quadrennial, made as grand as possible. The last is really but a reception, and the receipts from it are generally sufficient to meet all expenses and leave a surplus for the poor of the District. This year a gold Democrat, the president of the Board of Trade, who is also a good business man and the leading spirit in our largest Baptist church, has been named as chairman of the committee. The District of Columbia is quite equal to getting up an inauguration; all that is needed from the rest of the country is to provide the president elect. When Major McKinley was in Congress he made his home for a portion of the time at the Ebbitt House, and a suite of rooms have been engaged there for him and his party when they come on to the inauguration.

Many people will be sorry when the doors of the White House swing out to its present mistress. Said one lady in official life to her the other day, "If the ladies had their say you would never leave us, Mrs. Cleveland." "Don't you think after a time you would get to fussing?" was the pleasant response. Then she told of explaining to her little daughter Ruth, before the election, the meaning of the flags upon the streets, that the affairs of the nation were to be taken out of her father's hands and given to another, and that then he would not be the President any more. The child listened carefully, then asked in a most anxious tone, "But won't he be my papa any more?"

The Thanksgiving message of 1896 has certainly received the strong approval of Christian America. Its author heard Dr. Talmage say from his pulpit on Thanksgiving Day that it was the most intensely Christian proclamation ever issued from the executive mansion. Other ministers in the city also referred to it with great satisfaction. But the Jewish rabbi lamented the departure of the President from his heretofore peculiarly broad and liberal public utterances.

It was a very orderly holiday, so warm that ices took the place of pies and puddings at the family feasts. There was little in the outdoor life to remind one of New England Thanksgivings, unless the whirr of the bicycle bells suggested jingling sleigh bells. A sunrise prayer meeting, a bicycle meet and two hours' run, a return to a praise service followed by a sermon was the program at one of the Presbyterian churches. The Congregational churches united in an eleven o'clock service in the audience-room of the First Church.

Bishop Keane passed two or three days here on his way from the Pacific coast to Rome. He was most enthusiastically welcomed, and on leaving the city was escorted to the B. & O. depot by a large company, including many ladies, students, priests, senators, army officers and prominent citizens.

The new library is nearly complete, but the books have not been moved over. The transfer, classification and arrangement of the vast accumulation is now under discussion by the joint committee on the library. They have called to their assistance Mr. Herbert Putnam of Boston, Mr. Fletcher of Amherst, Mr. Baker of Columbia University, New York, and other prominent librarians from various parts of the country.

Throngs of people found their way to the Capitol on the opening day of the second session of the Fifty-Fourth Congress. Tourists prolong their visits or time them to witness the assembling of the two houses, and the residents of the city feel that its life is not at high tide till the flags are flying on both wings of the Capitol. The morning was warm and radiant with sunshine. The fresh toilets of the ladies, the many flowers upon the desks, the cordial greetings of the legislators made a bright and animated scene for the half-hour before the two bodies came to order.

The Senate galleries have been reseated with opera-chairs—a great improvement in comfort and appearance over the old settees. The Senate diplomatic gallery was well filled, Sir Julian Pauncefote having the place of honor. From the press gallery two well-known English correspondents viewed the scene below, and Mr. Mark Hanna with General Porter and Mr. H. C. Payne looked on with interest.

Simultaneous with the opening of Congress was the first convention of the Anti-Saloon League. Before they adjourned the Nonpartisan W. C. T. U. were here, and the first result of these meetings seems to be the introduction of a bill by Hon. Elijah Morse to the effect that all use and sale of liquor in the Capitol or Capitol grounds be prohibited. This passed the House almost immediately with but seven opposing votes.

PRACTICAL COMRADESHIP.

BY REV. NATHAN H. WHITTLESEY, D. D.

When the rioters who made a night attack on one of the Leadville mines last summer were repulsed by the vigorous volley of the militia, there was surprise that though the firing had evidently been effective no wounded men were left upon the field. According to the newspapers, when these desperate men made their escape through the darkness they carried off their wounded with them. Surely Congregational Christians will not permit a lawless mob to outdo them in the simple duty of practical comradeship.

In the onward movements of the present century, ministers have been among the leaders. It is hardly too much to say that from Ohio to Oregon, from Minnesota to Mississippi, not a Sunday school has been established, not a church has been organized, not a Christian school, academy or college has been planted, not a sanctuary has been built and dedicated, without gallant leadership and heroic sacrifice on the part of home missionaries.

Some of these good men are now disabled by the infirmities of age; some have been stricken down in the thick of the battle, wounded, it may be, unto death, or, perhaps, with a fair chance of life and years of further service if they can have just now the care and assistance which they sorely need. Shall we, Congregational Christians, their closest comrades in the army of the Lord, leave them to suffer wherever they have chanced to fall? Or shall we lift them up, and by medical care and nutritious food and freedom from physical and mental distress nurse them back to life and health, or, at the very least, cheer their last days by the loving ministrations of the great denomination in whose ranks they have served so faithfully? There can be but one answer. Our churches are too just, too appreciative, too kind to think of any other. The stricken veteran, if needy, must have his little well-earned pension. The widow, whose toils and sacrifices have equaled his, must not lack for loving care.

Our churches, in theory at least, have always favored such provision; at first through life-pastorates, then, as pastorates grew shorter, through State boards of ministerial aid or relief; and finally, when the migrations of ministers and the perigrinations of parishioners burst all State bounds in the settlement and Christianization of the great West and South, through the National Council's Ministerial Relief Fund.

The trustees of the National Council are the legal corporation and control the investment of the fund. Seven years ago it consisted of $10,000, a bequest from Mrs. Knowles of Worcester. The ministerial relief committee appointed then, with Rev. Dr. F. A. Noble as chairman, by vigorous efforts in which Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor was conspicuous, increased the fund in three years to $25,600. At that session of the council it was felt that the work was so important as to demand the whole time of a secretary, and the present writer was appointed. The council at Syracuse last year found the fund increased to $82,500. Rev. Dr. Noble, after six years of wise and generous leadership, at his own request was released from further service and his place was taken, appropriately, by Rev. Dr. H. A. Stimson, who had suggested the orginal bequest and had been actively connected with the work from the beginning. In the face of hard times the fund has been slowly built up from $10,000 to $95,000. From helping six families the annual interest now enables us to aid thirty-two, of whom three are in Massachusetts, three in California, with one or more in many States between.

It goes without saying that ministers as a rule should and do practice economy and thrift and make their own provision for a rainy day; that the children whom they have reared and educated should and do requite them with loving care; and that the local church will abate not a jot of its duty and privilege toward him by whose labors it has profited. The State societies for ministerial relief are quietly doing a noble work within their own boundaries and deserve a far more general and regular support than they receive. But, to fill the gaps between them, to supplement their deficiencies in lean years, and to cover the vast stretches of our newer territory where our churches are young and poor, where special hardships are encountered, where salaries are small and where no State societies exist, there is urgent need of a reliable income from the National Council's Ministerial Relief Fund, increased to several times its present size. There are two practical ways in which you, layman or minister, can easily render welcome assistance. First, confer with your church committee, and write to the secretary at New Haven, suggesting the probable best time for a possible invitation to present this interesting and little understood work to your Sunday congregation or prayer meeting. For fullest economy of time and travel tentative arrangements should be made this month for the whole of 1897. Secondly, at your annual church meeting secure the adoption of ministerial relief as one of the regular objects of benevolence, so that in the Congregational Year-Book, in the seventh column, immediately after the six columns devoted to the honored societies of our denomination, your church may nevermore be represented by one of those vacant, stupid, staring ciphers. Remember the Scripture which says: "Give a portion to seven."

Some of the wide-visioned leaders of thought in Christian circles in England are planning to have a great unsectarian gathering of English-speaking Christians next year. Principal Fairbairn, Dr. John Clifford, and other eminent Nonconformists, are co-operating heartily with the clergy of the Established Church.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Dec. 27–Jan. 3. One Spiritual Truth I Have Learned This Year. Ps. 90: 1–17.

If every additional year of our lives fastened firmly in our minds and hearts one spiritual truth, we should, before long, have great possessions. It does not take so very many great truths to make life worth living. As another has said, "If a man can say with all his heart the first clause in the Apostles' Creed, 'I believe in God, the Father Almighty,' that truth contains enough motive power to reconstruct his life." The trouble is we do not thoroughly understand what it is to master a truth. It is not to receive it on the authority of some one else, even from the lips of our parents or through some beloved teacher or friend. We cannot grasp and hold spiritual truth in the same way in which we learn that two and two make four and that the world is round. The truths of our holy religion become real to us only as we have felt their force and bowed to their authority. A truth which buoys us up in the struggle of life, which we find as necessary and as indispensable as daily bread is for our food, is a truth learned, and unless we have in some such fashion as this apprehended the matter the truth is meaningless to us, even if every one else believes it and a thousand ecumenical councils have pronounced it authoritative.

Think over, then, a half-dozen of the great central truths of our faith and ask yourselves if the wear and tear of the year now closing, the mixture of the sweet and bitter in your cup, has made them any more real and dear to you. Do you believe any more firmly than you did twelve months ago that God reigns, that Jesus saves, that love is the greatest thing in the world, that patience and gentleness conquer, that character is wealth, that he who loses his life finds it? If any of these truths have been actually learned, stored away in the heart, put into practice in the life, then the year has brought you blessing, whatever else it has failed to bring.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, Dec. 20–26. How History Hinges on Christ. Luke 1: 46–55; Phil. 2: 5–11.

Christ creating righteous order among mankind; bringing all the world into obedience to him.

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

WEEK OF PRAYER TOPICS.

The Boston Ministers' Meeting, through a committee of which Rev. Smith Baker, D.D., was chairman, has prepared the following list of topics for the Week of Prayer:

"YE ARE MY WITNESSES."

Sunday, Jan. 3. SERMONS. Acts 1: 8. PREPARATION FOR WITNESSING.
Monday. PRAYER AND WITNESSING. Acts 1: 12–14; 2: 1–21.
Tuesday. WITNESSING THROUGH REVIVALS AND PERSONAL EFFORT. Acts 8: 5–40.
Wednesday. WITNESSING THROUGH MISSIONS. Acts 13: 1–16; 16: 1–24.
Thursday. THE CHURCH WITNESSING IN ITS OWN COMMUNITY. Acts 10: 1–48.
Friday. THE CHURCH WITNESSING THROUGH EDUCATION, ART AND LITERATURE. Acts 17: 16–34.
Saturday. THE PROMISES TO A WITNESSING CHURCH. Acts 4: 23–37.

This is the list of topics suggested by the Evangelical Alliance:

Sunday, Jan. 3. SERMONS. Lam. 3: 25.
Monday. THANKSGIVING AND HUMILIATION.
Tuesday. THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL.
Wednesday. NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.
Thursday. FOREIGN MISSIONS.
Friday. HOME MISSIONS AND THE JEWS.
Saturday. FAMILIES AND SCHOOLS.
Sunday. SERMONS. Matt. 28: 18–20.

The Evangelical Alliance, United Charities Building, New York city, furnishes its topics free to all applicants, considerably amplified as respects sub-topics and Scripture references, and pastors' notes as well. The Congregationalist Handbook, just out, contains both lists of topics.

The Conversation Corner.

I COPY now for you, as I promised last week, the rest of that letter written by our fellow-Cornerer who rode from Portland to Montana on his bicycle. It may be of practical value to other young men who are planning a transcontinental tour on their wheels next year. Better trace his journey on your big atlas.

At Pierre, the capital of South Dakota, I purchased a two-quart canteen and set out for "the west," where there are no railroads, the ranches many miles apart and hotels unknown. I passed through big herds of wild-looking cattle, with their Texas steers with wide-spreading horns. My bell, my waving hat, and an Indian war-whoop or two never failed to send the whole bunch careering across the prairie. Birds, squirrels and gophers were my constant companions. The ranch people are quiet and reticent, never communicative as in the East, unless indeed you come upon an old New Englander. It is hard to get information or advice. You are welcome to such fare as they have and do not usually need to ask for it.

From Pierre, where I crossed the deep, swift, muddy Missouri, it is 120 miles across the wild country to the Cheyenne, where the Black Hills begin. Then there's a rough, almost deserted country to Miles City, away up in Montana. Just in the edge of this State I had to wait three or four days for the creeks to go down, so that it was safe to ford them. Some were clear and cool, and it was fun wading across them. Most were very muddy, so that you could never get your shoes and stockings on again, if you took them off to wade over. I saw many antelopes and one wolf in the Montana wilderness. There were stretches of thirty and forty miles between human habitations. Think of worrying yourself all those long, lonely miles for fear you might branch off on the wrong trail—as I did once—and no one to inquire the way of.

At Miles City is the railroad again. A good many stations are only section houses, and sometimes the only sign of a station is a big board up, giving the name of the place. I found better riding on the northern bank of the swift, winding Yellowstone. Here in Montana all the streams flow like race horses and, if deep, are dangerous to get into. They rise rapidly after a heavy rain and get black (or yellow) with mud, but soon run down and clear again. I paid fifty cents to be ferried across the Yellowstone on the big current ferryboat, that runs itself across by being swung obliquely to the swift current, being fastened by big pulleys to a heavy iron cable stretched from shore to shore. Here the roads kept losing themselves at ranches, and then I had to ride on the railroad tracks, often walking where the ties were poorly ballasted. This railroad riding and the heavy canteen strapped over my coat on the bundle-carrier over the front wheel at last brought me to grief, for on my last day's ride, when only eighty-five miles from my present destination, the front fork broke at the axle. I was four miles from Billings, where I had to take the train to Big Timber, which is my brother's station. His ranch was still forty-five miles away, but I found friends who took me to the ranch.

My wheel was a Columbia Model 40, with single tube tires. The cyclometer started at 0000 at Portland; the ride to and around Boston ran it up to 150; at Oberlin it was 903; at Chicago, 1248; at Sioux City, June 24, 1826; at Pierre, S. D., 2147; at Fort Mead in the Black Hills, 2333; at Willow Creek, where I had to wait for the water and spent July 4, 2434; at Miles City, 2592; where I broke down, 2761½ miles, the distance ridden in just six weeks from home, including stops.

Just before reaching Chicago I fell in with John H. Witt of Fall River, who was trying for a record ride from San Francisco to New York. In Chicago I found I was just behind John La France and Norma De Veaux, who were on a tandem ride for record from New York to San Francisco. I kept just behind them all the way from Ohio to central Iowa, getting within an hour of overtaking them in Iowa. They ran away from me every Sunday while I lay over, but toward the last of the two weeks I nearly caught them. People along the way said I was not far behind them, and once, as I have already said, they had passed about an hour before. That was the last report I heard of them, as our routes diverged the next day. A. R. F.

This last paragraph is a grand illustration of Christian principle. This young man, though in a strange country, anxious to get ahead on his long journey and to avoid expense, followed his conscience and "rested on the Sabbath Day," as did the Pilgrim Fathers at Clark's Island two hundred and seventy-six years ago on the Sunday when most of you will read this. He kept the commandment and was so much the better for it that, although a whole day behind, he was able practically to overtake them in the long run. One of the best things I heard "Ian Maclaren" say in Tremont Temple was his eulogy of the Scotch people for keeping the Sabbath, in which he referred to the founders of this nation: "And did not your fathers fear the Eternal and hallow the Sabbath Day"?

I have two answers to the query of Nov. 12 as to the Constitution coach built at Amherst, Mass., for General Jackson. A gentleman of that town writes:

. . . Henry J. says that Knowles and Thayer, the old carriage manufacturers, made in 1836 a landau out of live oak from the frigate Constitution and sent it to the president, via Hartford, also that it was on exhibition at the Three Counties Fair at Northampton. One of our citizens has a rule made of live oak from the same frigate, presented by one of the workmen from K. and T.'s shop, so there seems to be no doubt of the fact. If you find out anything else about it, please let us know.

A gentleman in the West "lets us know" that the Amherst coach is at the Hermitage—or was thirty years ago!

GRIDLEY, ILL.

My Dear Mr. Martin: The account of the old Constitution in the "Corner" of Nov. 12 brings many things back to me. I made many visits on board of her at the Charlestown Navy Yard. I saw her come in from sea once, under sail, with good, fair northeast wind. It was one of the sights of my lifetime. I remember well the cutting off the figure-head. The man who paid the captain to do it was one of a party of five who sat down to a supper a few nights afterwards with the figure-head as the central ornament of the table, and he is a hale and hearty citizen of Boston today.

In the spring of 1865, when on duty at Nashville, Tenn., I went out to the plantation of General Jackson and saw a coupé, with a seat for two persons and a high seat for the driver, which was made from the discarded timbers of Old Ironsides. It was not painted, and many stains of iron rust were plain to be seen. The last time it was used was when General Jackson took James K. Polk to Nashville, when he was nominated candidate for president. The general rode home from Nashville in it, and was the last man who rode in it.

I read the Conversation Corner with interest, as it tells so much about the home and scenes of my boyhood. I was born in a house on the corner of Purchase and Summer Streets, in the town of Boston, in 1820, and my early days were spent all over that part of the country. A BOSTON BOY.

O dear! Now comes, as I write, the Corner of Dec. 3, ending with this aggravating line: [I omit an unimportant paragraph.—D. F.] I wonder who is to be judge of what is important! The omitted paragraph was my peroration about the Corner party, and said that "in honor of the tenth anniversary, and of Mrs. Coffin's kind reception, a souvenir page of pictures, including Pomiuk, the old Captain, the Two Little Pilgrims, the Corner cats, Pan the dog—and D. F., was presented to each of the guests." (Was it because he was not mentioned first?)

"Ten years! The boy who wrote the first letter for the Corner (about his rabbits) is now a Senior in Yale College and the other early correspondents—whose names are carefully preserved—are, every one of them, ten years older than in 1886! I scarcely take up a catalogue of any college without finding names of boys or girls once familiar in Corner letters. So, hish-hash-hosh for our dear old Conversation Corner and all its members, past and present!"

Mrs. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Mayflower Pilgrims. As this is the anniversary week of the landing at Plymouth, we will collate a few facts about it, which we can refer to in our Scrap-books. The Pilgrim colonists sailed from Holland to England in the Speedwell in July, 1620, embarking at Delfthaven and landing at Southampton. After two attempts to proceed on their voyage in both vessels, the leaky Speedwell, with eighteen passengers, was left at Plymouth, and the Mayflower alone sailed from that port Sept. 6-16 (Old and New Style), with one hundred passengers, besides the captain (Jones) and crew. Two of the latter, named Trevore and Ely, were hired to stay for one year and then returned to England—thus making the one hundred and two sometimes cited as the full number. One man, servant to Dr. Fuller, died on the passage, and Oceanus Hopkins was born, keeping the number the same.

The Pilgrimage. They sighted Cape Cod Nov. 9-19, on Saturday morning, Nov. 11-21, anchored in Provincetown harbor, and "fell upon their knees, and blessed the God of heaven, who had brought them over the vast and furious ocean, and delivered them from many perils and miseries." Sixty-six days that great company had been confined in that small ship. What could the boys and girls have done all that time—for there were twenty-eight of them under twenty-one—besides watching for whales in the great ocean and perhaps noting the wails of the little Oceanus! Where should they settle? A full month was spent in answering that important question. Wednesday, Dec. 6-16, twelve of the Pilgrims—I could give you their names—started in the Mayflower's shallop, around the shore of the bay, and in the darkness and storm of Friday night landed on Clark's Island near Plymouth. On Saturday they got dry, on Sunday they rested, on Monday they explored the main land, and decided there to settle. That was Dec. 11-21, "Forefathers' Day." On Tuesday the shallop returned to the ship, which on Friday sailed for the new home, arriving on Saturday, Dec. 16-26.

Who Were the Pilgrims? Here is a list of those who signed, in the Mayflower cabin on the day of the arrival at Cape Cod, the famous compact which began free government in America.

1. Mr. John Carver.
2. William Bradford.
3. Mr. Edward Winslow.
4. Mr. William Brewster.
5. Mr. Isaac Allerton.
6. Capt. Myles Standish.
7. John Alden.
8. Mr. Samuel Fuller.
9. Mr. Christopher Martin.
10. Mr. William Mullins.
11. Mr. William White.
12. Mr. Richard Warren.

17. Francis Cooke.
18. Thomas Rogers.
19. Thomas Tinker.
20. John Ridgdale.
21. Edward Fuller.
22. John Turner.
23. Francis Eaton.
24. James Chilton.
25. John Crackston.
26. John Billington.
27. Moses Fletcher.
28. John Goodman.
29. Degory Priest.
30. Thomas Williams.
31. Gilbert Winslow.
32. Edmund Margeson.
33. Peter Brown.
34. Richard Britterige.
35. George Soule.
36. Richard Clarke.
37. Richard Gardiner.
38. John Allerton.
39. Thomas English.
40. Edward Doty.
41. Edward Leister.

Remarks. I judge that most of you are descended from the three Governors, from Elder Brewster, from Captain Standish, from Dr. Fuller, the beloved physician, or from John Alden and Priscilla Mullins! No doubt most of the rest of you are really descendants of some of the others. Just now as I wrote one of the names a little girl of the same name rang my bell—of course she is a descendant! I suppose the Hopkinses and the Whites contest the honor of descent from the youngest pilgrim—was it Oceanus, the little mariner, or Peregrine, the little traveler? It is a still greater honor to inherit the sturdy, heroic virtues of those men and women—having faith in God, believing in prayer, keeping the Sabbath Day, bravely maintaining the right. At some other time, if you wish, I will perhaps give you the names of the Pilgrim wives and children, or of the emigrants on later ships.

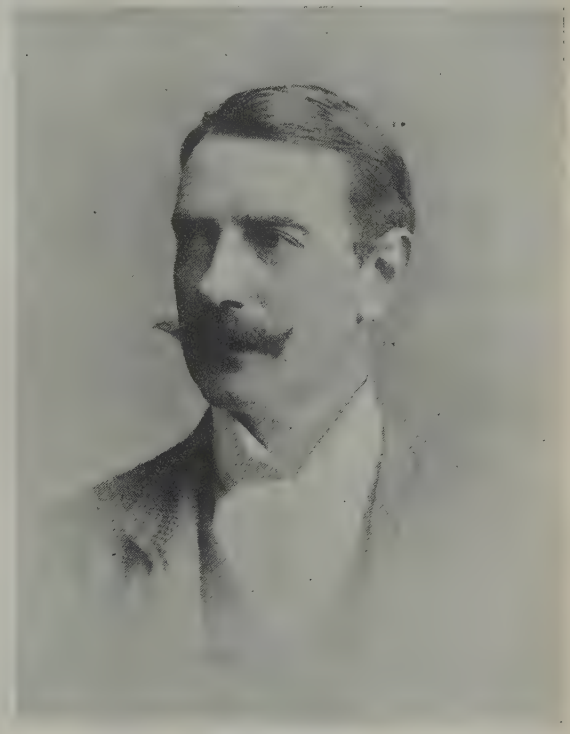
The Puritan in Art.*

By Albert Dawson, London Editor of The Congregationalist.

So rich is Puritan history in material that readily lends itself to the purposes of the artist that one is surprised that English painters, poets, dramatists, novelists have made so little use of it. Possibly the recent marked revival of interest in all that relates to the Puritans and Pilgrims may lead to additions to the literary and artistic memorials of a period that largely shaped the future of the British and American people.

British artists have almost entirely neglected the tragedy and pathos of the Puritan exodus from England. When they have turned to the period for inspiration, it has generally been to delineate some trifling semi-humorous incident designed to point the moral against the sternness of the Puritan mind towards all levity of conduct. Of course the stirring events of the Civil War have received due attention from the historical painters, and among these Mr. Ernest Crofts, one of the most recently elected Academicians, easily takes first place. He has made the conflicts between Roundheads and Cavaliers his special subject, and his canvases record in a most realistic manner the principal battles of the war. But just as the hardships, the homely joys and desperate struggles of the Puritans in their New England life have appealed most strongly to American novelists and poets, so it has been left to American artists to deal seriously with the Puritans pictorially.

GEORGE HENRY BOUGHTON.



CHARLES WHYMPER.

Foremost among these stands Mr. George Henry Boughton, R. A., who must be reckoned an American by right of education and early training. Born in Norfolk in 1833, he was taken an unweaned babe to America. In his very youth he was drawn towards Puritan subjects—"inspired by Longfellow and Hawthorne, and even their sad and serious histories; by such grim documents perhaps more than by other means." Events being more plentiful than details, Mr. Boughton has always gone for local color to the fountain head—old colonial records. As to the people themselves, what they were like in dress and form and feature, it was only after infinite research and careful putting together of pictorial evidence that he could present a possible likeness of any sort of Puritan, gentle or simple, verbal descriptions being of the most meager kind and of little use. By patience he managed to arrive at more than he at first expected, and from first to last the search itself was most interesting to him.

The knowledge of detail that Mr. Boughton's work displays has been partly gleaned from fugitive engravings in rare old books, of which he has many, including dozens of quaint Dutch volumes. Among the books in his considerable library of Puritan and Pilgrim literature in the large house he built for himself at the top of Campden Hill, Kensington, is a copy of Bartlett's Pilgrim Fathers that he had when a boy in his teens living in Albany. At the beginning of his career as an artist his interest in Puritan subjects led him to take a month's sketching tour along the New England coast from Portland to Plymouth. It was after coming to England, in 1861, that he set himself in earnest to paint Puritan pictures, beginning with several subjects from the Scarlet Letter. These were followed by his first historical picture—The Pilgrims Going to Church Armed Against Savages and Wild Beasts—which is now in New York. All Mr. Boughton's Puritan pictures that have not remained in England have found their way to that city. The Puritans' First Sunday—that pathetically vivid representation of the Pilgrim Fathers holding divine service amid the snow under the shadow of a great rock—hangs in a public gallery in England. These, The Return of the Mayflower, the companion picture, Pilgrims Watching for the Relief Ship, and his numerous single figures, Rose Standish, Priscilla, etc., are too well known in America to need description.

When I asked Mr. Boughton whether he contemplated painting any more Puritan pictures, he said one does not contemplate subjects, they come to you fully armed and you have to do them. Some of the most important subjects have not yet been touched and he may begin one any day. It is five years since he was in America, and to the question whether he had any thought of paying another visit he replied, in his whimsical way, that he was always thinking of going and generally went without thinking.

"It is pleasant and interesting," said Mr. Boughton, "to note that the pleasant and interesting descendants of the grim old Puritans of New England are showing lively concern in their artistic elements and the pictorial value and charm they are to artists, poets and novelists, people that they would have put in the stocks in good old days if they had them to deal with. They were delightful and charming as artistic material in spite of themselves."

In Mr. Boughton's studio I had the privilege of seeing the remarkable old Dutch painting that he found a year or two ago. It represents the departure of the little band of Pilgrims that left Delfshaven on the Speedwell to join the Mayflower at Southampton.† The dozen or so male figures trooping along the quay to the vessel seem intended to be portraits, the costumes suggesting Miles Standish, Elder Brewster and others. Mr. Boughton remarked that this is perhaps the only genuine pictorial document relating to the New England Pilgrims in existence. The picture, which is painted on an oak panel thirteen by twenty-three inches, is not signed or dated, but Mr. Boughton has no doubt as to its genuineness. The rich coloring is as fresh and vivid as if just from the painter's brush, having, as Mr. Boughton put it, been preserved by dirt. The picture was formerly in the Marlborough collection. Americans will have an opportunity of viewing this treasure, as it is about to be sent to New York.

Another American artist residing in England, whose close study of early English life has brought him into fame, is Mr. E. A. Abbey, whose name a year or two ago was added to the roll of associates of the Royal Academy. Although he has obtained recognition as the finest illustrator of Shakespeare, he has painted at least one picture of Puritan times which will live with his more widely known work. May Day Morning represents a lover and his lass stealing out betimes—the cock is still sounding his "shrill clarion" on the wall—to gather the fragrant May blossom in accordance with the old time custom. Each already wears a garland—the lad round his wide felt hat, the lass on her hair—and the youth gently urges on the maiden, who hangs seemingly coy behind.

In the Paris Salon a few years back there was a painting from the brush of Mr. Walter McEwen, one of the clever band of young American artists residing in Paris, which represented the grimly superstitious side of Puritan life in England. A beautiful maiden, charged with being a sorceress, stands, with fettered wrists and ankles, in the common cell of a jail. Beside her stands her heart-broken mother, evidently appealing to her to confess to the Justice Shallows of the time who are clustered around the door. Of a far different nature is the laughter provoking picture, Between Two Fires, by Mr. F. D. Millet, still another American who has made his residence in England. It reveals the common room of an inn in which, seated at the substantial table, is a typical clean-shaven, black-cloaked and large collared Puritan, vainly trying to appear at ease under the badinage of a couple of pert serving maids. Excellently painted in all respects, the picture was one of the most popular in the Academy exhibition in which it was first presented to the public, and insured for the artist a hearty welcome for all his subsequent efforts.

Oliver Cromwell has often served for the principal figure in paintings, but never with more success than in a work by Mr. David Neal, an American artist who adopted Munich as his training school. Born at Lowell, Mass., he was brought up in a home imbued with the traditions of the Pilgrim Fathers. Some of its furniture, indeed, could be traced back to Mayflower immigrants, and the memory of it has served good purpose in the painting; Mr. Oliver Cromwell of Ely Visits Mr. John Milton. This was in the days of "Old Noll's" butchering and farming, when as yet the Protectorate was undreamed of. In the left of the picture stands the sturdy figure of Cromwell, hat and staff in hand, an intent listener to the sweet music which is being discoursed by the poet, whose slender form is seated at an organ in a window recess to the right. In the center of the picture is a substantial bookcase with wide-flung door revealing rows of volumes, while on the table are two or three books lying open, with others on the floor beside a high-backed armchair standing as it was pushed away from the table when the student left it. The whole picture is skillful in composition, convincing in its local truth and one of the best representations of a scene of the period.

Turning to English artists, Mr. Charles Whymper occupies a niche by himself as the depictor of the homes of the Pilgrim Fathers in England. The illustrations in Dr. John Brown's Story of the Pilgrim Fathers are excellent specimens of the admirable work of Mr. Whymper, but for whom that splendid memorial might never have been written; for it was Mr. Whymper—who, by the way, is a stanch Congregationalist and brother of Edward Whymper, the mountaineer—who suggested to Dr. Brown the idea of the book. Fifteen years ago during a sketching visit to Boston Mr. Whymper's interest was aroused in Pilgrim subjects, and he has since then made a specialty of them. He has spent much time in the eastern counties of England, making sketches of places and objects associated with the Pilgrim Fathers that it never occurred to any other artist to depict, and has several times visited Holland.

One of our best painters of historical subjects is Mr. W. F. Yeames, R. A., an authority on old English costumes and librarian of the Royal Academy. His claim for notice is a charming work entitled, And Where Did You Last See Your Father? It represents a tribunal of stern-faced Roundheads sitting in judgment in a fine old room of a Royalist mansion. Standing on a footstool at the opposite side of the table to the officer who puts the question is a bright little fellow in dainty silk clothes who does not seem disposed to tell what he knows of his father's whereabouts. Immediately behind him stands a breast-plated, helmeted pikeman, with his right arm placed round the chubby-faced child sister of the boy under examination. With hands to her eyes she is sobbingly dreading her turn to be catechised. Beyond this little group are the mother and an elder daughter, whose faces show deep anxiety lest some childish indiscretion reveal the hiding place of the Royalist.

Consulting the Witch gives another glimpse of the superstition which prevailed even in those times of deep religious feeling. Mr. Fred Roe depicts a pair of Puritan lovers who are evidently seeking from the "wise woman" of their district knowledge of the future. Crouching in the deep chimney corner is the figure of the witch warming her skinny hands at the miserly fire, while before her the swain, with doffed hat, is putting the fateful question, the girl standing timidly behind him, half frightened at the enterprise.

But, as has been said, humor is the note struck by most of the English artists who paint these times, and it will suffice to mention two pictures as typical of the whole. One by Mr. Gordon Browne, son of Hablot K. Browne, better known as Phiz, the illustrator of Dickens, was shown at the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colors this year. Entitled Caught in the Act, it presents a Puritan youth and maiden who have been discovered at the moment of kissing by a sour-faced elder. Surprise and dismay are on the girl's face, surprise and defiance on the youth's. Of similar nature is Mr. A. W. Bayes's Caught Tripping. A group of three pretty Puritan maidens, on the left of the picture, are indulging in the stolen pleasure of a quiet dance. One is gayly showing the others the steps, her sober gray dress held up with both hands revealing her pretty buckled shoes, while the two learners are watching her with envious delight. On the right the door is thrown open, and there stands the horrified master of the house with Bible under arm just returned from "meeting." We can picture for ourselves the sudden subsidence of the high spirits, the tearful eyes and woe-begone faces of the three trippers as they receive the inevitable lecture.

The true artistic history of the Puritans has yet to be painted. As Mr. Boughton well says, "Another and a quite different way of regarding their splendid history might inspire another, and a different, artist to dip deeper into the well and bring up just as fresh a draught as ever was seen before—perhaps fresher!"

AN OLD-FASHIONED WILL.

HOW JONATHAN EDWARDS DISPOSED OF HIS VALUABLES.

Here is a copy of a portion of the stately will and testament left by Rev. Jonathan Edwards, the famous New England clergyman, who died in the year 1758.

In the name of God, Amen, the fourteenth day of March, 1753. I, Jonathan Edwards, of Stockbridge, in the province of Massachusetts Bay in New England, being in my usual State of health of Body and in the perfect Exercise of my understanding and Memory, through the Goodness of God, but considering the frailty and mortality of mankind, and having much in the Infirmity of my Constitution to put me in mind of Death and make me sensible of the great uncertainty of my life, do make and ordain this my last will and Testament, and first of all, I give and recommend my Soul into the hands of God that made it and to the Lord Jesus Christ, its glorious, all-sufficient, faithfull and chosen Redeemer, relying alone on the free and infinite mercy and Grace of God through his worthiness and mediation for its eternal Salvation; and my body I commend to the earth, to be committed to the dust in decent Christian Burial, at the Discretion of my Executrix hereafter named; hoping through the Grace, Faithfulness and almighty Power of my everlasting Redeemer, to receive the same again, at the last day, made like unto his glorious body.

After arranging for payment of debts and expenses attending his funeral, he bequeathes to each of his three sons, Timothy, Jonathan and Pierpont, 638 ounces of silver, certain conditions being made to allow for their being brought up to learning or a trade.

To his daughters, Lucy, Susanna and Eunice, each, 319 ounces of silver, when they shall come of age or when married. To "Daughter Burr" (wife of Aaron Burr), 279 ounces of silver, in addition to the 40 already received of her portion. To "Daughter Parsons and Daughter Dwight," who had already received their portions, he makes no additional gifts.

The inventory of his estate, made the same date, is as follows:

Best beaver hat, one beaver poorer, best wigg, one wigg poorer, great coat, black coat. Then are enumerated two poorer black coats, morning gown, silk vest, callimanco vest, leather and camblet vests, leather and cloth breeches, collars, sleeves, cravats, two stocks, twelve bands, four pairs of gloves, two of mittens, two knee buckles, stockings, etc., also a staff valued at eight pence and a belt at two pence.

The valuation of quick stock includes:

A negro boy named Titus, £3 6s. 8d., yoke of oxen, 2 cows at £3 each, 4 cows at 50s., 2 heifers at 30s., 1 calf, 6 hogs.

Among "husbandry utensils," hetchels, tow axes, hammers, pinchers and "an old iron beak" are found.

The Home

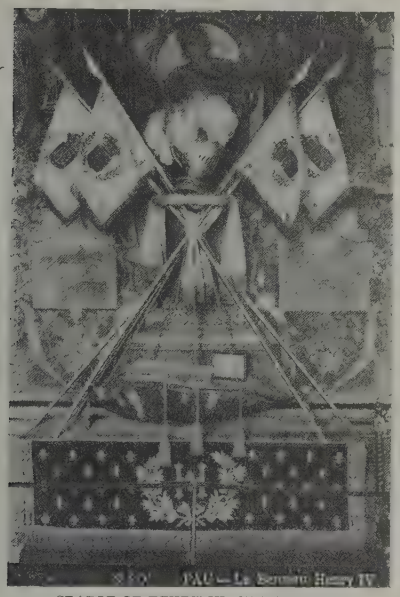
Let us look to the one life as our model, and turn to Him who lived it on our earth as to the guide and friend and helper who alone can strengthen us. Just in so far as we cleave to that teaching and follow that life shall we live our own faithfully.

CRADLE SONGS.

BY JANET SANDERSON.

I.

In an ancient castle at sunny Pau,
Gently the baby swings to and fro,
In tortoise shell cradle, with chains of gold
Hanging from crest and helmet old,
Wrapped in satin and laces rare,
Crowing and cooing, this baby fair,
Crowing and cooing—what? No one knows.
Then off into dreamland the little one goes.
Sweet sleep, royal babe! Sweet sleep!



CRADLE OF HENRY IV. OF NAVARRE.

II.

In a palace old of German kings,
A fair queen mother softly sings
To her baby boy as he rocks to and fro
In a quaint, carved cradle of long ago,
Crowing and cooing as babies will.
Fainter the lullaby grows until
Hushed is the little one, gone to his rest,
Dimpled hands folded over his breast.
Sweet sleep, princely babe! Sweet sleep!

CRADLE OF WILLIAM I. OF GERMANY.

CRADLE OF PEREGRINE WHITE OF PLYMOUTH.

III.

In a cottage home of old Plymouth town
A mother dear lays her baby down.
No royal crest above his head,
No ancient carving for his bed,
Only a simple wicker cot,
With the kingdom of love for baby's lot.
Crowing and cooing, then sleeping lay,
Rocked by sweet mother love alway.
Sweet sleep, lowly babe! Sweet sleep!

A LADY OF CLAY.

BY LETITIA JEAN SMYTH.

IN THREE PARTS. PART III.

For the second time that evening Roger stood panting at the top stair of the eighth flight of the tenement to which he had been summoned. He had found the little newsboy in a pitiable condition, suffering scarcely more from the bruises than from the ignorant attentions of his neighbors. Jamie's chum had given the doctor a hasty account of the accident—the reckless dash in the deceiving dusk across the crowded thoroughfare, the stumble and fall under the hoofs of the prancing horses, which crushed the active little frame into a helpless mass of bruised flesh.

Some of the tenement people in mistaken kindness had taken the child from the hands of the ambulance doctor and carried him back to the poor, forlorn place he called home. Roger had found them—men, women and tiny children—gathered in a weeping crowd around Jamie's cot. With quiet authority he sent them all from the room, and then gently set about his professional task. When his patient was as comfortable as possible Roger left him in his chum's care and went through the house in search of some one who would be competent to act as nurse for the night. It was possible that with good care the boy would pull through, but internal injuries might have been received which would make his life the matter of a few hours.

But trained nurses do not abound among the dwellers in East Third Street, and never before, in the half-dozen years of his medical work, had the young doctor felt so helpless and discouraged for lack of an assistant who could be safely trusted with a flickering life. By the time he reached the last flight of rickety stairs he had come to the conclusion that he himself must watch through the night by Jamie's bed. He was waiting a moment outside the door to recover his lost breath when a voice, weak and tremulous, came from the other side.

"That's awful good wot yer sez 'bout de Lord Jesus a lovin' us allers. An' say, Miss Ellie, won't yer sing de song wot yer teached us to de mission 'bout de 'blessed angels?'"

Roger almost gasped for joy. "Miss Ellie! That's my slum angel sure. A merciful Providence sent you here tonight, and you can do more good to that poor little chap than I can now." And with an air of inexpressible relief the young man leaned back against the rude stair rail, waiting to catch the first notes of Miss Ellie's quavering old voice.

It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth
To touch their harps of gold,
Peace on the earth, good-will to men
From heaven's all-gracious King;
The earth in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing.

The words rang through the narrow hallway borne on a voice of heavenly sweetness, thrilling Roger's very soul. From all quarters of the dingy tenement poured the wondering inhabitants, crowding hall, stairs and landing, pressing as near to the door of the enchanted room as the doctor's orders would allow.

"It's an angel," whispered a ragged little girl in an awe struck voice.

"'T'aint neither," corrected another. "It's Miss Ellie a-singin' to Jamie Duffy. I seed her a-comin'."

"Well, an' aint she a angel?" queried a sunken-eyed woman. Then the whispered comments ceased, and the crowd stood in solemn stillness, strange enough to that house of brawls and confusion, spellbound by the music.

O! ye beneath life's crushing load,
Whose forms are bending low,
Who toil along the climbing way
With painful steps and slow—

The beautiful voice throbbed with a yearning compassion. Over in a dark corner a woman was sobbing bitterly, and a gaunt, wretched-looking man near Roger hid his face in his rough hands.

Again, with a glad triumphant ring, the full, rich voice gave utterance to the message of hope.

Look up, for glad and golden hours
Come swiftly on the wing;
O rest beside the weary road
And hear the angels sing!

For a full minute after the last word they waited breathlessly, those poor, starved souls, lest the faintest echo of the heavenly music should be lost, and then, moved with one impulse, they burst out into a hearty, ringing cheer for "Miss Ellie."

"Sh! Don't yer know thet mebbe Jamie's a-dyin'?" said one of the women.

Roger roused himself and, knocking gently on the door, pushed it open and without waiting for a response entered the squalid room. A small lamp fastened to the wall cast a feeble, flickering light, but a celestial glory seemed to stream from the corner to which Roger's eyes leaped. A woman, in fair, white garments, was bending like a guardian angel over the little sufferer on the tiny cot. She turned slightly as the door creaked on its rusty hinges, and in the dim light her pure profile appeared clear and distinct. Roger dashed his hand across his eyes. There she was, just as he had often seen her, the acknowledged queen of society, only now there was no trace of the old pride and coldness on the fair face and the dark eyes glowed with a tender shining. He crossed the room to the bedside and took the hand she held out to him in both his own.

"Miss Morton!" he said joyfully, and there was no questioning in his voice, not even the slightest intonation of surprise. His vaguest dream, so secretly, so jealously cherished, had come grandly true and in the first great joy he forgot to wonder why or how. Miss Morton flashed him a quick, grateful look; there were no tiresome explanations needed here.

With professional self-command Roger turned to his patient. The little face on the hard pillow was white and drawn, and the physician's experienced eye recognized at once the unmistakable seal that the death angel was slowly setting there.

"Can anything more be done for him?" Miss Morton's voice almost pleaded.

"Nothing, I fear, that we can do. This is one of the many times when human skill must look on powerless." Then, for the first time, it occurred to Roger to wonder what possible relation there could be between this beautiful, courted woman of the world and the dying newsboy. Something swift and subtle made Miss Morton conscious of this.

"He is one of my mission boys," she said simply. "He sent for me and"—

"You came! You came here alone?" To himself he added, "The brave, great-hearted woman!"

A wave of sadness swept over her face. "Alone? Yes. Why should I not? There was no one to come with me here."

With a sudden glad thrill it came to Roger that they two alone, apart from all the rest of their world, were one tonight in thought and sympathy. Tomorrow, afterwards, would they ever again be associated so?

A choking sound from the cot, like a stifled sob, made them both turn quickly. "Mother, kiss Jamie good night!" The childish voice was tremulous with pleading. The little fellow was dreaming of the one happiness, lost long ago, that had blessed his hard life. Miss Morton bent down and pressed her lips softly on the white forehead, and Roger caught the glitter of tears in her beautiful eyes. Jamie smiled contentedly. With a sudden impulse the girl slipped her arm under the poor pillow, drew the child's head to her bosom, and on the folds of costly satin the little newsboy breathed out his weary life.

"You must go home now, Miss Morton. You will let me go with you, will you not? I have arranged with one of the men to look after things, and tomorrow we will see what is to be done. This has been a trying experience and you are tired." Dr. Cameron's voice, with a tone of gentle authority, roused Miss Morton from the reverie into which she had fallen. With a slight movement of assent she rose from her half-kneeling posture by Jamie's cot and let Roger put her cloak around her. Yes, she was tired, pitiably tired. That must be what made her so weak and childish. Her lip had never quivered like that before when a man took polite care of her. She leaned back against the carriage cushions and closed her eyes wearily. The excitement, with its nervous stimulus, had passed, and the reaction of the evening strain was upon her. The wretched past and the tangled, difficult future whirled through her brain in distracting confusion. It would be very hard, at least until her position was perfectly understood, and in her exhaustion she felt a helpless shrinking from that cold criticism which she had been so willing to face a few hours ago.

Roger, grave and silent, was watching the beautiful face beside him with a mighty longing in his heart and words of bitterest self-reproach trembling on his lips. Some day he would tell her how utterly he had misjudged her. Suddenly something white fluttered down from her cloak to the dark carriage robe. It was one of the azalea blossoms. With a quick, graceful gesture Miss Morton drew the cluster from its hiding-place and held it toward him. "Your flowers!" she exclaimed impulsively, "that taught me to live, to live true! O, I cannot tell you what I owe to you!"

Roger leaned forward with an eager movement. "There is something which you do not owe me, something which you have a just right to withhold," he said in a deep, quiet voice. "I have thought you cold and unfeeling, caring no more for people like Jamie than you did for the rags they wore. I sent you those white, heartless flowers to tell you what you were, as I had wrongly judged you. Tonight I found you ministering like an angel to one whom I thought you would despise. You see what I want now, do you not? Your forgiveness for wronging you so deeply. Is it too much to ask?"

For one throbbing moment Roger waited his answer, and then Miss Morton turned her face to his, her glorious eyes shining with a happy light.

"I must be forgiven, too," she said, and there was no mistaking the meaning that thrilled through the words. Roger's heart bounded with a glad confidence. The hand with the gleaming flowers lay near him on the robe. In a moment his own had closed over it.

"You mean that!" he said joyfully. "You mean—O, my dear! And we will go to these burdened ones and lift their crushing load together, you and I. Shall we, Elinor?"

THE NATIONAL SOCIETY OF THE CHILDREN OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

BY MARGARET SIDNEY.

It was a happy thought that prompted the request for these pages commemorating Forefathers' Day of an article on the National Society of the Children of the American Revolution. The infant colony—a mere handful of simple-minded men and women, intrepid of soul, it is true, yet helpless to the last degree—typifies most clearly the little child reaching out from its mother's arms to try its strength against the big outside world. Not more helpless is that little soul in the midst of dangers appalling to its weakness than was the boatload of Mayflower Pilgrims, who had nothing but their faith in God to stand them in stead in the teeth of danger and death. It was all they needed—this faith in God. It built the colony and it brought more men and women from the old shore to their rescue.

Children in the old colony days fell into line with the older folk in the contemplation of the grave and tremendous responsibilities of independent thought and action. To us who look backward they seem old men and women when they should have been young and gay. We pity them for the exigency of their times, and well we may. But do we not make a colossal mistake in supposing that, because childhood should be blithe and joyous, it must contain no self denial, no earnest contemplation of grave and important ideas? The country needs the children and youth and they need the principles of our institutions for their strength and sinew. Good citizenship beckons them on. Heroic lives of endeavor and brilliant achievement smile encouragement to their young lives.

It was to Daniel Lothrop, the children's publisher, that this organization owes its being. The one who actually formed it was but secondary in the work and only the instrument that God needed to forward the cause. The opportunity occurred to the writer to speak the word that she prayed might fire the hearts of the mothers of our country when she responded to the address of welcome at the opening of the Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution at Washington, D. C., Feb. 18, 1895. She pleaded the cause of the child out of a heart that carried only prayer to God that he would begin this work that instant, and so control it that the children and youth should not go longer without their patriotic society, that training school in all that would make them love and serve their God and their country. The congress voted unanimously that such a society should be organized. A constitution modeled after the Constitution of the United States was adopted, and the writer was elected president of the society for four years. On April 11 it was incorporated, Mrs. John W. Foster, president general of the D. A. R., Mrs. Mary Harrison McKee and other prominent women joining with the national president as incorporators. The headquarters were fixed in the capital city.

The first local society was started in Old Concord, Mass., May 11. The "shot heard round the world" piped its call to the children and youth of America. The call was answered and the societies fell into line. A big mass meeting was held July 4th at the Old South Meeting House, Boston, at which ex-President Harrison, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Mrs. John W. Foster and Dr. John Fiske sent greetings, and eminent Bostonians, including Lieutenant-Governor Wolcott, Col. Nathan Appleton, Rev. S. F. Smith, D. D., and others, made addresses. The meeting with its splendid music, its living flag of children and its patriotic episodes was a fervid expression of Godspeed to the infant society. Rung to order by the liberty bell presented to the author of "America," and which the dear and patriotic old man had brought in from his Newton Center home for the occasion, it struck the ear of the public and made it listen to this imperative demand on the part of children and youth for a patriotic society of their own.

Washington, so it is related by Count Dumas in his memoirs, was at one time returning from a conference with the French officers at Hartford to his headquarters at Newburgh-on-the-Hudson when Rochambeau detailed Dumas to escort the general a part of his way. At Providence the children came out to meet him. It was nightfall and they carried torches and crowded around him, calling him father. It was a time when Washington's soul was stung by the treason of Arnold, and even his intrepid heart was gloomy. He turned to Dumas and seizing his hand said with emotion, "We may be beaten by the British, it is the chance of war, but behold an army that can never be conquered." If the father of our country were here now to lead us on to patriotic service, he would reckon among the most important forces to be employed this work of the Society of the Children of the American Revolution.

The roll of eighty-six societies and nearly 2,000 members, is now answered from Maine to Texas and from Massachusetts to California. Over 3,000 other young people have requested application blanks and are filling them out. They belong to public and private schools, social circles at home and in church, and can be formed as many in number as are needed in any town or community. The parents of these children are not necessarily members of any patriotic organizations. Often the young people are the first to direct the attention of the household to this important duty—that of tracing the ancestry, and, if eligible, of joining some patriotic society.

We quote Articles I. and II. from the constitution:

ARTICLE I.

Any girl or boy may be eligible for membership in this society from birth to the age of eighteen years for the girls and twenty-one years for the boys, who is descended from a man or woman who, with unfailing loyalty, rendered material aid to the cause of independence; from a recognized patriot, a soldier or sailor or civil officer, in one of the several Colonies or States, or of the United Colonies or States.

ARTICLE II.

We take as objects of this society to work for: first, the acquisition of knowledge of American history, so that we may understand and love our country better, and then any patriotic work that will help us to that end, keeping a constant endeavor to influence all other children and youth to the same purpose To help to save the places made sacred by the American men and women who forwarded American independence; to find out and to honor the lives of children and youth of the Colonies and of the American Revolution; to promote the celebration of all patriotic anniversaries; to place a copy of the Declaration of Independence and other patriotic documents in every place appropriate for them; to hold our American flag sacred above every other flag on earth. In short, to follow the injunctions of Washington, who in his youth served his country, till we can perform the duties of good citizens, and to love, uphold and extend the institutions of American liberty and patriotism, and the principles that made and saved our country.

What are the societies doing? comes as a pertinent question. They are forming a network, so to speak, through our whole wide territory of States, in this series of training schools into which children and young people throng with the delight felt in possession of one's own society. This network, still to employ the figure, keeps out evil, such as desecration of the flag and of our American Sabbath, the reading of bad books, disrespect toward parents and those in authority in national affairs. They also put tablets on historic spots, earning the money in many ways; they unearth much valuable history in family and town records; they contribute toward the purchase of Revolutionary or colonial buildings, in some instances endeavoring to do the whole without assistance; they help at patriotic meetings by their singing and flag evolutions; they form drum corps, debating societies and reading circles; they have committees to look up national questions; they form classes in parliamentary law and American history; and they make historical pilgrimages; they make scrap-books of all newspaper cuttings appropriate to their society work; they learn the national hymns and songs, and they find the names and records of young people who helped our country in the colonial and the Revolutionary times. For the smallest children there are beautiful exercises with the flag, patriotic songs and marches and historical stories, till the little ones are imbued with the same spirit.

At the annual convention in Washington last February the president gave to the banner State for that year a large national emblem, to be kept till the next annual meeting. Connecticut had twelve societies, the largest number, and was therefore the banner State for 1896.

The president urges the observance of the salute to the flag at every meeting of each local society, and has written this poem to conclude the exercise:

OUR FLAG OF LIBERTY.

Our country's flag, to thee we give
Our hearts' devotion while we live;
Symbol of all that makes us free,
To thee we render loyalty.

In every crimson waving stripe
We see devotion's prototype;
With all our hearts' blood we'll defend
Our dear old flag unto the end.

And white as yonder fluttering bar
We'll keep our souls in peace or war,
That we may ever worthy be,
O flag, to live or die for thee.

True as the field of blue we'll be,
And serve our country faithfully.
Devotion, purity and truth
Shall form the vanguard of our youth.

Then stars like thine, with radiant light,
Shall make this land of promise bright
When all her youth shall loyal be
To thee, O flag of liberty.

A PATRIOTIC SOCIABLE.

Patriotic socials and ratification meetings can well be made a feature of the social life of the churches this winter. Let the bunting be brought out again to decorate church parlors. Bouquets of tiny flags would give a real Fourth of July air to the supper tables on Forefathers' Day, while the old war songs and standard national airs are melodies in which all can join. A New England supper was recently served according to this menu:

THE DIET OF OUR DADDIES.—European Plan.

Beans, 16 to 1 piece of brown bread	10 cts.
Rolls (from overstock of fresh rolls recently played in all parts of the country)	5 cts.
Cold relishes (the "endless chain, Gresham slaw," etc.)	5 cts.
Pickles (prepared by prominent politicians)	5 cts.
Pie (no difference between East and West sections)	5 cts.
Turnovers (from all the departments)	5 cts.
Doughnuts and lady fingers (from three States)	5 cts.
English pound cake (gold or silver)	5 cts.
Soft drinks (water, milk, coffee)	5 cts.

Election cake extra.

The election cake was put together after an old recipe, which reads as follows:

HOWE TOE MAKE YE ELECTION CAKE.

Old Hartford Election Cake. This recipe is over one hundred years old. Mrs. Eliza Burnham, Milford Center, Ct.

Five pounds sifted flour, two pounds of butter, two pounds of sugar, three gills of distillery yeast, or twice the quantity of home brewed, four eggs, two gills boiled cider, one quart of sweet milk, one-half ounce of nutmeg, two pounds of raisins, one pound citron.

Rub the butter and flour together very fine, add half the sugar, then the yeast and half the milk (hot in winter, blood warm in summer), then add the eggs, the remainder of the milk and one gill of cider. Beat well, and let it rise in a warm place all night. In the morning beat a long time, adding the remainder of the cider, sugar, spice and fruit well floured, and allow to rise again very light, after which put in cake pans and let it rise ten or fifteen minutes: have the oven about as hot as for bread. This cake will keep any length of time. For raised cakes use potato yeast; if fresh made it is always a perfect success.

Truth compels me to say that this recipe was "doctored"; 100 years ago wine and brandy were used in place of the boiled cider, but we found the latter answered every purpose. For this occasion the cake was put in yellow boxes, the size and shape of the usual wedding cake box. These were tied with red, white and blue ribbon, and with the typewritten recipe were readily disposed of at ten cents each.

Closet and Altar

Begin each day by tarrying before God and letting him touch you. Take time to meet God.

It is good for us in the midst of lives so inconsistent, so dwarfed, so conventional as ours to bear in mind how much greater and better others have been, how dauntlessly good, how magnificently victorious over vice and sin. Their high examples teach us how we may rise above our nothingness; how little we are when we live the selfish life of the world; how great we may be if we live as the sons of God.—F. W. Farrar.

Blessed is he who, throwing himself into all interests that interest men and women and into those peculiar interests that belong to his calling, keeps his heart and life ever open to the voice and the life of God. —Bishop Lawrence.

God of the Pilgrim! in whose name
Our land was born through blood and flame;
Grant us to keep its altar fires
Fed with the torch of high desires.

Our fathers' God! we look to thee
To give the truth that made them free.
It was for this they lived and died;
Through this their deeds are glorified.

God of the Nations! in whose sight
Men walk from darkness into light.
Give us the light our fathers saw,
Living and loving all thy law.

Give us their singleness of heart,
Their courage unto us impart,
Their steadfast faith, unfaltering trust,
Their stern support of all that's just.

—Mary M. Adams.

We are not to ask how nearly we may conform to the world in its pleasures and customs, and give the fag-ends to God from a sense of duty and necessity, but how can we delight our souls in him and his service. There are many Christians who seem to live upon earth and now and then pay duty calls in heaven. But the true privilege of the Christian is to live in heaven and pay certain duty calls on earth when God imposes the necessity.—Webb-Peploe.

In this is the excellency of man, that he is made capable of a communion with his Maker and, because capable of it, is unsatisfied without it; the soul being cut out to that largeness, cannot be content with less.

O God of nations, bless thou our beloved land. Establish it in righteousness and in an honorable patriotism. Make us mindful of the heritage left us by godly men who sought freedom to worship thee on its shores. Guide the rulers of this people. Sanctify their deliberations to the good of the nation and to the good of all peoples who are interested in our conduct. Bring all oppression, cruelty and wrongdoing to a speedy end. Put an end to the same thyself, thou Mighty One, so that there may be no renewal of iniquity. Send out thy light and thy truth through all the earth. Forgive our enemies and turn their hearts toward peace and love. Heal the sick. Gather the lambs in thine arms. Fill up our broken prayer with thine own knowledge of our needs, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THE LAST DAYS BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

We have heard much of "the night before Christmas," but let us now speak of the days before, the days when the mother goes down to the toyshop, or more likely the bookstore, to find something that will do for this friend and that for whom she has yet no gift. It is a pity that we ever have to say, only, that it "will do." She picks up a book and lays it aside "for the children to give to Aunt Mary." She selects a calendar, forgetting to ask the price, and adds to the pile one or two booklets, a photograph, a picture frame, and so on indefinitely. By this time she is a little confused as to what is for whom, and entirely ignorant as to what anything has cost.

Things are sent home, and sent off by mail, express and messenger. No one has been forgotten, and she has a comfortable feeling of having done the right thing. But there is a little twinge somewhere; she is only half conscious of it until the first of January, when a bulky envelope comes in the mail, with a long list of items something like this: Mtg. Photos., Frmg. Photos., Bon. Br. Bush, 1 Set Shak., etc. It is mostly hieroglyphics. There must have been some mistake! She has no remembrance of buying all those things. She cannot even make out the names, and as for the amount at the foot of the bill, surely that is wrong! After carefully examining the list, little by little she remembers that she did order this, and that, and she is compelled in the end to admit that even the amount is correct.

But how can she pay it? Her income for the month will not pay it and leave enough for household expenses. The result is, the bill must wait till the next month, and the next, and perhaps the next. In the meantime she carefully avoids that store. Every dealer knows that a woman will spend more if she has things charged, so that even the long waiting is sometimes worth while from his point of view, but never from hers. Finally, after two or three months the bill is paid, but the sweet spirit of Christmas is not in the payment. In a kind of shamefaced way she makes a half apology, to which her courteous bookseller replies, without sarcasm, "I am very glad if it is convenient for you to pay it now." Her self-respect comes back a little, and she resolves never to have another Christmas bill.

Why not keep the resolve this year? Put aside what you can afford to spend for Christmas gifts; spend only that, though it mean ever so small a gift for each friend. As far as possible "put yourself in his place" in choosing a gift for your friend. Remember how much a little thing means to you when it tells you that you have not been forgotten. In the household let the gifts be things which will in some way add to the daily comfort. In the kitchen sometimes a good comfortable rocking chair for the long winter evenings will be greatly appreciated. But whatever the gift, or for whomsoever it is, pay for it or don't get it. An unpaid bill and Christmas were never meant to go together. J. S. B.

Instructor in Latin: "Miss B., of what was Ceres the goddess?"

Miss B.: "She was the goddess of marriage."

Instructor: "Oh, no; of agriculture."

Miss B. (looking perplexed): "Why, I am sure my book says she was the goddess of husbandry."

112. REVERSED WORD-DELETION.

(Example: Deliver; evil, red.)

At the dawn, when the tide is quite up to the ledge
Where the shy marsh-hens nest in the WHOLES of brown sedge,
From the weed-curtained caverns where sea breezes sleep,
Comes the wind that sings softly and low to the deep:
"O, there's many a true heart and brave on the blue,
And stout muscle at many a tiller and sheet;
But not ever a truer or braver, be sure,
Than yon lad who TWOS oar with the mackerel fleet;
Then be good to this child of our hearts, old Sea,
Guide the black bass and mullet and trout to his seine;
Calm thy turbulent waves when thy dangers he braves,
And send safe home this gallant young fisher again!"

When the brown reefs are out, where the sandpipers trace
In light footprints a delicate network of lace,
Then the wind, from the forest's dim witchery,
In the softest of voices still sings to the sea:
"O, there's many a flower in this cool island bower—
Morning-glory and pimpernel, cactus and sage;
But not any so fair as our sweet PRIMAL there
In a cot where the agaves are whitened with age!
Then be kind to this child of our love, old Sea—
To the sweetest wildflower on all thy grim shore;
Stay thy silvery feet by her humble door-seat,
And send safe home her gallant young fisher once more."

When all the world is riding,
Why Phillis, too, must ride.
But she is long deciding—
Her range is far and wide;
For bicycles are many,
The tires and saddles too;
She wants the best, if any—
Who'll help her choose?—will you?

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

OUR OWN WORK.

A Note of Warning. The statement regarding the receipts of the American Board during the first quarter of its fiscal year, and especially during the month of November, should have the serious attention of the churches. A study of these figures shows not only a marked decrease in legacies, but, what is far more deplorable, a large falling off in regular donations. It is upon the sustained, systematic gifts of the living that the Board depends for means to carry on its regular activities. The Board's success in paying its debt should not weaken, but should rather strengthen, its claims upon the churches. It makes it no less imperative that the friends of foreign missions should rally to the support of current work, and we believe they will when they realize the danger indicated by these statistics.

Christmas Attractions. Life and Light always issues an attractive Christmas number and this year is no exception to the rule. Its dainty, tastefully-designed cover, its appropriate pictures at the head of the four departments, its seasonable articles describing the observance of Christmas in foreign climes, and its bright story entitled The Christmas Idea are special features. Especially delightful is Miss Howe's contribution, Christmas Day in the Glory Kindergarten, Kobe, with its charming illustrations of Japanese babies in their picturesque costumes. In this connection we call attention to another publication of the Woman's Board—the Daily Prayer Calendar for 1897, which would serve as an appropriate and acceptable Christmas gift. This carefully-prepared calendar is becoming more and more valued each year, not only for its helpful and stimulating selections for every day, but for its suggestions in regard to prayer for individual workers of the Board. Were it only for the comfort and strength which each missionary receives from the knowledge that on one day in the year Christian women are uniting in praying for her by name, the thought and effort which go into the preparation and the faithful use of this calendar would be worth while, but we are confident that the blessing is not all on the side of the missionaries.

Pioneer Work in Florida. Rev. Norman Plass in an illustrated article in The Home Missionary tells the results of ten weeks of tent work in Miami, Fla., the most southerly town on the mainland of the United States where pioneer missionary work is being prosecuted. One of the happy features in the development of Miami was that the church was for once ahead of the saloon. Tents and shacks and cabins sprang up around the "church tent," and such was the influence of the services held here that when an effort was made to have liquor sold a sentiment existed against it. At the close of a Sunday evening service when the question, Do We Want a Saloon in Miami or Vicinity? had been discussed, sixty-seven men out of eighty-three arose to declare that they did not, while not a single vote could be elicited on the other side. It was therefore declared by the people not that "the saloon must go," but that it should not come, and every deed of transfer made out excludes it from the city for a term of three years. As a further result of the tent meetings a Union Congregational Church has been formed. It had forty-five or fifty charter members, most of whom were men. Thirteen of them joined on confession of faith. "Thus, 300 miles south of St. Augustine, the oldest settlement," says Mr. Plass, "men from all sections of America and of all Christian beliefs unite to form a church of the Pilgrim Fathers."

THE WORLD AROUND.

Missionaries in Algeria Accused. The indefatigable leaders of the North Africa Mission have been lately placed on the defensive in repelling the charges urged by the French against English missionaries in Algeria. They say that for a number of years there has been more or less opposition to the work of the mission in Algeria. Two reasons have been assigned for this. First, that any attempt to preach the gospel amongst the Moslem natives is calculated to stir up their fanaticism and to lead to rebellion against French authority, or to cause disturbances which might call for the use of military force. The second reason stated is that the missionaries have sought to set the natives against the French, acting as English spies or selling gunpowder, etc., to the natives. Both these accusations the friends of the mission declare to be groundless and absurd, and they add that such charges are the result of French jealousy of everything English, especially since the British occupation of Egypt.

The action of the lower house of the French legislature last month in unanimously calling upon the government to stop the proceedings of the British Protestant missionaries in Algeria brings up the question as to the proper attitude of France toward British missions. It has undoubtedly been a part of the French Government's policy in the past to hamper Protestant, and especially British, missions in French spheres. Their situation, however, at least in Algeria, though not, perhaps, in Madagascar, is not so serious as it seems. In the first place, anti-British deputies and the French colonial group do not constitute the whole government. The resolution of the lower chamber is stage thunder. It has yet to pass the upper house. Should it succeed in doing this, it must encounter and overcome the inertia of administrators charged with the execution of far-reaching laws. In the next place, the French republic is based on the principle that freedom of conscience and liberty of worship must be permitted to all under the French flag so long as morality and the rights of others are respected and as missionaries do not disparage the government. French democracy is slowly outgrowing its child's disease of political narrow-mindedness as to non-French missions in French possessions. Proof of this is furnished by the fact that the same British "deaconesses," as the zenana workers are styled in France, who were expelled from Algeria in August, 1892, returned in the following November and are still active there. Finally, Britain's moral sentiment is aroused. Her missions in Africa, including Madagascar, will suffer from unsympathetic officials and subjects, but she will not be likely to suffer them to be outrooted.

A Million Dollars for Missions. Important action taken at the recent meeting of the Methodist Missionary Committee was the acceptance of the missions of the English Wesleyan Methodist Church in Germany and Austria, and the adoption of the Bishop William Taylor self-supporting missions in Liberia on the Congo and in southeastern Africa. The sum of $14,700 was appropriated for Africa, and Bishop Hartzell will soon sail to make a thorough investigation of the Taylor missions. They have property estimated at about $70,000, and some are said to be in a flourishing condition. The committee appropriated to foreign missions $586,000, to home missions $432,693, which, added to the sums devoted to administration and literature, etc., gives a grand total of $1,139,493. This is $81,765 less than the income of last year, retrenchment being made imperative on account of the debt of $290,954.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE LAW OF CIVILIZATION AND DECAY.

This book, by Mr. Brooks Adams, has reached a second edition. In some respects it is exceptionally fresh and striking. The theory proposed as accounting for the course of civilization does not commend itself to our judgment, but as the suggestion of a keen intellect it is of considerable interest. Briefly it is this: Fear and greed are two of the earliest and simplest phases of thought. Fear by kindling the imagination causes belief in an invisible world and finally develops a priesthood. Greed dissipates energy in war and trade. In the earlier history of a people the imagination is vivid and the religious emotions are strong, consequently, priests and a church of some sort come into being. As society is consolidated fear yields to greed, and the economic organism tends to supersede the emotional. The struggle between the two inevitably results in the conquest of the former by the latter. The cultivation of the commercial instinct promotes luxury, luxury stimulates corruption, corruption causes the downfall of religion and the collapse of the political organization. Next, ordinarily, some new and simple race imposes itself, often by war, upon the decaying people and revives it by an infusion of fresh blood, and then the round begins again, to terminate in time as before.

Mr. Adams has endeavored to establish this theory by a study of history, and up to a certain point the truth of it may be conceded. But he seems to be a fatalist and to see no evidence of divine control of human affairs. He is oblivious of some facts which are as essential as these which he has cited. For example, the mediæval world, of which much was true which he has asserted, was very different from the world of today. He does not do justice to—we had almost said he wholly overlooks—the spread and the power of Christianity during the last few centuries. In spite of the faults and errors of its adherents, the Christian religion in many respects has transformed the character of human society. The motives and the principles which, as he alleges, formerly dominated mankind never were as invincible as he assumes them to have been, and they have far less power now. It would be a mistake to take extravagantly optimistic views of society, but it is equally a mistake to accept the pessimism of his theory; nor can any careful student of humanity who is not fascinated by some such tempting theory believe long that commerce has been the deciding factor of the course of civilization throughout the ages.

The sway of this theory over the author's mind has led him into some extravagant statements. He says, for example, that "the power of every ecclesiastical organization has always rested on the miracle, and the clergy have always proved their divine commission as did Elijah," and that "every prize of life was to be obtained by this kind of magic." The Reformation he believes to have been simply an economic phenomenon, and he goes so far as to say, "As the tradesman replaced the enthusiast a dogma was evolved by which mental anguish, which cost nothing, was substituted for the offering which was effective in proportion to its money value. This dogma was 'justification by faith' the corner stone of Protestantism." And he sums up the teaching of his book in these words: "Thus religions are preached and are forgotten, empires rise and fall, philosophies are born and die, art and poetry bloom and fade as societies fall from the disintegration wherein the imagination kindles to that consolidation whose pressure ends in death."

He also points out that the ominous phenomena, which have marked the declination of race after race, are now more sharply marked than ever and on a larger scale, and seem to presage once more the disintegration of society. Moreover, he adds, "There is no source whence a stream of barbarian blood can be infused to regenerate the decaying stock." We do not know how much is to be anticipated therefrom, but he overlooks the Chinese, who may at some day take the world by surprise. The book illustrates the subordination of an able mind to a theory. Few expert historical scholars will be likely to accept its teachings. It is partial and apparently, although we have no doubt unconsciously, prejudiced. Taken in connection with other works upon the same, or departments of the same, general subject it has both interest and value, but in itself it is not only depressing but misleading. [Macmillan Co. $2.00.]

RELIGIOUS.

Christianity and Social Problems [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25], by Dr. Lyman Abbott, embodies a number of discourses and lectures, the general subject of which is Christ's social teachings and the special object of which is to reveal the application of these teachings to modern conditions. Most of the contents of the book have been printed or delivered as sermons, but they abundantly deserve to be thus collected and grouped into permanent form. In general the book may be described as a careful study of modern society and of the great forces which are shaping it for good or evil—democracy, communism, socialism and the family—as well as of the laws of God which bear most closely upon the relations of men, for instance, in respect to the settlement of controversies, the treatment of criminals, etc. Dr. Abbott is an untrammeled and sometimes a daring thinker and fearlessly outspoken, and his utterances here will lead many thinkers to a point which they have not reached hitherto. Such a book is apt to contain utterances which seem unduly strong, and they are not lacking here; for instance, the statement that Christ treated sin as a disease which ought to evoke our tenderest pity and compassion is true, but it is not the whole truth. Christ did not treat sin always and only as a disease, but recognized and condemned its guilt. We are not always clear, moreover, about the author's economical definitions, but his teaching is plain, kindly and sagacious in a high degree and it is one of the books which plain people will read and hardly will be contented to read a single time. It will afford valuable help toward the promotion of a better state of things.

Very much in the same vein is Faith and Social Service [T. Whittaker. $1.25], by Dean Hodges of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. It contains the course of Lowell lectures recently delivered by him. Taking up the subject from somewhat the same point of view as that of Dr. Abbott, he proceeds along equally distinct and important lines, setting forth indifference, doubt, poverty, the problems of the labor question, moral reforms and city life, and closing with a lecture on the divided church. The broad intelligence and sturdy manhood of the writer and his pithy, trenchant manner of speech add weight to his thought throughout. He does not stop to polish his periods, although his style is excellent, but writes with a vigor which is effective. The great point upon which he insists is that the chief essential of all needed reforms is a changed man; that either restriction or permission may be useful; that enlightenment and external help have their value; but that the aim in every case and at all times must be to make over the individual after the pattern of Christianity. "Labor and capital alike must be more honest, more patient, more self-sacrificing and more brotherly, in a word, more Christian," and this is true not only in the case of labor and capital but in every other social relation. The lecture on the Divided Church is especially significant in view of current efforts to promote the organic unity of Christendom. We are gratified to observe that the platform of unity recently proposed by our National Council commends itself to him as practically superior to any other which has been suggested, and that he agrees with us that organic union is impracticable, certainly at present, and that co-operation, which is "virtual reunion," so far as it goes, should be established and will accomplish much good. We heartily commend the volume as one of the best on its topic.

The Power of Silence and The Perfect Whole [G. H. Ellis. Each $1.50], are two volumes by H. W. Dresser, the former having already reached its fourth edition. The author apparently is an earnest believer in the mind cure, and these volumes are reverent and thoughtful attempts to interpret religious and physical truth alike from the point of view of that school of thought, and to reveal their mutual relations for the benefit, physical, moral and spiritual, of the reader. We do not question that some truth lies at the basis of such teaching and we recognize the different excellences of these chapters, but we are not convinced that the author has gained the central point, so to speak, from which to look out upon the world and instruct it for its uplifting. His teaching in general seems too metaphysical also for the grasp of the ordinary mind. We know of no other writings, however, which set forth the same principles so ably and the volumes merit consideration as embodiments of the teaching of their school. But that is the heartiest approval which we can give them.

Forty Dollars and the Boots [Student Pub. Co. $1.50] is by T. S. Fay. The reader who may be surprised at such a title will find it justified by an ingenious riddle with which the book opens and which leads up to a thoughtful and impressive study of religious truth, in which the different clauses of the Apostles' Creed are considered one by one, various attacks upon them being answered. The author has done good service. Some noted German criticisms are handled in an able manner, and the book, which is intended for plain people but which scholars will enjoy, is adapted to do solid service in establishing the faith of uncertain Christians. It also ought to convince some who perhaps would have become Christians had they not been taught that the truths of the gospel are not credible.——In Nature and Christ [Eaton & Mains. 75 cents] Rev. Dr. J. A. Beet has gathered together the course of lectures delivered by him last summer at the Ocean Grove School of Theology. Dr. Beet is professor of systematic theology in the Wesleyan College at Richmond, Eng., and is well known to some of our readers, not only through his books but personally. In this volume he gives a careful study of some fundamental doctrines of the gospel, such as the incarnation and the resurrection. His position is that of the conservative school as represented among the Wesleyan Methodists of our day. This work strikes us as the most profound and suggestive which we have seen from his pen. It does not deal in novelties, but it sets forth familiar truths with conspicuous clearness and fidelity and is almost adapted for a devotional purpose, its spirit is so tender and impressively devout. In the theological literature of the autumn it occupies a place by itself.

STORIES.

Dr. A. Conan Doyle has drawn a spirited picture of certain types of English life at about the beginning of the present century in his new book, Rodney Stone [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50]. Primarily it is a tale of both country and London life, but secondarily—although some may think its primary features subordinate to the secondary—it seems to have been written in order to portray the fashionable beau, then so prominent a figure in London life, and also the prize-fighter, who was almost equally prominent. Lord Nelson comes in for description and praise, but is a minor figure. The romance of the story is very romantic, and the interest grows to the very end. The evident sympathy of the author with the English taste for sporting, especially in the form of boxing, is to be commended in a measure, but we are glad to see that his final verdict is that the inevitable brutality and blackguardism which surround the ring is enough to condemn the prize fight, or anything closely approaching thereto. And in spite of the foppishness of the dandy of that time, the reader will realize that many such an exquisite used to have a large measure of sound manliness under the froth of his society manners. If the book be not equal to the author's best previous work, it certainly is a capital book in itself, and one which will be read with wide and great interest.

The late Walter Pater left an unfinished romance, Gaston de la Tour [Macmillan Co. $1.50]. This has been prepared for the press by Mr. C. L. Shadwell. It is a question whether the author, had his life been prolonged, would have continued and completed or abandoned his work. There are indications that he would not have finished it, and how he would have developed it no one can guess. It has been printed in response to the desire of many friends, and, taken as offered, it will not injure its author's reputation. Yet its incompleteness is more than in the fact that it is a merely unfinished book. It is imperfect in outline, in the sense of being inartistic. There are profoundly interesting studies of Montaigne and Giordano Bruno and their teachings, but these, although inherently of large value, are not natural and appropriate portions of the story. To be sure, the work is, and must have been meant to be, a philosophical novel, but it is chiefly interesting as illustrating the author's graceful style, the almost self conscious beauty of which sometimes oppresses the reader a little. It is a book for Mr. Pater's admirers rather than for the general public.

Carmen [Little, Brown & Co. $2.00], which often is called Prosper Merimée's masterpiece, has been translated and illustrated by E. H. Garrett, and Louise Imogen Guiney has supplied a memoir of the author. Miss Guiney certainly does full justice to her subject. As for the translator, his rendering is spirited and the simple yet dramatic tale is told afresh impressively. As a study of Spanish semi-barbaric lower class life, with its loves and revenges, plots and fightings, it has much merit. It is issued in handsome form.——Another story from the French is at the opposite pole in sentiment. It is George Sand's François the Waif [Little, Brown & Co. $1.25], translated by Jane M. Sedgwick. It is a sort of rural idyl, in which the evil characters are necessary as shadows, and in which the graces and virtues predominate and a sweet and tender spirit rules. Nevertheless, it seems open to the criticism of extravagance at times. For instance, the anguish of the hero when occasionally in distress, even after having grown to manhood, is unnatural.

Rolf Boldrewood in The Sealskin Cloak [Macmillan Co. $1.25] has taken 500 closely printed pages to relate a 300-page story. We suppose the temptation to introduce the account of the Nile trip and divers other episodes was too strong, although they have no connection with the plot justifying any such elaboration of them. But, in spite of its inordinate length, the story is a rather good one. The utter improbability of the plot is managed so as to seem reasonably possible and natural. The character drawing is strong and pleasing, virtue is triumphant throughout, and anybody who has a week to spare might do much worse than amuse himself with the book.——My Lady's Heart [Roberts Brothers. $1.00], by Ellis Markoe, is offered modestly as a mere sketch and it is short, but it is a little book of considerable ability. It is gratifying to find one story in which the victim of an intense love for another man's wife is strong enough to deal with it and with her in a dignified and noble fashion. Instead of remaining where he must be exposed and expose her to constant temptation, the hero withdraws forever before any injury to self-respect or any stain upon honor has so much as become possible. The characters are neither weak nor passionless. They are simply high minded and pure. The story is written in a pleasant style and deserves popularity.

We are a little in doubt about the spirit which animates Stories of a Sanctified Town [Century Co. $1.25], by Lucy S. Furman. The shrewdness, the humor and the pathos of these character studies are conspicuous and admirable, but, although the author cannot fairly be said to make fun of religion, but only to indicate some of the amusing features in the extravagances of idea and practice of her villagers, there often is so much of sincerity beneath such a rough husk of goodness, and so little knowledge of any less demonstrative and more thoughtful religious life, that it is a pity even to seem to make fun of it. We entirely acquit the author of any unkind intent, and we have only hearty praise for her perceptive and descriptive powers. We confess to having experienced great amusement while reading, and we are not reluctant in the least to recommend the book to others. Yet we cannot help wishing it were not quite what it is.——Katherine's Experiment [Eaton & Mains. $1.25], by Felicia B. Clark, describes the foreign trip, for purposes of musical study, of a young American girl. It discusses her experiences, including some of her temptations, and, without being specially striking in any way, is fairly enjoyable. The writer's views on dancing and some similar indulgences are of the strictly conservative school.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Mr. T. K. Lothrop's volume, William Henry Seward [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25], belongs to the American Statesmen series. It is a condensed, yet sufficiently elaborate, history of Mr. Seward's career and is written with agreeable sincerity and force. It is candid in comment, and draws afresh the familiar picture of its distinguished subject, portraying his ability, energy, caution and far sightedness successfully, making strong claims in behalf of his diplomatic skill, and it will be accepted without doubt as a just and successful biography. If it fail anywhere it seems to be in seeming to do something less than justice to the character and ability of Abraham Lincoln, although this impression is received only indirectly and cannot have been at all intended.

Whittier, Prophet, Seer and Man [Arena Pub. Co. $1.00], by B. O. Flower, is a pleasant and well-conceived volume. It does not profess to be profound, but it contains a graphic and appreciative sketch of Whittier's character and career with many extracts from his verse and a good portrait. It is eminently readable and the multitude of Whittier's admirers will approve it, although it would not be satisfactory as the final biography of its subject.

Mr. W. D. Howells's Impressions and Experiences [Harper & Bros. $1.50], may fairly be noticed here, inasmuch as it is mainly autobiographical. It contains the chapters which have been appearing in Harper's Monthly from his pen on The Country Printer, The Police Report, Tribulations of a Cheerful Giver, Glimpses of Central Park and similar topics and the author's reminiscences of his early life and his observations of different types of humble society in New York city. It is both entertaining and instructive and in a half-deliberate and half-involuntary manner it appeals to the sympathies strongly and suggests possibilities in the line of social development. It is not in any sense a treatise on social or political economy and the author often confesses himself quite at a loss, but it will set his readers to thinking, and if it do no more than set before them its clear pictures it will not have been written in vain. It illustrates, of course, the author's literary art in a high degree.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In Whitman [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25], by John Burroughs, is supplied an elaborate study of the history, character and literary place of the subject. It is certainly a question whether Whitman and his productions are of sufficient importance to justify such a serious work. The feeling is natural that the author has expended time and labor which might have been better applied elsewhere. He is an ardent admirer of Whitman and, without being blind to his faults, he so labors to justify them that the impression which the book leaves is hardly one of impartiality. Whitman will find his own place in the judgment of posterity and such a book as this, although it may interest certain people, hardly is one of the factors which finally will determine that place. In our judgment the author's estimate of Whitman is largely mistaken, but it is hardly worth while to give time to explaining why. Mr. Burroughs, like everybody else, has a right to his own opinion.

A number of fine essays by Prof. Brander Matthews are gathered in a volume called Aspects of Fiction and Other Ventures in Criticism [Harper & Bros. $1.50]. American Literature, the Penalty of Humor, Two Scotch Men of Letters—Lang and Stevenson—are among the subjects of the book. The author is one of the most competent and satisfying literary critics in this country and these papers are quite equal to the best English work of our day in the same vein. In analysis and sympathetic appreciation he is especially excellent. In such a chapter as that on Cervantes, Zola, Kipling and Company, in which these successive apostles of realism are commented upon, he is at his best. The book, if read attentively, would go far toward supplying its readers with a considerable literary education in a certain sense, but those competent to discuss its themes on even terms with its author are as likely to appreciate it as those who need such instruction. The number of American novels increases steadily, and in our judgment their quality on the whole improves. The number of their readers doubtless enlarges with equal speed, and Professor Matthews has rendered them one and all a distinct service.

Prof. W. H. Hudson has gathered into a volume entitled Studies in Interpretation [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25], three essays on Keats, Clough and Matthew Arnold. They are good examples of conscientious work in literary analysis and description. The temperamental peculiarities of each subject are suggested skillfully and the conditions which help to determine the views wrought out in their poetical works, for it is as poets merely that they are regarded. The author has been exceptionally fortunate in comprehending and also in portraying the mental moods and emotions of his subjects. In the case of Arnold this is especially apparent, and his representation of Arnold as seeking in vain for the spiritual comfort which he could not find in the old creed because he had outgrown it, or in the new because he had not yet emotionally appropriated it, must commend itself to all who are familiar with Arnold's history as not only just but almost epigrammatic. Not only literary experts but a much larger portion of the reading public will enjoy this book highly.

Mrs. Alice Morse Earle has continued her attractive and instructive studies of early American colonial life in a new book, Colonial Days in Old New York [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25], which is replete with the interest so characteristic of the subject and of her former volumes. She describes the people, their homes, dress, customs, amusements, worship, etc., with pleasant detail and from authentic sources of information, and groups her facts effectively. If she emphasizes at all the brighter side of the colonial life more than the darker, she certainly aims at impartiality, and no one will fail to appreciate the permanent value or the large enjoyableness of the work.——Mr. F. S. Child's studies of The Colonial Parson [Baker & Taylor Co. $1.25] are entertaining and suggestive, but not by any means exhaustive of the subject. They form an agreeable volume, which indicates well the various relations which the parson sustained to the colonial life, and its spirit is broad and candid. It is written gracefully, and is a pleasant addition to the literature pertaining to colonial matters.

The Story of Bohemia [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50], by C. E. Maurice, is another number in the Story of the Nations series. It covers the passage of time from the earliest days to the fall of national independence in 1620. Subsequent history is summarized all too briefly. We incline to the opinion that the author and editor have erred in judgment in thus condensing so severely the record of more than 250 years, but the earlier history has been studied carefully, and its course is narrated with good effect. The book is published in the style familiar to those acquainted with the series, and is abundantly illustrated.——The beautiful holiday edition of Constantinople [H. T. Coates & Co. $5.00], by Edmondo de Amicis, which Maria H. Lansdale has translated from the fifteenth Italian edition, is so handsomely printed and so charmingly illustrated that it will prove a prime favorite as a holiday gift. There is no occasion to speak at length of the literary qualities of a work so well known. It has had a conceded pre-eminence ever since it first came out.

A delightful out-of-door book is Florence A. Merriam's sketches in Southern California grouped in A-Birding on a Broncho [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25]. She is specially interested in birds and is an acute and patient student of their habits and characters. But incidentally one gathers more from her pages than its information about feathered folks. It belongs with the writings of Messrs. Torrey, Burroughs and Abbott, and the writer is a worthy addition to the small but choice circle of authors upon their chosen theme.——Mr. J. G. Batterson, the author of a series of papers for the Traveler's Record, has put them into a little volume, Gold and Silver as Currency [Case, Lockwood & Brainard Co. 25 cents], in which the problem indicated is discussed with caution and discrimination and conclusions are reached that the decline in silver bullion has nothing to do with the decline in wheat and cotton but is due to the enormous production throughout the world, that we are in danger of losing our foreign markets because of foreign competition and that no change in our monetary standard will meet that competition; that the general fall of prices, in short, is not due to the appreciation of gold but its causes are entirely distinct from any influence exerted by the precious metals. His book deserves and ought to receive the attention due to an expert study of the subject.

Fifty Literary Evenings [Eaton & Mains. 25 cents], by S. G. Ayres is offered by the compiler to young people's societies in the hope of promoting the substantial improvement of their members while also affording genuine entertainment. The subject selected for each evening is subdivided in outline and we suppose different persons are expected to prepare themselves upon the minor topics. The subjects are largely historical and the plan of the book is a good one.——A new volume of extracts, entitled Quotations for Occasions [Century Co. $1.50], by Katharine A. Wood, is the sort of book which will help those who pride themselves on patness in making the memory aid the present. Many public speakers may catch an inspiration or gather a felicitous utterance or two from its pages. The connection between some of these citations and the heading under which they are classified does not always impress one immediately as self evident, but many, on the other hand, are plainly both apt and amusing. No other book of precisely this sort exists, we believe, and it should go on the shelf with Bartlett and his fellows.——The Century Co. have brought out the numbers of The Century [$3 00] from May to October last in the usual semi-annual volume. It is worthy of its publishers and its predecessors down to the smallest details.

Rev. W. M. Thayer has gathered a great many short and pithy chapters of sensible observations of a moral or religious character about many aspects or features of daily life into a book entitled Around the Hearthstone, or Hints for Home Builders [Thomas Nelson & Sons. $1.50]. He emphasizes, in his preface, the fact that hints, rather than direct teaching, are offered concerning his subject but the book is not, on that account, the less serviceable. Incident and other forms of illustration are used freely and the book will entertain the boys and girls, while it prepares them to become in time the heads of homes of the true sort.——Insecta [D. C. Heath & Co. $1.25], in the series of Guides for Science Teaching, is by Alpheus Hyatt and J. N. Arms. It is inevitably technical, but probably not too much so for those who will be likely to use it. It is freely illustrated.——Stories and Legends from Washington Irving [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50] is a handsomely printed, illustrated selection intended for reading classes as well as for the children out of school. It is tasteful and will answer its purpose successfully.

NOTES.

—— A copy of the first edition of Lorna Doone brings from $50 to $75.

—— Edmund C. Stedman calls Rudyard Kipling "in some degree the true laureate of Great Britain."

—— Miss Mary F. Field, a daughter of the late Eugene Field, is making a beginning as a public reader. She confines herself to her father's writings.

—— Ian Maclaren is reported to have said of Robert Burns that, although he offended the moral law, he gave a purity to Scottish literature which it had never before possessed.

—— The gold medal awarded at the exhibition of the Book and News Trade in London last month was given to Messrs. Macmillan Co. for their work, The Castles of England, their Story and their Structure, published in this country.

—— Cornell University owns a rare literary possession, a complete collection of the volumes, some 200 in number, issued by the late Wolcott Balestier, Rudyard Kipling's brother-in-law, as The English Library, in a vain attempt to rival the famous Tauchnitz library of publications in English on the continent of Europe.

—— The first book published by the Grolier Club was a reprint of an edict of Charles the First. It was sold at $2 a copy, the edition being limited to 150, the number of the membership of the club. When the club was enlarged to 250 members their demand for copies of this volume sent up the price so much that one recently was sold at auction for $208.

On a recent Sunday morning a small boy in a rear pew of one of Boston's suburban churches left his place just before the beginning of service, marched up the aisle and on to the platform, stepped up to the minister and asked him if he could change a five cent piece. The minister did so and the boy went back happy. Later inquiry brought out the fact that he thought he ought to divide the nickel he had brought with him between the church and the Sunday school. He looked about in the audience to see whom he could get to change it. He saw no one that he knew so well as he did the minister, who had called at his house and been very friendly. So to the minister he went. Two facts that offer food for reflection are suggested by this incident: the first, the boy was on good terms with his minister; the second, the boy had the courage of self-forgetfulness.

EXTRACTS FROM RECENT LETTERS.

My eldest son, after reading articles in The Congregationalist relative to the destitution among the Armenian children, felt that he would like to see what he could do in their behalf. Consequently he took his playtime last Saturday and nights and mornings since then, trying in his small way to obtain a little. The inclosed sheet, with a list of eighteen names and their amounts, tells its own story as to his success in the matter.

The inclosed $3 is a small Thanksgiving offering. A little girl who is herself an orphan, but who has a good home, sends two cents which she has earned.

May God lay it upon every mother's heart to give her mite that the starving children of Armenia may have food and shelter. I hope The Congregationalist will make a trumpet call in this direction.

Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

A real bimetallist occasion took place at the capital.

A good thought, anticipating Easter, has been acted upon in a Connecticut church.

Says the pastor of the New Jersey church which has just added a new up-town field and congregation to its work, "Nowhere can money be better spent than in the down-town end of great cities." His experience is good foundation for his remark, since his labors have reached both degrees of city life.

The accession in a Nebraska church of seven members, comprising two whole families, on the same day, suggests the blessed time when all shall bow the knee "unto the Father, from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named." It is by such centers of consecration as these that in due time the whole lump will be leavened.

We receive a full broadside from our seminaries this week, every one being represented. Through that column we look in upon the active preparations of over 500 young men for pulpit and parish service in our churches, nearly one-tenth of the entire number of pastors in the Congregational ministry of this country.

A STRONGER HOLD IN JERSEY CITY.

The middle of November last was a time of careful planning and changes which have come to a successful issue in this New Jersey center. The results have added to the property of the First or Tabernacle Church, of which Rev. Dr. J. L. Scudder is pastor, a handsome, new edifice valued with the lot at $50,000, and the prospect is that nearly 300 of the members who constituted the South Bergen Reformed Church will soon be added to the membership of the First Church.

The consolidation came about from the overtures of the Reformed Church which for a few years has been financially crippled, and at last found a radical move imperative. The costly edifice, built early in 1894, was burdened with an indebtedness of $25,000, relief for which was in prospect neither through the efforts of the church itself nor from the denominational missionary society to which the members applied.

Absorption by Tabernacle Church was a hopeful means of succor and also offered just the opportunity which the Congregationalists had wanted for establishing a branch work on the hights in the neighborhood of the Reformed Church.

A conference with the Church Building Society afforded the First Church encouragement to accept the overtures of their Reformed brethren. The society agreed to furnish $10,000 to cover one mortgage on the new edifice, the First Church assuming the remaining $15,000 indebtedness. As soon as suitable agreements between the churches had been perfected, Rev. W. D. Grant, the former pastor of the Reformed congregation, resigned, to take effect Dec. 1, after a pastorate of nearly eight years. After the two bodies have become one, each will be represented on the official governing boards.

The new building is of mixed Gothic and Romanesque architecture and is built of brownstone. It stands on a corner, with main entrances on two sides. The interior arrangements are entirely modern and the decorations beautiful. The pulpit and organ are in one corner, and the pews of antique oak are circular, with four aisles. The seating capacity is about 600, which, if the accommodations of the adjacent Sunday school rooms are added, is increased to 1,000. The basement contains a kitchen and a large lecture-room. Moreover, other small rooms on the first floor and in the tower afford advantages for class, social and study apartments. This building will hereafter be designated as the First Church.

The work at the Tabernacle and down town at People's Palace will not be particularly affected by the consolidation. Two preaching services will hereafter be maintained simultaneously uptown and downtown, the pastor's assistant, Rev. J. L. Wells, alternating with Dr. Scudder. The enlarged membership of the church puts it in the lead in the State as to numbers, making the total about 1,000. With greater burdens for this church come broader opportunities and, we trust, even larger results. The prominence among institutional churches of the Jersey City Tabernacle has given it a wide circle of friends and well-wishers.

A DEDICATION AND AN ANNIVERSARY IN ST. LOUIS.

The Fountain Park Church was formed by the consolidation of Third Church, originally an offshoot from Pilgrim organized in 1869, and the Aubert Place, which, after about six years as a mission, began independent life in 1890. Thanksgiving Day, 1894, Aubert Place broke ground for a new house of worship, and in May, 1895, had laid an extensive foundation and had finished a large room in the basement. It was purposed to complete the edifice whenever sufficient means could be secured.

During the summer overtures looking to consolidation were made by Third Church, which previously had moved its place of worship once or twice and had recently sold its property to the Germans. These overtures were accepted and the union was consummated in October, 1895. This made it possible to complete on the Aubert Place foundation a commodious, attractive and well-equipped edifice, built of cream-colored brick, with a red tiled roof. In the center, above the main entrance and flanked on either hand by eight-sided turrets, rises a lofty and imposing tower. The audience-room, which possesses excellent acoustic properties, is octagonal. The pulpit, opposite the main entrance, and with a large recess back of it for organ and choir, occupies one of the eight sides. On either hand is a stained glass window, fifteen feet wide and containing four lancets. Ample Sunday school rooms and a ladies' parlor are connected with the auditorium by rolling doors. Back of the recess for the organ are the pastor's study and the committee room, connected by sliding doors. In the basement are a well-furnished kitchen and a dining-room, with abundant additional space to be finished when required. The cost was $29,000, all but $3,426 of which has been paid.

THE NEW PROPERTY OF FIRST CHURCH, JERSEY CITY.

At the time of the consolidation both pastors tendered their resignations, and Rev. H. C. Vrooman was then called to carry on the work. The dedication took place Nov. 30, the pastor presiding. Addresses were made by Rev. Drs. C. S. Sargent, W. M. Jones, Michael Burnham and J. H. George. Rev. Messrs. E. F. Wheeler, E. H. Libby and W. N. Bessey also took part in the service.

The annual public meeting of the Congregational City Missionary Society was held with First Church, Nov. 30. Addresses were made by the president, W. B. Homer, and Drs. Michael Burnham and J. H. George. Dr. Burnham suggested that some of the churches undertake the support of individual missions as well as contribute to the work of the society. The collection and pledges for the year to come were more favorable than at many previous meetings. The annual business meeting was held Dec. 1.

J. P. O.

CENTRAL NEW YORK ACTIVITIES.

Rev. Edward Taylor, D. D., of Binghamton has just scored fifty years in the ministry, and keeps himself young by incessant public labors. In a recent review of his long service he stated some interesting facts about his pastorates. It has been his practice to have a New Year's "family talk" with his congregation and from time to time he has been accustomed to appoint a "helping hour," which have been the means of leading over a thousand souls to Christ. He attributes much to the influences of the Lord's Supper, and has known of many conversions dating from that still hour. His longest pastorate was with the First Church, Binghamton.

Rev. H. C. Riggs, D. D., has recently retired from the pulpit of the South Church, Rochester, to return to his old charge, St. Peter's Presbyterian Church, in that city. For four and a half years South Church has enjoyed the successful service of Dr. Riggs, who was skillful in guiding the young enterprise into substantial growth. In his time the chapel has been enlarged and greatly beautified and the membership of the church has increased thirty-five per cent.

At Summer Hill, a small village near Cortland, Rev. A. M. Asadoorian of Armenia and his devoted American wife have been doing excellent work while waiting for the storm in Turkey to subside. Rev. Lemuel Jones, also of the H. M. S., has just been holding special daily meetings there, and, in spite of the political excitement, sixteen persons have been received to the church, twelve on confession. Near by is Groton City, a small country town, where twenty-four have signed a paper to form a new church. An abandoned edifice in good repair will be used for the new and vigorous movement, and so another of the waste places of Zion will be restored. A council was to meet at an early day to complete the organization. One Christian family, moving into this neglected district, opened a home Sunday school and started an Endeavor Society, which led to the formation of the church.

At the recent installation of Rev. W. F. Ireland over the South Avenue Church, Syracuse, a significant act was done, although in an informal way. The State H. M. S., which stands behind the church, being asked, through its secretary, if it approved the proceedings of installation gave its cordial assent. This was done in accordance with the action of the society at its last annual meeting, when it was voted that all aided churches should consult the trustees of the society when they are seeking a pastor, that no aid be given whenever the character or fitness of the pastor are in doubt and that some representative of the society be called upon the installing council. The bearings of this action are obvious. Loss of money and disgrace have sometimes attended the hasty and foolish choice by a church of an unworthy or inefficient minister, while the church has begged for its customary aid to support the bad régime.

It is pleasant to record the success of the young church at Clayton, where Rev. William Excell, late of Hennepin, Ill, has recently been called. Through the generosity of Dr. George M. McCombs, whom all know who know the church at all, a debt of $600 has just been wiped out and so the new ministry has a happy beginning.

Several churches in this vicinity are holding special anniversaries at this time. Good Will, Syracuse, Rev. H. N. Kinney, pastor, has recently done so and has reaped a financial harvest from the lecture of "Ian Maclaren," whom it had the courage to secure at a heavy expense. Syracuse responded well to the name of Dr. Watson. The Geddes Church, Rev. F. L. Luce, pastor, has also celebrated its tenth anniversary. The ministers of Syracuse observed a "quiet day," Nov. 17, in accordance with the suggestions of the Evangelical Alliance. All denominations united. The Cortland church enjoyed celebrating its fifteenth anniversary. Reports from every department, including the home department of the Sunday school and a mission on the east side of the town, were heard, and the church is in splendid working order under the wise and efficient pastorate of Rev. W. H. Pound, who has been here four years.

WESTERN ONTARIO ASSOCIATION.

The meetings of this body were held recently with the First Church, Hamilton. The first session was largely occupied by the district secretaries, who presented encouraging reports. At the evening meeting Rev. E. D. Silcox in the annual address from the chair earnestly dealt with The Far-reaching Influences of Christianity, and was followed by Rev. J. I. Hindley's energetic address on Social Problems. The Lord's Supper was then observed, Rev. W. W. Smith conducting that helpful service.

On the second day the societies and institutions of the churches were fully discussed. Rev. J. I. Hindley led off with an earnest plea on behalf of the Home Missionary Society, and was followed by Rev. W. H. A. Claris in the interests of the Foreign Society. Rev. J. T. Daley, in a clear and vigorous paper, presented the needs of the college, while the editors of the Canadian Congregationalist and the Year-Book spoke, respectively, of these publications. An enjoyable tea, accompanied by splendid orchestral music under the leadership of Mr. S. H. Alexander, was a fitting conclusion to the close discussions of the day. In the evening the association joined with the entertaining church in a recognition service on behalf of the new pastor, Rev. H. S. Beavis, D. D. Rev. John Scholfield, Rev. J. W. Pedley and Rev. J. P. Gerrie delivered addresses, and were followed by different local pastors and by Dr. Beavis himself, who enters upon his work with bright prospects of a successful pastorate.

The third day was an equally busy and diligent one. A fraternal letter to Rev. W. T. Currie was adopted and forwarded to Cisamba, Africa. Resolutions of sympathy with Rev. John Morton on the death of his wife, and with the family of the late Rev. W. H. Allworth of Lansing, Mich., were unanimously passed. The study of the principles and history of Congregationalism was fully considered, and Rev. W. J. Hindley was asked to advise and direct the Endeavor Societies in the matter. A resolution on ordination, similar to that of the Toronto District Association, was placed on record. Co-operation with the churches of the United States in home mission work led to an interesting discussion upon what has already been done, as well as upon the promise of the future. During the "preacher's hour" a suggestive list of papers, magazines and recent books which the brethren find helpful was made out. The pew, too, was given an opportunity of replying to the pulpit, and among the suggestions mentioned were a practical gospel, nearness to the people, and a blameless life. The evening program was as follows: The Pastor in Social Life, Rev. C. E. Bolton; Recent Criticisms of Foreign Missions, Rev. J. P. Gerrie; Problems of the Country Church, Rev. J. K. Unsworth; and Congregationalists Who Have Helped Me, Rev H. S. Beavis. The association meets in April at Forest.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CHURCH, HARDWICK, VT.

A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CHURCH EDIFICE.

About two years ago an article from Vermont appeared in The Congregationalist, entitled Four Inviting Fields. The churches described speedily found pastors. One, the Christian Endeavor Church at Hardwick, dedicated its new house of worship Dec. 3.

The main entrance, under the tower, leads on the right to the prayer room, which seats 100 and which opens into the auditorium with sliding doors. Passing directly under the tower, one enters the main room. It has a bowled floor and circular pews and will seat 275. The interior is tastefully decorated and lighted by stained glass windows. The basement contains a spacious parlor, dining-room, kitchen and pastor's study.

Generous aid for the erection of the building has been given by friends in St. Johnsbury and Burlington and by the C. C. B. S. The windows were a gift from the College Street Church, Burlington. The cost of the building was about $5,500, which sum is all provided.

On the morning of dedication Church Life in Its Various Phases was discussed. In the afternoon the dedication sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. A. H. Heath and the prayer offered by Rev. Dr. Edward Fairbanks. A family church gathering later found 150 persons present at the annual supper. An enjoyable program following included topics which touched all phases of the local work and dealt with helpful thoughts on broader themes.

This church has prospered during its two years of existence, having more than doubled its original membership and having its departments of work well organized. An evening school is now in process of formation. Christian Endeavor principles seem here successfully applied to church organizations, and the church is remarkable for its warm spiritual life.

A MASSACHUSETTS DEDICATION.

South Church, Lawrence, after years of hopeful effort, has reached a notable day. In 1852 a Sunday school was begun in a schoolhouse. The work grew and occupied in turn the fire engine house, the B. & M. passenger station and a small chapel. In 1864 a chapel, seating 350 persons, was dedicated. Professor Park of Andover preached Sunday afternoons for three years, and then a church of 47 members resulted. Under the lead of different pastors and students from Andover the work developed. Rev. Clark Carter was the first installed pastor, and following him Rev. E. A. Chase at once began work in 1888 as supply, then became pastor. A new building, greatly needed, was worked for. A year ago the chapel was moved aside and the foundations of the new structure laid. Last week Wednesday people from all parts of the city and neighboring towns gathered for the dedication services.

The building seats 500 persons in comfortable pews arranged upon a sloping floor. Stained glass windows, soft fresco tints, a harmonious carpet and electric lights combine to make this sanctuary attractive for public worship. Lecture rooms, committee rooms, a ladies' parlor, a modern kitchen and a pastor's study are added advantages. At the services the sermon was preached by Dr. Alexander McKenzie and the prayer was offered by Dr. H. E. Barnes. Addresses were made by Dr. C. F. P. Bancroft of Phillips Academy on The Relation of the Church to Education, by Rev. A. H. Amory of Grace Episcopal Church on The Fellowship of the Churches and by Rev. W. E. Wolcott on The Relation of the Church to Civic Life. Mr. G. W. Ward of Boston rendered delightful tenor solos. From all sides come to this church and pastor words of encouragement.

J. R. Knodell and five by Sec. J. K. Harrison, was begun Dec. 3.—— Professor and Mrs. Nash recently entertained the faculty and students in the seminary parlors.——The Edwards Club of professors in Pacific and San Francisco (Presbyterian) Seminaries met, Dec. 5, in San Francisco. The paper by Professor Minton of the latter was on The Ethics of a Theological Professorship.——The Middle Class is now studying with Professor Lloyd the Addresses of the Book of Acts, and the ecclesiological passages.

CLUBS.

CT.—Forefathers' Day was celebrated Dec. 14 at the Davenport Church, New Haven. Addresses were made by the president, Rev. F. T. Luckey, and Judge S. E. Baldwin on The Influence of English Politics on the American Puritan, Dr. Newman Smyth on The Puritan Magistrate and the Puritan Preacher, Prof. G. P. Fisher on The Divine Authority of Magistrates, and the superintendent of schools, C. A. Kendall, Esq., on The Sons of the Pilgrims. A feature of the celebration was the singing of a Forefathers' Hymn, written by Dr. Leonard Bacon.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

Last Sunday the attention of a number of the city churches was directed to the cause of no license. Large rallies were held and enthusiastic addresses gave evidence to the influence which pastors and congregations exerted against the saloon.

CHARLESTOWN.—Winthrop. Last week the annual ladies' night of the Winthrop Club was attended by about 200 members and guests. Several toasts were followed by an address by Mr. Curtis Guild, Jr.

Massachusetts.

SOMERVILLE.—Prospect Hill. The pastor, Rev. E. S. Tead, is giving a series of expository sermons on the Gospel of Luke, which has awakened great interest among his people.——Day Street has voted in church and society to abolish the society and become incorporated.

EVERETT.—Mystic Side. A recent address of Miss E. M. Stone, before the C. E. Society, was of unusual interest owing to her acquaintance with the student in Bulgaria for whose support the society has contributed two years.

NEWTON.—Auburndale. Following the recommendations of a committee appointed some months ago to consider the organization of work, the church has voted to make a trial, during the coming year, of a classification of its various societies and activities in the four departments—worship and spiritual life, religious instruction, parish work and benevolence. Each department is to be under the care of a special committee, and all will be under the general oversight of a central advisory committee, meeting monthly, and made up of the pastor and a representative from each of the other committees. ——Eliot last Sunday morning took a collection of over $1,600 for the Boston City Missionary Society. This shows the interest of a strong suburban church in city evangelization.

WORCESTER.—Dr. Eldridge Mix, superintendent of the City Missionary Society, recently presented a strong paper before the Ministers' Meeting, on The Prime Function of the Church Today.——Pilgrim. J. T. Maynard has been appointed superintendent of the Kurn Hattin House at Westminister, Vt, instituted by Dr C. A. Dickinson of Berkeley Temple, Boston, to care for orphan and neglected boys. Mr. Maynard was superintendent of the Pine Farm School at Newton for two years.——The Worcester Local C. E. Union now numbers 47 societies and has opened permanent headquarters in the Y. M. C. A. building, where the president or some officer can be found every Tuesday evening.——The late Harriet W. Damon left $500 to the Y. M. C. A., $5,000 to the Worcester Y. W. C. A., $1,000 to the Boston Y. W. C. A., $1,500 to Mt. Holyoke, $1,000 to Central Church, $2,000 to the C. H. M. S. The residue, after certain other bequests, is to be divided between the Education Society, the Massachusetts H. M. S., the A. M. A, Hampton Institute, the A. B. C. F. M. and the Woman's Board.

WEBSTER has recently sent 79 subscriptions to Congregational Work, raised $12 as its part of the county Branch of Woman's Board debt, gathered $72 by canvassers for relief of Armenian orphans and taken a collection on a home missionary field day of $88.

ENFIELD.—Rev. G. H. Hubbard, formerly of Norton, Mass, commenced a new pastorate Nov. 8 at the postponed communion service. He and his wife united with this church. The congregation gave them a reception in the chapel Nov. 20, which was largely attended.

MILLER'S FALLS had a happy day at the recent dedication of its new building. Weakened by a serious division in the past, the church retained the use of its meeting house by permission only, without control, but the parsonage was lost altogether. The new house is of double the former seating capacity and was built by a united people. It was dedicated free of debt save an obligation to the C. C. B. S. The opening services were well attended. The sermon, by Rev. G. G. Atkins, was followed by a collection of $100 towards the $500 yet needed for a bell and other furnishings. After the great fire which destroyed all the business part of the village and the meeting house the people responded with a gift of $800 for a new house, the first offering being from a Roman Catholic. This amount has since been doubled. The Miller's Falls Manufacturing Company gave a generous help. The Northfield Church opened its hands in a bountiful collection. Other churches and some individuals sent gifts, so that $3,900, the cost of the building, was all provided.

CARLISLE.—First. The late Joanna Gleason of Sudbury left this church $10,000, and the society $5,000, and the society in South Sudbury $3,000. These gifts are to defray the expenses of preaching, the income only being used.

SPRINGFIELD.—Eastern Avenue. The church committee has decided to make every Wednesday evening an open night. It is proposed to have each month a church social, an entertainment, a lecture or other educational feature and a conference on church work. A boys' brigade has been organized with a large membership. There is also a girls' sewing class, and a kindergarten department of the Sunday school is soon to be formed.——Emmanuel celebrated its 15th anniversary last week Sunday. Rev. E. H. Byington, a former pastor, preached, and Rev. W. A. George, who was prominent as a founder of the church, took part. Historical addresses and other anniversary exercises of various departments were part of the program. Rev. D. L. Kebbe is pastor.——North held its annual meeting with an attendance of 140. Reports of the year's work were made by all the organizations in the parish. The reports from the nine departments gave satisfaction. The church has sustained a great loss by the death of Dea. E. G. Norton, for 38 years a deacon. A result of the recent 50th anniversary of the church is a collection of portraits of the six former pastors. The present pastor, Rev. F. B. Makepeace, has just completed his eighth year of service.

WEST SPRINGFIELD.—Mittineague has voted its pastor, Rev. A. M. Spangler, a vacation of six months, with salary. He has been sick for over two months, but his health is improving. He will go to Clifton Springs, N. Y. The church, though practically without a pastor, is in the midst of a revival. Special meetings were planned in union with the Methodist church. The people rallied to the work, matured the plans and now, with the help of Evangelist A. J. Hainer, are securing good results. About 60 conversions are reported, and the meetings continue.

HOLLAND has endured a serious loss in the death of Deacon G. L. Webber. He was 76 years old. Funds have been raised in the parish, and by the gifts of friends in other places, so that the parsonage has been tastefully repainted. Other improvements have also been made on the building. A supply of 30 to 50 copies of second-hand hymn-books are needed. Rev. J. G. Willis is pastor.

DALTON.—The Y. P. S. C. E. has made a gift to the church of a large picture of Rev. Oliver M. Sears, who was a pastor of this church from 1847 to 1853 (dying while in office). It will be placed in the chapel.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—Scandinavian, at Bethlehem Mission, was recently organized with a membership of 18, now increased to 24, and was recognized Dec. 12. Its constitution and creed merited warm approval. The pastor, Rev. B. B. Salter, has proved himself a man of consecrated spirit and strong leadership. The Scandinavian city population numbers about 1,500. The Lutherans hold part of the field with a well established church, but the outlook for the new child of Congregationalism is promising. The interest awakened by the addresses of Rev. M. D. Kneeland, D. D., advocating the cause of better Sunday observance, has resulted in the appointment of a committee chosen from three denominations to arrange a Sabbath congress in Portland.——The late W. W. Thomas left, among other bequests, $3,000 to the Second Parish Society, and $5,000 each to Bowdoin and the A. B. C. F. M.

AUGUSTA.—South. The pastor, Rev. J. S. Williamson, is now taking for his Sunday evening theme The Ideal City. Its relations with churches, schools, medical and legal professions, business and labor and the press are the topics. A bequest of $1,000 to the church is reported from Mrs. La Forrest Robinson of Indianapolis, in memory of her father, Deacon Robinson, a former member.

BATH.—Central has voted to place Congregational Work, the new missionary publication, into every family in the congregation. The pastor, Rev. A. F. Dunnels, has just completed a series of 10 evening sermons on The Founders of the Church. His wife conducts a cooking school at the parsonage for the girls of the Sunday school.

PATTEN.—Aroostook County Conference held its 50th semi-annual meeting recently in this remodeled house and enjoyed the interesting services of rededication. The expense of $2,200 has given a convenient and beautiful edifice. $500 was raised at the service towards the expense.

BRIDGTON.—The past six years has resulted in progress, including gains in membership, repairs on the edifice, incorporation of the church, $1,000 added to the permanent fund and a parsonage put in order at a cost of $500 and presented to the corporation.

AMHERST.—The church is much interested in raising money to repair the edifice. The evening services are well attended by young men. Mr. Cullens of Bangor Seminary supplies every two weeks.

The ministers of Aroostook County formed the Aroostook Ministerial Association at Patten, Dec. 2, electing Rev. I. C. Bumpus moderator and Rev. H. H. Noyes scribe and treasurer. The new organization will meet three times a year, twice in connection with the county conference and again in March.

New Hampshire.

GREENFIELD.—The church edifice, which has undergone thorough repairs, was recently rededicated, Rev. W. R. Cochrane preaching the sermon. The improvements include a steel ceiling, the petitioning off of the old galleries with sliding doors, a remodeling of pews, a pastor's study and a new furnace. The cost was nearly $1,400. A sad event of the occasion was the severe injuries received by Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Brown, who, going to the service, were thrown from their carriage by the fright of the horse. Their recovery is a matter of great anxiety.

CONWAY.—The church and community is sorely bereaved by the death, Dec. 5, of Mrs. E. A. Keep, wife of the pastor. After a surgical operation for appendicitis, she gave evidence of prospects of full recovery, but delirium set in and continued to the end. She had been here less than two years, but her unselfish regard for others won her way to the confidence and esteem of all. The pastor has the hearty sympathy of many friends.

TILTON.—Rev. M. S. Rees and his wife closed three weeks' evangelistic labors Dec 1. They presented stern truths in the spirit of tenderness. The singing, led by Mrs. Rees, added greatly to the effectiveness of the work. The thought of the whole community has been turned toward religion. Christians have been quickened, and nearly 200 persons have signed cards. The churches are left in excellent condition.

LITTLETON.—At the roll-call the largest attendance since the custom was established was recorded. Voluntary offerings paid for the outstanding debt of $500.

Pilgrim Church, Nashua, has held rousing services in the interest of the A. M. A. An envelope containing $100 was a gladdening surprise of one evening collection.——The women of North Weare netted over $50 from a recent "dollar social."——At a missionary concert Barnstead gave $27 to missions.——Hollis has given $68 to the National Council's Ministerial Relief Fund.——Winchester receives many additions resulting from special services, Rev. Ralph Gillam assisting.

Vermont.

Bristol has collected $100 for a reading-room.——Lyndonville receives $700 from the late Chandler Bullock.——Repairs and fresh paint have made agreeable changes in Springfield's edifice.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Elmwood Temple. Rev. E. T. Root, the pastor, was chosen recently president of the Providence C. E. Union at the annual meeting.——Free Evangelical. Rev. J. H. Larry, the pastor, besides publishing The Pointer, a Prohibition paper, has started a weekly issue called Faith and Works, a family religious paper.——Beneficent. The Sunday evening services are stimulated now by different instrumental specialists.——Central. The evening services are now being enriched by the combined work of a quartet and large chorus.——North. Rev. F. H. Decker is back in renewed strength again for his work.

HOWARD.—Franklin has held special services for two weeks. The meetings were well attended and the spiritual life of the church was greatly quickened. The pastor, Rev. R. K. Wickett, has begun his fifth year of service here.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—The Woman's Board of Missions met in Center Church Chapel Dec. 7, and was addressed by Miss Eliza Talcott of Japan.——United. The men's club service last Sunday evening was addressed by Mr. Charles D. Warner on Early Egyptian Civilization.——Plans are drawn for a new building for the City Missionary Association. The present building is wholly inadequate for the requirements. A lot 73 by 140 feet has been purchased and $16,800 paid toward it. The proposed building will cost about $20,000 and will contain separate halls for Sunday and week night meetings, Sunday school, and for the large work for mothers and children. Rev. W. D. Mossman is the general superintendent and missionary pastor and Miss S. J. Hume is missionary.——Welcome Hall Mission Work, under the care of the Church of the Redeemer, has received fresh impetus under the new assistant pastor of that church, Rev. H. E. Peabody.

SOUTH KILLINGLY.—The 150th anniversary was celebrated with appropriate exercises Dec. 8. The edifice was prettily decorated with plants and flowers. Among the many interesting papers and addresses was a history of the church, by Mr. G. W. Pike, and historical reminiscences of some of the older families of the town by Miss E. D. Larned. Rev. W. H. Moore spoke of the relations of pastor and people, and a tenderly eulogistic address was delivered by Rev. S. A. Fellows relating to the 23 years' ministry of the late pastor, Rev. W. H. Beard. A solemn "memorial hour" followed. By request of the people the late pastor's son, Mr. W. S. Beard, is acting minister. He is a graduate of Yale College and a member of the Senior Class in Yale Divinity School. At present the pulpit is supplied in turn by near-by preachers.

TORRINGTON.—The French people worshiping in the Congregational church have raised $400 towards supporting a permanent pastor of their own, and their case is being considered by the State Missionary Society. The average attendance at these meetings, conducted in French, is over 100.

BRIDGEPORT.—Rev. Dr. C. R. Palmer sails for England early in January, where he has accepted an invitation to fill the pulpit of a leading Congregational church of England, near Kensington Gardens, London. In the spring Dr. Palmer and his family expect to go to Italy.

MANCHESTER.—Two hundred Easter lily bulbs have been distributed among the members of the church, the flowering plants to be used to decorate the church next Easter. On the recent 10th anniversary of his installation Rev. C. H. Barber gave a review of that time.

WAUREGAN.—Rev. S. A. Fellows completed his 37th year as pastor last Sunday and took occasion to give an interesting historical discourse. His is the longest pastorate in the Windham Association, and there are few in the State who surpass his length of service.

WESTBROOK.—The statistics of the three churches in the town for 1896 show a total membership of 229, or 26 per cent. of the entire population, a greater proportion than the general average in Connecticut. The Congregational church has 169.

STONY CREEK.—Rev. G. A. Pelton recently tendered his resignation, but the church by a large vote has invited him to continue his ministry here and has voted him an increase of salary.

SOUTH COVENTRY.—The local Sunday school supports a school in the West. It will shortly send out $100 worth of library and singing books.

Willimantic a week ago collected $65 for the C. S. S. & P. S.——South Canaan and Falls Village are enjoying successful revivals, with 40 conversions reported thus far.——First Church, Winsted, has dropped the matter of a new house for the present.——The women at Glastonbury at a recent supper raised over $50 for the church debt.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

BROOKLYN.—Central. Annual reports show a total roll of 2,085 members, of whom 557 belong to the branch. The membership of the three S. S. departments is 2,631; the attendance averaging 1,976. The outlay of the year from all departments of the church aggregates $46,391.——Plymouth. Mayflower branch is considering a new building. The present work is handicapped by too narrow quarters. Active steps are now being taken to ask from the home church special attention to this need.——Bethesda, the branch of Central Church, celebrated its 15th anniversary lately with an unusually large gathering. Elaborate decorations were a special feature. Rev. Charles Herald, the pastor, preached the sermon. Last year 83 additions were received, making the present membership 538.——Pennsylvania Avenue. The large council of last week voted to recognize the church and to install the new pastor, Rev. J. C. Andrus. Rev. Messrs. T. S. Braithwaite and Wayland Spaulding offered the prayers of recognition and installation. Mr. Andrus is a graduate of Columbia Law School, and has studied at a Reformed Church seminary and at New Haven. He has held pastorates in a Presbyterian church at Highland, N. Y., and in Good Will Church, Syracuse, for eight and a half years.

PORT LEYDEN has a set of good church cushions in excellent condition, which have been used but one year. They are no longer needed, owing to a change of pews. They can be had at cost, the amount received being used to aid in canceling the church debt. The pastor is Rev. Lewis Williams.

ITHACA.—First has remitted for 250 copies of Congregational Work. It is according to the custom of this church to spend at least one-quarter of each year in congregational Bible study. The chorus choir recently organized is yielding excellent results.

BINGHAMTON.—First. The Helpers' Society has sent a box valued at $170 to a missionary located in Georgia. It is the usual custom of this society.

New Jersey.

EAST ORANGE.—Trinity. The pastor, Dr. F. W. Baldwin, is giving a series of short Sunday evening discourses on The Art of Living. Tuesday evenings, at the prayer meeeting, he and Rev. F. J. Goodwin have exchanged for some weeks, each speaking on How to Study the Bible. The church has just received the gift of two beautiful stained glass windows in memory of one of the founders and the organist of the church. One has a life size figure of St. John, the other a figure of St. Cecilia. Both are of opalescent, antique glass of rich coloring.

MONTCLAIR.—First. Benevolences last year amounted to $17,000. The S. S. average attendance has been good and the church membership is 800. Dr. A. H. Bradford is pastor.

THE SOUTH.

District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON.—First. A patriotic social, so called to cover a sort of bimetallic scheme, was given Dec. 11 by this church to celebrate the silver anniversary of the pastor, Dr. S. M. Newman, and his wife, and the golden wedding of two honored members. The room was tastefully decorated with flags, and patriotic songs were sung and appropriate readings given. Three sets of silver spoons, one of forks and a dainty tea service were given to the pastor and his wife, and $100 in gold to Mr. and Mrs. Giddings, Rev. M. R. Fishburn, pastor of Mt. Pleasant Church, making a happy speech. Coffee and gold and silver cake were served.

Maryland.

BALTIMORE.—Second. The $2,000 from the Stickney legacy, which has been in litigation three years, has just been paid to the church. The case of the Church Building Society is now pending at the State Court of Appeals.——Fourth. The pastor, Rev. Mark Wells, has recovered from a long sickness and is again vigorously at work. Six or eight additions on confession have recently been made.

North Carolina.

CANDOR dedicated its new house of worship Dec. 6. The sermon was by Rev. A. W. Curtis, D. D., and the prayer by Rev. Orishatukeh Faduma, the pastor. Starting with eight members a year ago, this church has doubled its membership and has done all the work in erecting the building.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—Pilgrim. The Women's Association has voted to assume the salary of Mrs. Pitkin. That of Mr. Pitkin is assured by the church. Upon the weekly calendar are now printed the missionary representatives with the names of the pastors and officers. An earnest interest in mission work pervades the church, and all departments have received a blessing from the enlarging of missionary knowledge and gifts. The evening congregations crowd the spacious auditorium. Rev. C. S. Mills has begun a series of missionary addresses upon Heroes of the Faith.——The City Missionary Society held its annual meeting Dec. 2. The meeting had an excellent attendance and was pervaded by a spirit of denominational loyalty. The society received last year about $2,650. It aided Lakewood and and Olivet Churches and maintained its Lorain Street Mission, and for the latter it has purchased a fine lot on which is an old building that serves temporarily as a house of worship. During the year, there being no superintendent, the duties of that office have been divided between Rev. Rufus Apthorp, pastor at Lorain Street Mission, and J. W. Moore, the treasurer. Addresses were made by President Ford and Rev. Messrs. L. L. Taylor, C. S. Mills and others upon the topic: The Outlook, My Hope for the Society in 1897. Congregational City Missionary Work in other prominent cities since the date of the organization of the Cleveland society was concisely reported by Rev. J. G. Fraser. The officers were re-elected and new trustees were chosen representing five churches not heretofore on the board. The society has received from Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Ford the gift of a valuable lot, the proceeds to be used toward a new building for the Lorain Street Mission. Mr. Ford has been president of the society since its organization, and was always its most generous helper. The society, in spite of reduced gifts from several of the churches, has maintained its missions and closed its year with a small balance in the treasury.

BOWLING GREEN.—Plain. The resignation of Rev. S. B. Crosby takes effect Jan. 1. During the pastorate the church has made progress along several lines. The 60th anniversary exercises last December were productive of real spiritual impetus. Wood stoves have given place to a furnace and new pulpit furniture has been purchased. Benevolences have reached the highest mark in the history of the church.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. The return of Rev. G. E. Albrecht to his old friends in this parish was an occasion of special pleasure to all. During a special series of meetings lately he has taken part. Great interest was sustained and a sympathetic response resulted. Dr. W. H. Warren also offered great assistance in the meetings.

Illinois.

SHERRARD, which suffered the loss of its building by a cyclone last May, is erecting a new house to be ready for dedication within a month. Rev. K. E. Forsell and his people have struggled heroically during this season of financial depression, and with the aid of many friends of the cause in different sections of the State and the C. C. B. S. they expect soon to have a place in which to worship.

ROODHOUSE —During the nearly two years' pastorate of Rev Thomas Marsh, the church building, which was in a delapidated condition, has been thoroughly repaired, new carpet and lamps purchased and sidewalks laid and other improvements made. A neat and commodious two story parsonage has also been recently completed.

ROCKFORD.—First. The Men's Sunday Evening Club observed its third anniversary, Dec. 6, with a banquet for about 150 men, at which a number of short toasts were given and an address by Rev. David Beaton. The formal evening exercises were largely responsive and choral. The pastor, Rev. W. W. Leete, gave an anniversary discourse on Visions Waiting for Open Eyes.

Indiana.

TERRE HAUTE —First. Trespassers recently entered the meeting house, which has recently been undergoing repairs. They despoiled the costly organ and damaged other furniture. Rev. C. H. Percival, the pastor elect, preaches his farewell sermon at Racine Dec. 20, and will make a short Southern trip before taking up his new work. He is a native of Waterville, Me., and a graduate of Bates College. He went to Andover Seminary and also studied at Berlin and Edinburgh and was at Houlton, Me., whence 10 years ago he went to Racine, Wis. The meeting house here has been renovated within and without in preparation for the new pastor. There is a new roof, the audience-room and vestry have been papered and electric lights put in. A cash offer of $22,000 by the Opera House Company has been refused for the site.

GAS CITY.—The new church worships in the Opera House with a congregation of over 100. The S. S. membership is about 50. The church roll, 29, is increasing. The new church is cordially welcomed by sister churches. The Methodist and Disciple churches opened their doors to the council of organization. Rev. Matthew Hussey comes from Wales and is already much beloved.

WASHINGTON has been supplied since Rev. Rockliffe Mackintosh's departure for England, until recently, by Miss Hattie D. Peabody. Rev. Thomas Smith of the Hosmer Church has now arranged to give half his time to this work until spring.

The new Dunkirk edifice gives evidence of speedy completion.——Ashland has rededicated its new house.

Michigan.

HUDSON begins a new year out of debt. Within 12 months it spent over $300 on a new roof and other repairs for the building. An increasing enthusiasm is shown in all the meetings. The six benevolent societies have all been remembered. The Junior C. E. Society at a recent entertainment netted $22 for the Armenians. The pastor, Rev. H. A. Putnam, and his wife have been tireless workers. Their family has recently moved into the parsonage, a beautiful home, lately deeded to the church by one of its most efficient members, who with his wife have made possible beautiful interior decorations in the meeting house.

DETROIT.—Fort Street has struck out boldly for self-support with good promise of becoming a strong church.——Mount Hope, also, has made a long step toward self-support in asking a much smaller grant this year.——The New Boulevard Mission has been well started and is already asking for, and needing, a settled pastor and a church organization.

CADILLAC.—The Men's Sunday Evening Club, besides swelling the attendance, directs a lecture course, maintains a free reading-room and stimulates the social life of the church. A conversation class to discuss the sermon or suggested topics, a night school, a choral class and a free kindergarten are some of the lines of extra work.

LAKE ODESSA.—Rev. W. H. Skentelbury received a complete surprise recently from his people at his home. After refreshments all adjourned to the meeting house, where the pastor had a part.

GRAND RAPIDS —By the will of Mrs. Dora N. Shepard of this city the church in Portland, Ct., receives $1,000 and the Y. M. C. A. and Union Benevolent Hospital $10,000 each.

The Lowell young women have provided for putting electric lights into the meeting house.——Calumet has received 90 new members in a year.——During two weeks of special meetings in Tawas City 110 persons signed cards.

Wisconsin.

Special services of revival in Leon, Cashton, Kickapoo Valley, Stockbridge have resulted well. ——Nearly $300 have been spent in improvements on the church property in Kewaunee

THE WEST.

Iowa.

WINTHROP.—Three months before the close of his second year Rev. C. B. Carlisle has been unanimously called for a third and has accepted. During his pastorate 57 members have been added, 51 on confession, a parsonage has been built and several hundred dollars expended on repairs. The church has also continued its liberal gifts to missions.

Special meetings are now in progress at Glenwood, Evangelist W. A. Sunday conducting the services.——Revival services are also being held at Mt. Pleasant, conducted by the pastor, Rev. O W. Rogers, neighboring pastors assisting; and at the South Church, Ottumwa, Rev. J. R. Beard, pastor. ——Evangelist Fred. B. Smith is assisting Rev. W. G. Johnson in revival meetings at Newell.——Special services are in progress at Summit Church, Dubuque, Rev. G. M. Orvis being his own evangelist.——Ionia, Rev. F. L. Hanscom, pastor, has completed a parsonage costing about $800.

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—First. The annual meeting recently held shows the finances in excellent condition. Anniversary services were held commemorating the completion of Dr. G. R. Merrill's 10th year as pastor. A reception was tendered him with many tokens of esteem. The Bible school, led by Dr. Merrill, is a marked feature. The course of study is thorough and the pupils pass from one department to another upon certificate. During the decade $180,000 have been raised for all purposes. —Lyndale reports a prosperous year, having raised nearly $3,600 and paid $1,200 on the church debt. Under the efficient leadership of Rev. L. H. Keller it has recovered from the discouragement of a few years ago, is steadily reducing its debt and has its finances in excellent shape.——Plymouth recently asked a contribution of $1,500 against a possible deficit the coming year, and promptly received over $1,700.——Swedish Mission Temple. Rev. J. M. Ahnstrom succeeds Rev. J. G. Princell as pastor. Congregations are improving and there is a hopeful spirit, though financial matters are still a cause of anxiety. A fellowship meeting just held occasioned much interest, different pastors from the State assisting.——Forest Heights. The new pastor comes from the M. E. church and begins work under favorable auspices.——Union. A recent Sunday was devoted to missions especially in the interest of the $13.50.

This was our $25 Christmas Desk only a few years ago, and it was the sensation of the season.

We brought it down by steady reductions until it reached a special Christmas price of $18 in 1894. Last year it went down to $15. This season we offer it for what it is actually worth at wholesale in lots of 100 or more.

$13.50.

You have your choice of oak or imitation mahogany. A broad shelf for books at the top; behind this is a 14-inch mirror of beveled plate glass. Rich relief carving in panels. The desk lid is hung on stout automatic brass sliders. Full overhanging cabinet with 2 tall racks for account books, 4 pigeon holes, 1 shelf, 2 pen racks, 2 drawers, etc. The writing surface is 26 inches deep.

Below the desk are three large drawers with pierced brass handles and stout locks. The desk is mounted on easy castors. It is phenomenal value.

PETERSON—In Upsala, Minn., Dec. 3, after an illness of several months, Rev. Andrew G. Peterson, pastor of the Swedish church.

MRS. ANN S. BLOOD.

Ann Shattuck, daughter of the late Rolan and Betsey Shattuck, was born in Pepperell, Mass., Nov. 21, 1820. After surviving her twin brother Jonas a little more than six years, she fell asleep Oct. 25, 1896. She united with the Congregational church of her town in May, 1837. Commencing early the Christian life, she grew up in the church as one of its most active and devoted supporters.

Oct. 4, 1843, she married Daniel Blood, who, with her, was ever ready for every good work, never looking for earthly honor, but always giving of time, service and means wherever the Master called. A former pastor (the late Rev. E. P. Smith) remarked that, no matter what the weather, he was sure of two families at church, and one was that of Daniel Blood. In the Ladies' Benevolent Society she held position as director for many years, and especially during the War of the Rebellion was very active in all methods of relieving wants of the suffering soldiers as well as assisting their families at home. The several missions received their share also The good pastor could always testify to aid and comfort, not only by way of encouraging word, but in substantial tokens as well. Were any in trouble or sickness she was like a mother in Israel to them. Verily she hath done what she could.

Two children blessed the home, Rolan Horace, who survives, and Clara Ann, a lovely girl of twenty summers, who was called to the heavenly home May 7, 1875. These children were early consecrated to God in baptism. The husband dropped his life work with the harness on to enter upon employment in the higher sphere Dec. 16, 1888.

Since that time, as the years have increased, Mrs. Blood has not been able to render as active service, but the same interest remained and the influence radiated from the home life just the same, as all who came within the circle can testify. Another has said, She was forever sowing sun warmth around her. We shall long remember her as last seen standing in her little garden, with God's sunlight upon her head, the air peaceful and resting, and at her feet on all sides flowers bright and beautiful—flower friends that spoke then (and ever) words as from God. Again and again as she plucked the choicest blossoms for us her face lighted up with the smile of pleasure, and in her happiness she laughed. We shall never forget her unselfishness, and the influences that came from her trying to scatter smiles and sunlight will be a strength to us and others in the sowing of God's sunbeams forever.

The light of love, the purity of grace,
The mind, the music breathing from her face,
The heart, whose softness harmonized the whole,
And O, that eye was in itself a soul.

Now that he giveth his beloved sleep, may her mantle of sweet Christian influence fall upon many.

ELLEN BIGELOW CUTTER.

Ellen Bigelow, beloved wife of John Ashburton Cutter, M. D., and daughter of the late Benjamin F. Wright of Hubbardston, Mass., and Mrs. Sarah Hartwell Wright of Worcester, went to her Redeemer on Nov. 24, in her thirtieth year, from her earthly home, 1054 Boston Road, New York city. Of lovely person, her character was still more beautiful. Turning to Christ during a revival in her youth, she had walked with him in love and adoration. Seven years ago a conventional verdict was pronounced that she had but a few months to live, yet great care and a strong hold on life because of her passionate love for her dear ones enabled her to carry in her lungs small cavities these eighty-four months. Within half an hour of death she was told she was dying. "I can hardly realize it," she replied, and calmly bade all good-by. The only struggle was the parting.

A strong bond existed between her and her pastor, Rev. William S Woolworth. She could not bear criticism of the church, she was for upbuilding. Since uniting with Forest Avenue Church by letter in September, 1895, she had not been able to attend church, yet her influence has been widespread for good. Among her papers this was found: "Some have said to me, 'What, child, it must be to be sick so long.' But through our trials we are led to perceive that in this voyage of life there is a Guiding Hand, and when we learn to trust our course to this leading our lives will be filled with peace. This peace and trust will come to all of us who resign our lives to the Great Captain, who knows and provides for all our needs." She spent twelve weeks with her mother in the summer and fall, her husband being with her three or four days of each week. With the true woman's home instinct she was anxious to return to New York, and this was found among her papers of that time:

God answers prayer. Sometimes when hearts are weak
He gives the very things we seek;
But often faith must learn a deeper rest,
And trust God's silence when he does not speak.

For he whose name is love will send the best.
Stars may burn out, nor mountain wall endure,
But God is true, his promises are sure
To those who seek.

She adds: "God has answered my prayers. He has given me more strength. He has brought me home again. He has done wonderful things for me." Let us thank God for such a precious life so long given to us.

J. A. C.

CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH BODWELL,

The only surviving daughter of the late Rev. J. C. Bodwell, D. D., of Hartford, Ct., passed away Oct. 20 from her ancestral home at Sanbornton, N. H. She was a valued member and stanch supporter of the ancient church in Sanbornton of which her deceased grandfather was the honored pastor for forty-six years.

Economical toward herself, she was most generous toward every friend and every good cause. Endowed with personal beauty and great energy, she gave up her career to minister most tenderly to the uncle, sister and mother who passed on before. In strictest verity it can be said of her, "She hath done what she could."

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The only improvement in trade is in Christmas or holiday goods and specialties. The weather has been too mild to stimulate business, and, furthermore, the period of stock taking and general clearance, etc., is now so near at hand that merchants and manufacturers cannot see much improvement ahead until after the middle of January. The evident desire of many senators and congressmen to force the recognition by this Government of Cuban belligerency causes large financial and commercial interests to adopt an extremely conservative and waiting policy. Money is abundant and rates are low, but there is very little demand for funds so that radical action by Congress in the Cuban matter might change the aspect of the money market over night.

As to the general trade situation, the tendency of staples is downwards. A reaction in wheat is expected. The dissensions in and threatened collapse of the iron and steel pools or combinations make buyers believe in lower prices and they are withholding orders in consequence. Several woolen mills have started up on full time, but the woolen manufacturing situation is something of a disappointment. Leather is quiet and the heavy stock of print cloths at Fall River, some 1,833,000 pieces, exerts a depressing influence on the dry goods trade generally. Bank clearings last week declined fifteen per cent. from the preceding week and were even six per cent. less than in the same week last year.

young people and the amount raised devoted to home and foreign fields. The debt has already been paid, a thank offering being raised Thanksgiving evening.——At the Ministers' Meeting the St. Paul brethren were present by invitation. Rev Richard Brown read a paper upon The Presence of Christ.

CLIMAX.—Work has been opened at this village in a destitute region and is cared for at present by one of the Dakota brethren.

Kansas.

DOVER AND WAKARUSA.—Rev. C. G. Miller, the pastor, has recently held an evangelistic service in Prairie Hill district, resulting in hopeful conversions.

Though pastorless, Stafford has recently paid its floating debt and is working unitedly and energetically.

Nebraska.

FRANKLIN.—Rev. G. W. Mitchell, who had been absent several Sundays with his invalid wife, was at home for communion Dec. 6. The seven persons who united include two whole families and will greatly strengthen the church. Superintendent Bross presented the cause of home missionary interests and the collection much exceeded that of any previous year.

GRANT.—Rev. G. W. Knapp has been holding special meetings at an out-station with good results. At first the community had only two church members. At the close nearly all the people were ready for Christian work.

CALHOUN.—Rev. S. A. Parker has been holding special meetings at Parker Schoolhouse, an outstation five miles away. Interest has been deep and pervading and 15 persons have confessed Christ.

North Dakota.

INKSTER.—Rev. C. Y. Suell has greatly strengthened the work since assuming the pastorate a year ago. A tempting call to Southern California has been declined, to the delight and encouragement of his people.

LISBON.—Pioneer. Few churches have achieved larger results in proportion to the membership than this, but it has at last succumbed to the egress of population and is extinct.

South Dakota.

VALLEY SPRINGS.—Messrs. Thompson and Gamble have just closed a good series of meetings, in which several pastors from neighboring towns shared.

The German churches in the State have received an inspiring visit from Rev. G. E. Albrecht, by whom many of them were organized. They were deeply interested in hearing of his present work in Japan under the American Board.

Colorado.

MANITOU is rejoicing over old debts paid and special interest among the members. The influence of the pastor, Rev. F. L Hayes, is strong throughout the community and strangers are coming to the services.

COLORADO SPRINGS.—Second had a steady growth last year. Rev. M. D. Ormes is a faithful worker. Sixteen new members were welcomed Nov. 30, eight on confession.

Montana.

LIVINGSTON has recently become vacant through the resignation of Rev. W. A. Walker. Mr. Walker's pastorate was a successful one, and the church under his leadership has gained strength, but on account of ill health he has been compelled to seek a warmer climate The church is one of the most important in the State, and has recently come to self-support.

HELENA.—Rev. R. L. Hartt has been preaching a series of sermons on Typical Christian Heroes, which have drawn large congregations. The church, though it has severely felt the financial stringency, is full of hope under the leadership of its new pastor.

HOME MISSIONARY FUND.

Inquiries are beginning to come to us from the home missionary field: "Am I to have The Congregationalist another year? I would like to pay for it, but am less able to do so than last year even." The fund last year was not large enough to supply the paper to our home missionary list, but we cut nobody off. Will not the friends of home missions rally this month so that we can advance the date on all papers to January, 1898, and add some names that earnestly desire the weekly visits of The Congregationalist? We cannot personally send the paper this year to any more than the fund provides for.

About Furs.

—THEIR—

Fashions and Prices.

Furs will be fashionably worn this season as much for an article of dress as for mere purpose of warmth. The most fashionable are Russian Sable, Hudson's Bay Sable, Otter, Mink, Persian Lamb and Seal.

Russian Sable heads the list of valuable furs. It ranks with the most precious stones, will last a century, and has been for generations the favored fur of the crowned heads of Europe, and at present is in greater demand than ever.

The International Fur Co., 41 Summer St., have a fine collection of Russian Sables ranging in price from $40 to $250 per skin. The best Russian Sables are caught on the Lena River; other beautiful specimens are found on the Obi and Volga Rivers.

America leads in Otter, Hudson's Bay Sable, Mink, Seal, Bear, Beaver, Chinchilla, Fox and many other furs. Russia supplies Ermine, Russian Sable, Silver Fox, etc. Neither England, France nor Switzerland produce any of the fur-bearing animals. America surpasses all other countries in dressing natural furs. This was clearly demonstrated at the World's Fair, where the Russian Sable, Mink, Otter and other natural furs exhibit were awarded highest prizes against the world's competition.

To possess a Sealskin cape, coat, jacket, gloves, etc., is indicative of good taste and real economy. They last a lifetime and are always in style. Every lady should have a cape at least, or better still a cloak. Prices $30 to $275.

The International Fur Co., 41 Summer St., has on exhibition the leading styles in coats, capes, collars, muffs, scarfs with cluster of tails, etc., in Russian Sable, Otter, Hudson's Bay Sable, Seal, Chinchilla, Persian Lamb and standard furs, also gentlemen's fur-lined overcoats, sleigh robes, all at the lowest possible prices for reliable goods.

The house is conveniently located at 41 Summer St., near Washington, Boston, Mass.

OBITUARIES.

SARAH S. TAPPAN.

Miss Sarah S. Tappan, whose recent death has saddened the hearts of her many friends, was born in New York city in 1819. Her family on the paternal side had been a controlling one for several generations in Northampton, Mass., while her father was the noted philanthropist, Arthur Tappan, Esq., whose unflinching opposition to slavery and munificent gifts to Kenyon College and Auburn and Lane Seminaries, made him one of the prominent men of the last generation. Her descent upon the mother's side was equally illustrious, her first ancestor, Edward Antill, who came to New York from Surrey, Eng., about 1678, received a large grant of land on Staten Island from King James Second. His son, of the same name, gave £1,800, an immense sum in that day, to establish King's, now Columbia, College, New York. His son, Edward Antill, Miss Tappan's grandfather, stood with Aaron Burr at the side of Richard Montgomery when the latter was killed during the fatal assault on Quebec in 1775. In a subsequent battle he was captured by the British and confined in a prison ship, but was exchanged in time to fight at the siege of Yorktown and witness the surrender of Cornwallis. At the baptism of his infant daughter, Frances, afterwards Miss Tappan's mother, Gen. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton were the sponsors.

Sarah Salisbury, fourth child of Arthur and Frances Antill Tappan, spent her childhood in New York and New Haven, Ct. At the age of twelve she united with the Laight street Presbyterian Church of New York, then under the pastorate of the celebrated Dr. Samuel H. Cox. In 1850 she left New York with her father's family and changed her residence several times, but spent the greater part of her subsequent life in New Haven, Ct., where she was a prominent member of the Center Church, under the pastorate of the late Dr. Leonard Bacon. She became a writer of some distinction, and published a life of Christ for young persons at a period when lives of our Saviour were much rarer than at present. She also abridged the English memoir of the Jewess, Leila Ada, a very popular book at one time, and wrote the preface for the American edition. There appeared from her pen also a small book entitled The Morning Glory, a memoir of her niece, Frances Seymour. She is also known to have published seventeen articles in the Independent and the Evangelist, beside several others which cannot now be identified. One sketch of hers entitled My Two Grandfathers excited much attention in its day. She took a deep interest in missionary movements, was at one time president of a woman's foreign missionary society in Middletown, Ct., and became afterwards secretary of a similar organization in the Center Church of New Haven.

Miss Tappan inherited a noble disposition and a strong mind, which she improved by assiduous culture. She loved truth intensely, was just and generous in her judgments, became a great student of the Bible and of historical works, and was literally tireless in her unselfish devotion to those around her. She never seemed to rest unless those nearest to her were growing in character and mind under her skilful guidance. Many students of Yale and Wesleyan Universities remember her stimulating influence as a power in their lives. Her religious character was distinct and original, and her faith grew brighter during her last years. In June last she wrote in her diary, "I somehow think that this is my last summer. May I be ready when the call comes to me." A stroke of paralysis in September hastened her death, which occurred at Clifton Springs, N. Y., on Oct. 18. We trust that this strong and saintly woman has, after life's many vicissitudes, reached the point described in a stanza of her favorite poem:

Safe to the land, safe to the land,
The end is this.
And then with him go hand in hand,
Far into bliss.

W. E. P.

SAMUEL STEARNS SPRAGUE.

On Nov. 11 his eyes were closed to us and opened in the upper world. Mr. Sprague seemed to have rounded out a life particularly full and active. For nearly a half-century he was a prominent and successful merchant in Providence, and occupied positions of large responsibility in various religious, financial and political organizations of the community in which he lived. One of the most active organizers of the Union Congregational Church, he has ever since been a pillar therein. His benevolences were large, his hospitality great, especially to those "that preach the gospel of peace." As a Christian gentleman he inspired love and respect to an unusual degree among all classes, while in his family life he was singularly gracious and beautiful. In his seventy eighth year he has renewed his youth.

The Delicate Woman

Simple and compact, this machine is more easily understood, its parts are better protected from dust, it has more room under the arm, and is capable of a greater range of work, than any similar device.

unable to operate the ordinary form of sewing-machine without fatigue, can use the SILENT SINGER AUTOMATIC with the greatest ease. The acme of perfection in construction and artistic finish, this machine is positively the lightest-running of any. Its low, broad treadle enables frequent change in position of the feet, or it can be furnished in a portable form to be effectively run by hand if desired. It has neither shuttle nor bobbin, and no tensions to adjust, but is ready for use when the needle is threaded.

The Silent Singer

has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by examination and comparison with similar machines.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Statistics for Massachusetts show that the enrollment of the Protestant Evangelical Sunday schools for the past four years has increased about 50,000 or eighteen per cent., an average of four and one-half per cent. per annum, while the census returns show that the population increased, for the five years from 1890 to 1895, only eleven per cent., or an average of two and two-tenths per cent. per annum. The total Sunday school enrollment is only about one in seven of the population.

In Massachusetts there were held, during the month of November, under the auspices of the State and District Associations, eleven district conventions at South Hadley, Beverly, Huntington, Lowell, Wilmington, Nantucket, Edgartown, Falmouth, Sandwich, Orleans and Winchendon. At two of the meetings three of the State secretaries made addresses and conducted conferences, at four two of the secretaries assisted and at each of the other five one only was present.

The Report of the Eighth International Convention held in Boston last June has been issued and is a book of 420 pages. It contains a "historical sketch" of the national meetings from 1832 to and including the Seventh International Convention in St. Louis, in 1893. The report of the last convention is complete. It can be obtained at the office of the Massachusetts Sunday School Association, 110 Boylston Street, Boston. Price in paper covers, thirty-five cents, with eight cents added for postage.

The month of November witnessed six annual conventions. These have shown a growing and widespread interest in improving and increasing the work in and for the Sunday school. Michigan workers met at Kalamazoo on the 17th to the 19th, while during the past week the District of Columbia Convention met at Washington from the 23d to the 25th, and Tennessee at Nashville from the 24th to the 26th. Utah at Salt Lake City convened on Friday, the 27th, and continued in session over Sunday, which is an unusual thing for a Sunday school convention to do. These complete the State meetings for the present year.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Chicago societies report 95 missionary libraries.

One out of every 41 of Delaware's population is a member of a C. E. Society.

A floating society committee in San Diego, Cal., led 31 sailors to conversion besides two officers.

The Endeavorers of Washington, D. C., are circulating a huge petition to banish saloons from the capital.

A Nebraska society of 28 members gave $100 to foreign missions last year, and another of 36 gave $156 for home missions.

A Boston society is arousing greater interest by sending members two by two to visit and report upon the different missions.

A year's subscription to the denominational paper has been given by the Endeavorers to each family in a Pennsylvania congregation.

A Texas town with a population of less than 2,000 has, in connection with six churches, three Junior societies and four Young People's.

The society of Aroostook County, Me., showing the greatest gift to missions is to choose the delegate to San Francisco from that union.

South Australia's sixth convention surpassed all former gatherings. Six thousand persons were in attendance on each of the evening sessions.

The society of Plymouth Church, Whiting, Ind., have sawed and split 10 cords of oak wood on the church grounds, and are to do the work of sexton to lessen the expenses.

Samoa now has five societies and more than 200 active members. The societies on neighboring groups of islands increase the membership to 687. A systematic exchange of letters and visits serves in place of a formal union.

At Mexico's convention a Mexican was present who had been converted in prison as a result of the work of a C. E. Society. When he reached home he gathered a congregation that hopes to become a self supporting church and organize a society.

For December the members of the World's Christian Endeavor Prayer Chain are asked to pray that the month celebrated the world around as Christ's natal month may be marked by the gift of a multitude of young hearts to him and by the more complete consecration of all his people to his service.

Two years ago at Ireland's first convention a small hall furnished abundant accommodation. This year the largest building in Belfast proved n sufficient. Dr. Clark was greeted with the heartiest enthusiasm. The smallest society reporting has three active members, but five energetic committees.

ITS LOWEST LEVEL.—When one sees, in another column of this paper, the massive Christmas desk which is now being offered for $13.50 he feels that price reduction can no further go. Christmases may come and Christmases may go, but while wood is wood and labor is labor a desk of this class can never be built cheaper than $13.50 There is a picture of this desk in another column over the signature of the Paine Furniture Co.

TRAVEL VIA THE SAVANNAH LINE.—A number of fine iron steamships ply between Boston and New York and Savannah. They are stanch and commodious. The hulls and decks are of iron and steel. The compartments are water-tight. The saloons are beautifully furnished and upholstered Each ship is arranged for a large number of first class, second class and steerage passengers, and lighted throughout by electricity. The vessels are manned by carefully selected officers and crews, and perfect discipline is always maintained. For illustrated folder address Richardson & Barnard, 20 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.

"BAY STATE" Musical Instruments

CHARACTER.

Character must stand behind and back up everything, even in musical instruments. The character of the "Bay State" Mandolins, Guitars, Banjos, Zithers and Flutes is beyond question. Twenty-seven awards at the principal expositions of the world, the only winners of American gold medals; these are facts which speak. For purity of tone and beauty of design, no other instrument made can compare with them—they lead the world. Send for handsome illustrated Catalogue.

Estey Organs

The famous Estey Organs embody all that long experience, skill, and large capital can produce. They contain exclusive essential features possible only in an organ emanating from the oldest and largest factory on this continent.

The Estey Tone exhibits the effect of the great care which enters into the Estey Organ. It has that rare "singing quality" which blends so harmoniously with the voice—a feature much desired but seldom obtained.

The Estey Design is a marvel of classic architecture. It represents the true artist, and appeals to all cultured tastes.

The Estey Durability is simply phenomenal. With the purchase of an Estey Organ you dispense with further thought of trouble with an organ. Its rare excellence will rivet your warmest approval for a generation.

The Estey Price is a very attractive feature. It is the lowest consistent with first-class work. It is always in the interest of economy, but never at the sacrifice of quality.

Remember, the Estey Organ is not superior in one point only, but in a dozen points. In variety of styles, sizes, and grades, in design and workmanship, in tone and durability, the Estey Organs

LEAD THE WORLD.

In Christian Endeavor Societies, in Conservatories, in Students' Libraries, in Concert Halls, in Chapels, in Churches, and in the Home, the famous Estey tone is heard the world over. In Europe and Asia, in Africa and Australia, it is widely known. In this country the name "Estey" has for over fifty years been synonymous with fine music.

Two Hundred and Eighty Thousand Estey Organs made and sold testify to these facts.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

City and State (Philadelphia) is simply voicing the sentiments of thousands of our citizens when it says: "It may be too late to hope for Mr. Terrell's recall by this Administration, but it is certainly in good season to express the hope that Mr. McKinley will send a very different kind of man to represent this country at the Sublime Porte."

The Sacred Heart Review confesses its inability to understand how Roman Catholic parents, who value the faith of their sons, can consent to expose that faith to the perils and dangers that abound at Harvard University and all other similar non-Catholic establishments.

The Yale Review thinks that European journals saw the full significance of the recent election earlier and more accurately than ours did. "They saw that this election marked a crises, not in the history of the United States only, but in the history of democratic government. If the people can be convinced that their interests are identical with those of property owners, democracy is a workable thing in modern industrial society. If they become convinced that their interests are divergent from those of property owners, democracy involves socialism." Mr. F. J. Stimson, in the same journal, explains the distrust of our judiciary by organized labor by the fact that "nearly half of the social, economic or labor legislation of the last ten years has been questioned in the courts upon constitutional principles, and of labor legislation probably half has been annulled by them." The editor, discussing The Negro Question, calls for less discussion and more exact research in accordance with the methods of ethnology and of statistics. "We have no wish to see the philanthropist displaced by the scholar, but we believe that if the managers and teachers of the American Missionary Association . . . were to supplement their present useful labors by making and publishing studies into certain questions of an anthropological, ethnological and sociological nature . . . they would give steadiness and effect to their own work and earn the hearty gratitude of . . . American and European scholars."

The Church is inclined to believe that since the conception of the state has changed and it is now generally held that it is an ethical organism, therefore the relations of the church to the state must change, and a tax paid to the state must on principle be looked upon as a direct gift to God, "as consecrated a thing as money given to church expenses." At least it believes that the church would do well to soberly and patiently discuss the question of taxing church property, without waiting until perhaps it is fired at her. "A policy that builds on precedents, when the climate of so many great questions is steadily changing, may some day have its nose pulled by necessity."

ABROAD.

The English reviews are full of discussions of the political situation on the Continent, and the future relations of Great Britain to the dual alliance—Russia and France. H. W. Wilson in the November Fortnightly Review pleads for an Anglo-German rather than an Anglo-Russian understanding and agreement. That Germany and England are not friends now he admits, but he thinks Germany can be made to see that "by all her traditions, by her sacrifices in the past, by the fact that upon her civilized and intellectual population will first roll the deluge of barbarism from the East, annihilating independence of thought, devastating and destroying the civilization which it cannot comprehend, and the culture which it never can assimilate, should stand shoulder to shoulder with England against the powers of barbarism." Unless such an alliance is formed, he sees nothing before the British Empire save dissolution, unless its people are prepared to accept conscription into service willingly, and a vast outlay of treasure for such additional naval strength as will make them equal to the many foes now allied against them.

THE PACIFIC COAST AND THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.—For the tourist and pleasure seeker of Boston and vicinity the Pennsylvania Railroad Company offers during the present season a series of peculiarly attractive tours. Three tours will leave Boston for California Jan. 26, Feb. 23 and March 26, 1897, allowing five weeks in California on the first tour and four weeks on the second. Passengers on the third tour may return on regular trains within nine months. The grand Mardi-Gras carnival at New Orleans will be witnessed on the second tour. All of these tours, either going or returning, will pass through the famous Colorado region, Glenwood Springs, Leadville and the Garden of the Gods Five tours have been arranged to Washington, leaving Boston Dec. 29, 1896, Feb. 12, March 12, April 5 and May 12, 1897. These tours have always appealed to the patriotic people of Boston, and, in view of the approaching inauguration, Washington will be unusually attractive during the present season. Rates from Boston for the California tours: $315 for the first tour, $355 for the second tour and $220 for the third tour, round trip; $155 one way. Rates for Washington tours, $23 for the round trip, including accommodations at the best hotels in Washington. Tours to Florida, Old Point Comfort and Richmond will also be run during the winter season. For tickets, itineraries and other information address or apply to Tourist Agent, 205 Washington Street, Boston.

THE old and reliable firm of Messrs. Norcross, Mellen & Co., No. 18 Merchants Row, Boston, are now offering to the public a very large and desirable assortment of goods from the celebrated potteries of Josiah Wedgwood & Sons. Also from the leading manufacturers of pottery in this country and Europe, all of which are offered at very low prices. By reference to their advertisement in another column one can find very beautiful holiday gifts by "going out of their way a little."

NEURALGIA is the prayer of the nerves for pure blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the One True Blood Purifier and nerve builder.

Scott's Emulsion is Cod-liver Oil prepared as a food. At the same time, it is a blood maker, a nerve tonic and an up-builder. But principally it is a food for tired and weak digestions; for those who are not getting the fat they should from their ordinary food; for children whom nothing seems to nourish; for all who are fat-starved and thin.

It is pleasant to take; at least, it is not unpleasant. Children like it and ask for more.

There's no help wanted from soap or anything else, when you use Pearline. Pearline and water—all alone by themselves—that's everything you need for the best, the easiest, the safest, the most economical washing and cleaning. What help can soap add to it? You might just as well get a horse to help a locomotive. Anything that soap can do, Pearline can do better—and can do a great deal more besides.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 484

The "Harris" Method of Giving

This little tract has been of immense service to the churches in suggesting systematic methods of giving. It was first published as an article in the Congregationalist, and attracted wide notice. Many large editions of the "True Method of Giving" in its present form have been sold. Price, 100 copies, $2.50; 35 copies, $1.00.

For sale at the office of The Congregationalist, Boston.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, DEC. 11.

Mrs. C. H. Daniels presided and commented upon Paul's expression, "newness of spirit," which by contrast suggests oldness. The first chapter of Romans describes the degradation of multitudes in the heathen world, and the terrible fact of sin is the strongest reason for our missionary work. From these deeps we ascend to the hight of Calvary, and in close fellowship with Christ gain the richness of newness of spirit, finding the climax of its power in service. Mrs. Capron added two thoughts, relating to the freedom from the law of sin and death which the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has given, and to the tendency in this freedom to enlarge capacity. Mrs. De Forest, Mrs. Thompson and Miss M. W. Leitch led petitions prompted by these suggestions. Mrs. Kellogg spoke of the downward tendency of sin as illustrated by Solomon, and of the advantage which may be gained by the study of the book of Acts as it may be directed in the Sunday school lessons of the International series the coming year.

Mrs. Daniels called attention to the calendar topics for prayer in behalf of missionaries in North China, and Miss Child gave interesting reminiscences of her recent visit among them; her three days on the Peiho River on her way to Tungcho, where she found the college rejoicing in the gift received from the Tank estate, "delighted to find one station where the missionaries were not distressed on account of lack of money to carry on their work"; one afternoon spent with Miss Abby Chapin in visiting native houses; the opium pipe and a pack of cards, the symbols of two conspicuous vices in China, gambling being so common that men, women and children are eager over dice, even the buying of their food being reduced to a game of chance and the prayers which the priests shall offer for them in the temples being selected by choosing numbers.

Miss Lamson mentioned the fact that Miss Abby Chapin's salary is given by Christian Endeavor Societies, and that they have become so much interested in her and in furnishing her support that those who wish to have a share in it will be obliged to get their pledges in early.

Extracts were read from Miss Williams's report of the girls' school in Kalgan, especially showing the difficulties in relation to foot binding.

Mrs. Schneider read a letter from Mrs. Fuller of Aintab, describing the condition of some of the hospital patients and expressing appreciation of gifts received. There are eighty pupils in the girls' school and 140 students in the college. Mrs. Billings presented a request which had come from Mrs. Fay of Bailundu, West Africa, for special prayer in behalf of two who have been numbered among their native Christians but who have gone sadly astray.

CHURCH REMODELING.

THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,

10 Park Square, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.

Since two-thirds of the churches of America have investigated our claims and are using

FACTS Worth Remembering for 1897

TO begin the new year's church business right you should have a good Church Record Book. The best is the PILGRIM CHURCH RECORD, published by your own society at $2.00 and upward.

HAS your Sunday School Library been replenished recently? Remember some of the best books are issued by YOUR OWN SOCIETY. Some of the new issues are very attractive and teach important lessons.

EVERY Congregational Sunday School should, and most of them do, use the PILGRIM LESSON HELPS. If your school does not, isn't 1897 a good time to begin? Samples free. Our S. S. Record Books are also the best.

NOW is the time for ministers to get some good books for home reading and study. OUR GENERAL CATALOGUE gives our reduced prices on the best books from all publishers. Send for one.

EVERYBODY should have a list of the year's S. S. Lessons, Y. P. S. C. E. Topics, etc., handy for reference. Our PILGRIM SUNDAY SCHOOL TREASURY has all this and much more. 4 cts.; $2.00 per 100; $2.40, postpaid.

WHY not start a HOME DEPARTMENT in your Sunday School? It is the greatest Sunday School extension movement of modern times. Hazard's Home Department book, 25 cts., tells you all about it.

YOU cannot afford to longer use Cruden's Concordance now that WALKER'S is such an immense improvement upon it, and only $2.00. We want agents to sell Walker's. It has 50,000 more references than Cruden's.

EVERY college girl should have the "MARY LYON YEAR BOOK," containing a daily thought from this great pioneer in women's higher education. $1.25; beautifully bound. $1.00, postpaid, to any one mentioning this advertisement.

ARE you aware that business sent to the Congregational bookstores helps SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSION WORK? Our business department is the largest single contributor to it, appropriating $3,000 to $5,000 annually.

REMEMBER that the appropriation we now make could be doubled if we had EVERY CONGREGATIONALIST AS A CUSTOMER. May we have you, and your church and school?

THE BIBLE AS LITERATURE

A course of 14 Lectures on this subject is now being delivered at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, on Sunday evenings, by Rev. Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT.

These lectures are exciting great interest, and will command the attention of all readers and Bible students. We will furnish in pamphlet form complete reports of the course, together with suggested Bible readings, for one dollar. On receipt of price, copies of the lectures already delivered will be mailed at once, postpaid, and the rest weekly as they appear. Address

DECORATIONS MEMORIALS
333 TO 341 FOURTH AVENUE NEW YORK

ONE OF THE SHOW ROOMS.

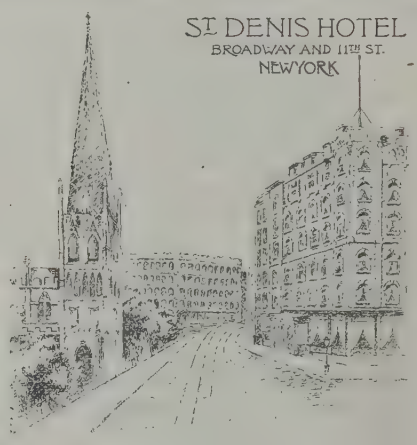
The selection of a memorial should be made with a careful consideration of the subject that will most fitly express the life and character of the one memorialized, and the time necessary for its execution in a thoroughly artistic and successful manner.

The festivals of the Church are the most suitable times in which to consecrate and dedicate memorials, and we suggest that those considering memorials to be ready for Easter, consult us as early as possible.

The best designers of memorials, whether they be in the form of windows, pulpits, lecterns, or other necessaries of the church, are associated with us, and we are always prepared to submit their suggestions to intending purchasers.

Our windows and mosaics are made of Tiffany Favrile Glass, which is made by us at our own furnaces, and cannot be duplicated or used by any other makers.

Comparison of our work with that of other makers will attest its superiority. To any who wish to make such comparison, we will furnish, upon application, a list of examples of our work in any part of the country.



An ideal location, opposite the beautiful pile and grounds of Grace Church and most convenient to either up-town or down-town business districts and leading places of amusement.

The New Café St. Denis,

795 Broadway,

adjoining and connected with the St. Denis Hotel, is now completed and open to the public. Gentlemen's Restaurant and Lunch Counter, with handsome banquet rooms above, especially arranged and fitted up for large and small dinner parties.

OF the twelve greatest paintings called world pictures, ten are directly connected with Christ. He has imparted to art and to symbolism their richest meanings, some of which are illustrated in our pages this week. His advent is celebrated not only at the Christmas time, but in deep and glad and inspiring experiences created through music and literature and art, as well as through what we call religion as distinct from these. The love to men which finds expression not only in making gifts once a year, but in ministries of kindness all the year, reaches its highest realization only when it is prompted by love to him who loved us and gave himself for us. And the heart of it all is in those key words of his, "This is my blood of the covenant which is shed for many unto remission of sins." It will do one good to read The Lost Christ, our Christmas story this week, and, having realized something of what the world would do without him, to come back with deeper thanksgiving into the life which knows something of him, and to turn with new earnestness to bring all the world to acknowledge him as Saviour and Lord.

Dr. Pearsons's suggestion of setting apart a Sunday for the consideration of the life of Mary Lyon and for an offering to Mt. Holyoke College is already bearing fruit. The initiative was properly taken by the Franklin County Association of Congregational Ministers, within whose limits Mary Lyon was born. It has voted to recommend to the ministers and churches of the conference that on Feb. 28, 1897, a sermon be preached on the life and work of Mary Lyon, and that a collection be taken in behalf of Mt. Holyoke. It was further voted to send a minute of this action to the other New England associations. Feb. 28, being the centenary of Miss Lyon's birth, is obviously the most suitable time for the presentation of the subject. The Connecticut Valley Congregational Club has also voted to recommend to the churches the same project. Apart from the present pressing needs of the college the life and work of Mary Lyon deserve more than a passing consideration. In brain power, executive force and moral earnestness she is easily in the first rank of American women. A writer in the Contemporary Review takes the American woman to task for not distinguishing herself. We may ask what European woman of the modern era lived a nobler life and did a greater work than the founder of the institution at South Hadley? A more profitable and inspiring theme for the pulpit than the life and work of this remarkable woman can not easily be imagined.

For several weeks a remarkable heresy trial has been going on, which has been confined almost entirely to the religious press. That it has not been more eagerly seized on by secular newspapers is perhaps because it is an unofficial trial. The distinguished subject is Bishop J. H. Vincent of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The prosecutors are certain Presbyterian journals, with some others assisting. The defenders of the bishop are the papers of his own denomination. He was charged by a Southern Presbyterian minister with having said at a Chautauqua meeting that the divinity of Christ is not an essential article of Christian faith. He has been put on the witness stand, and has solemnly declared that he did not say it. But his defense has been rejected by his prosecutors, who now plainly intimate that he is guilty of tergiversation. Meanwhile, Bishop Vincent has fled from the country, and has taken refuge somewhere in South America till the attack shall have subsided. What he seems to have said, or meant to say, was that a man's ignorance of Christ, if he strives with all his heart to know God and obey him, need not leave him hopeless of obtaining divine favor. The bishop's chief fault seems to be, not that he is unorthodox, but that he is human. We hope he will be forgiven, that he will have courage to return to his native land and that next summer he will find Chautauqua more flourishing than ever.

It will not be possible to make good the late Professor Blaisdell's place in the religious and educational life of Wisconsin. What he was to a multitude of interests is referred to in one of our Western letters this week. At the same time it is a matter for general congratulation that his special work at Beloit is to be committed to such a competent person as Dr. G. A. Tawney, who has just been called to the department of psychology and ethics. He is a graduate of Princeton of highest scholarship, and held the fellowship in philosophy there for two years. He took his degree of Ph. D. in Leipsic and was then recalled to Princeton to be assistant in psychology. He has devoted the past six years to thorough and enthusiastic study of philosophy, psychology, ethics and logic. He is a contributor to German and American philosophical periodicals and is assisting in the preparation of the Dictionary of Philosophy to be published by Macmillan. While thoroughly versed in modern psychology, Dr. Tawney is a solid and conservative thinker and an earnest Christian worker. In all particulars he seems admirably fitted to sustain the noble reputation won by the department of philosophy in Beloit through Professor Blaisdell's thirty-seven years of distinguished service.

A SUCCESSFUL UNDERTAKING.

In accordance with the intention previously announced, we this week make the last cable remittance on the account of our Armenian Orphans' Fund. This last installment we have denominated a special Christmas offering, and it is gratifying that it amounts to $5,318 13. The aggregate of all the gifts received since the fund was started six weeks ago is $15,802.85. The individual subscriptions have ranged from two cents to $900. No fewer than twenty-five States are represented in the offering; Canada, too, has a share in it, and one of the most generous subscriptions came from across the Atlantic. We have chronicled over 1,300 separate gifts, and in many cases each gift represents a dozen and in some cases scores of individual participants, so that many thousands of persons have had a direct part in the movement. We notice also, in connection with gifts that have come from educational institutions, evidence that in the interests of this fund students have foregone the pleasure of exchanging gifts with themselves or with their teacher. The $10 contribution of a Chinese Sunday school class in Gloucester also deserves to be marked. One of the Chinamen made a speech in Chinese to his fellows describing the conditions in Armenia, and the immediate result was this good-sized offering. It is pleasant also to see the uniting in so many homes of all the members of the family in the undertaking. This indicates a delightful community of interests.

It is reassuring to note that this fund represents to a large extent special giving rather than the diversion of money from the ordinary forms of missionary work. Many have responded to our original suggestion that the element of self-sacrifice enter into the offering. Letters accompanying checks have frequently spoken of the inclosure as a special Thanksgiving or Christmas gift, or as a thank offering or as a self-denial gift. When a Sunday school decides to give the money set aside for candy for the Christmas festival, when the children of a family vote at the morning prayer to send to Armenia the value of their proposed Christmas presents, there is special value in the offering. Associated giving through organizations like Sunday schools and Endeavor Societies must signify also, in our judgment, a special degree of activity fruiting into larger than ordinary giving.

We speak of these facts because we are extremely desirous that the stream which passes through the regular channels of Christian and Congregational benevolence be in no way diminished by this extraordinary endeavor of ours to meet a particular emergency. If, consciously or unconsciously, any sharers in this fund have diminished their gifts to the regular claimants upon their liberality, we trust that such diminution will be speedily made good. The real purpose of the fund would be to a great extent defeated if the ordinary agencies of the American Board suffered any curtailment on account of it. They must be sustained at all events.

After this issue we shall pass over all moneys received to the American Board to be forwarded by mail, as is its wont in such cases. Hereafter only the aggregate of weekly gifts will be acknowledged in the columns of The Congregationalist, but we shall send personal receipts by mail for all moneys that come to hand. It will be a convenience to us if stamped and addressed envelopes hereafter accompany remittances. In this connection it should again be stated that every cent contributed to this fund has gone to the orphans for whom it was designed. Not a penny has been diverted for any incidental expenses. Even the cost of cabling has been met by a friend of the fund.

We take occasion again to thank our constituency for their splendid co-operation with us in this undertaking. When we first appealed to them we had every reason to believe that they would recognize the timeliness of the movement and the effectiveness of the method. Our confidence in them has been amply justified. To them belongs the credit for the remarkable success of the movement.

MR. MOODY IN BOSTON.

Various estimates are being made of the probable results of the two months' campaign which Mr. Moody is to begin at Tremont Temple with the opening year. None of them will be satisfactory which do not take into account the history of the man and his work. Few men in modern times have wielded so great power over hearts and consciences as he. Nor is his power, as shown by its results, less today than in the past. He may not directly move great masses of people as profoundly as he did in Great Britain twenty-two years ago and in this country a few years later. But through religious and philanthropic institutions in both countries, which owe their existence to him, his influence is more profoundly and extensively felt now than it was then.

Since 1877–8, when he led the great revival meetings in Boston, his two schools and his training school for women at Northfield and his Bible Institute in Chicago have sent out thousands of young men and women to spend their lives in Christian work. His summer conferences for Bible study at Northfield have gathered multitudes of college students and graduates to sit at the feet of many of the most devout and gifted teachers in England and America. These schools and conferences Mr. Moody has organized and maintained. His personality has pervaded them all as their leader. Through them he has quickened the spiritual life of the Christian world.

No man of this generation has so widely influenced English-speaking people in their religious life as Mr. Moody. For nearly twenty five years his fame has been international, yet he has stood beyond reproach in faith, humility and courage, as conscious of the presence of God. And because of this he has held and holds the confidence of men. He makes them feel that divine presence and measure their lives by the holiness of God. He moves them to confess themselves sinners. He shows them that forgiveness is offered to them through Christ. He kindles in them love for God, who loves them with an infinite love.

It is not necessary that we should agree with everything which Mr. Moody says in order to co operate to make his work effective. Nor is it necessary that we discuss our differences with him, if we have them. It is necessary that we should share his spirit, should feel, as he does, the presence, the perfect holiness of God; that we should believe in his mercy, repent of and renounce all sin and believe in his measureless love. These things are necessary to honorable Christian living at all times. Especially now, at the threshold of the opening year, and because of the rare opportunity to participate in a revival of religion which will bless Boston and the commonwealth, will every disciple of Christ put himself in the position to receive the power of the Holy Spirit and to make his influence felt to bring his friends and neighbors closer to God.

DECEMBER SUNSHINE.

The brief life of the sunshine with its slanting rays at noon reminds us all too certainly that it is December. The days are short. The nights are long. Early tasks must be carried on by candlelight and the proportion of mortals who see the sunrise is extraordinarily small. In December observant and inquiring children learn that the sun's rising in the east and setting in the west are not always to be taken literally. South windows are at a premium for invalids and flowering plants. The sunset is a matter of the afternoon and not the evening, and little children whose wise mothers send them early to bed have an unwonted chance to become acquainted with the stars.

That law of rarity which hightens value comes into play in behalf of this sunlight of early winter. It appears so late, it means so much, it goes so soon that even chronic grumblers condescend to find it precious, and add to their complaints of cold and storm another of the darkness. All depends, indeed, upon our disposition. If we are seekers of complaint the harsher side of winter will no doubt afford us an ample field for discovery, but if we are wise we shall open our hearts in expectation and enjoyment of the sun. If its light is rare, we ought to use it as the beleagured garrison uses its scant allowance of bread, and enjoy it as we would the beauty of a jewel which may be small but is unquestionably precious. These gifts of brief and wintry opportunity try us of what sort we are and reward us according to our disposition and our choice.

Too often the sunshine of December is merely an interlude between drifting clouds or recurrent waves of storm. A day, perhaps, dawns clear and brilliant after a visitation of cold and drenching rain or pinching frost. From the far south the first rays stream through a break in the hills to fall upon the summit of the western mountain. The shadow retreats downward. The light creeps after it. Every ledge stands out in bold relief. Every ravine is brimming over with golden light. The young oaks in the hollows with their clinging russet leaves make bars and islands of warmer color amid the cold purple of the leafless boughs. The broad river at the mountain's foot has that glint of blue which one sees sometimes in polished steel. The tops of the hemlocks on the nearer shore have caught the glow. It creeps slowly down the mountainside, by crag and ridge and hollow. It burns for a moment upon the window of a dwelling near the shore. We are impatient for the moment which shall change that broad level of cold, steel gray to gold—when, in an instant, without warning, the whole mountainside has grown dull and cold. The sun has risen into a cloud—the easternmost of that long array which holds possession of the sky. All the morning the clouds hang threateningly, though there are passing gleams of sunlight on the hills which sometimes come our way. The invalid looks out of the window and shakes her head. The passers-by are warmly wrapped against the chill of the raw air. Even the lover of nature is little tempted to venture forth when she is in such an unsympathetic mood.

By noon, perhaps, the clouds are scattered. There is more sun than shadow. The wind has died away, and the comfort of the sunlight makes it easy to forget the muddy ways and delightful to seek the woods and the riverside. The contrast of the sodden ground and the open tracery of the branches against the sky, the light flooding into the abodes of summer shadow, the manifested individuality of tree form and of the texture and color of bark, the grouping of families unrecognized when the foliage was dense overhead, give a delightful sense of novelty and opportunity. Already the leaves, which in summer almost seemed to make the whole of the wood like a thriving and self-complacent human generation, have been so driven into corners and trampled under foot by the first snows and the wintry rains that one hardly thinks of them, or recalls their life and death with a sigh of pity for the evanescence of beauty and delight.

The road winds to the shore where the fishermen's boats are drawn up on the grassy slope, but not yet housed for the winter. A rocky point, green and scarlet with the matted bearberry vines, juts out into the stream. Over the wide expanse of water a single gull is circling, now snowy white in the sunshine, now gray in the cloud shadows. From this lower level the sun goes down early behind the mountain, along whose crest the tree stems cut its disappearing disk like the ribs and shrouds of the deathship in the Ancient Mariner. He withdraws so early, indeed, that one looks up in surprise to think that he has forgotten to show us the beauty of his setting, and so far south is he that long after we are in the shadow his light follows the pass behind the mountain and lights up a northern peak from base to summit. One cloud mass begins to burn with crimson hues. Another and another repeat the glow. Where the sun went down is a liquid flame of fiery red. The river catches and reflects the splendor, and the whole circle of the mountains is suffused with purple light.

The culminating and transcendent glory of the December sunlight, however, comes after a windless night of snow. There was no sunset—there is no sunrise—only a world shut in, an atmosphere whose wonted transparency has disappeared in the swift fall of eager flakes. The sun struggles out at last, as if by a sudden effort pushing the clouds aside, and the dazzled eyes discover a world utterly transformed. It is as if behind night's curtain the stage of action had been fitted up for some new and brilliant play to take the place of the tragical comedy of human life. The evergreens that were so stiffly proud of their unvarying color have acquired new graces of purity and humility. Every twig and limb of the leafless trees is hospitable to a company of heavenly guests. Every shrub has been entertaining angels unawares. The unsightly places are become beautiful. The rough places are made smooth. And the soul of it all, the giver of beauty, the discoverer of the splendor of purity, calling forth the reflected glory of light from the facets of innumerable snow crystals, is the same brief and limited December sunshine. For a few hours, until the bustling wind awakes to meddle, it holds the admiration of the world with a splendor to which genial May or burning August or even sumptuous October can afford no parallel.

FRUITS OF THE SPIRIT.

There must be fruits of the Spirit in us if we are Christ's followers. Mere nominal discipleship counts for next to nothing, and this is all for which it ought to count. They must be actual, visible, characteristic. They also must be plainly fruits of the Spirit of God within us more than of anything else. Many of them often are seen in a measure, sometimes conspicuously, in those who are not Christians by profession or even in their own consciousness, although so far as such persons illustrate Christ's character they resemble him. Meekness, temperance and purity, for example, are Christlike in anybody.

It is when a grace or a virtue is cultivated avowedly for the Redeemer's sake and by the frankly sought and acknowledged aid of his Spirit that it deserves to be called a fruit of the Spirit. It is an outcome of definite personal dedication to the service of God. The ruling motive is not merely to exhibit a proper self-respect and self-control, or to secure and retain the approval of others, or even to attain to a high standard of moral excellence, worthy in themselves as such motives certainly are, but to prove one's self truly loyal to Jesus Christ and to illustrate his likeness.

It is noticeable to how large an extent the fruits of the Spirit are what often are called the passive virtues. Some people undervalue them and exalt in contrast the more aggressive forms of goodness. But it is a mistake to suppose that the cultivation of them does not call for sturdiness of soul and continuous, arduous endeavor. Nothing else puts more strain, to say the least, upon us than the effort to bring them forth with some approach to perfection in conduct. It may be duty to denounce an evil and to attack it, but to do either usually is easier than to bear it righteously. The aggressive course also leads oftener into temptation to hasty judgment, impulsive choice of method and blundering action.

As the year ends it is sobering to appreciate how much less of the best fruits of the Spirit our lives have borne than was possible. But—thank God!—we can take honest and grateful comfort in whatever improvement we are conscious of. We also can be certain that, so far as we have made any advances, we are the better prepared to overcome evil with good and for good in the year to come, and to take advantage successfully of the Spirit's ever ready aid.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The Independence of the Republic of Cuba.

Notwithstanding Secretary of State Olney departed from custom and appeared before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations last Friday and advised against any action by Congress at this time, that committee—Senators Gray and Turpie only being absent—unanimously passed the following joint resolutions, introduced and championed by Senator Cameron of Pennsylvania:

Resolved, That the independence of the republic of Cuba be and the same is hereby acknowledged by the United States of America.

Sec. 2, That the United States will use its friendly offices with the Government of Spain to bring to a close the war between Spain and Cuba.

Such resolutions, even if adopted by Congress and approved by the Executive, do not necessarily imply a declaration of war by us. Neither need they be so interpreted by Spain, nor will they be if the Spanish premier, Canovas del Castillo, can control Spanish action. But these resolutions are opposed by too many forces to make it probable that they will become operative. Conservative men in the Senate, like Hale of Maine, Hoar of Massachusetts, Platt of Connecticut and Gray of Delaware, stand ready to debate them and fight them by every device of parliamentary tactics. Speaker Reed of the House and the Foreign Relations Committee of that, in this case, more conservative body oppose them. The friends of the incoming Administration oppose them, because they have no desire to see Mr. McKinley and the Republican party burdened unnecessarily by grave problems of foreign affairs. The Executive Department is against them to a degree that immediately raises a new and grave problem of constitutional interpretation. Last, but not least, the people of the country are against them. When there really is "a republic of Cuba" to be recognized, or when Spain has made it clear that she spurns all our suggestions as a peacemaker, or when the Executive, possessed of information that it deems sufficient, calls upon Congress to act, then the people will stand behind any declaration, even if it be one of war; but even then they will demand a statement of facts warranting the action, and do it only after full debate in and out of Congress.

Conflict Between the Legislature and the Executive.

Neither President Cleveland nor Secretary of State Olney would presume to dispute that Congress is the war making power, so defined most plainly in the Constitution. But they do dispute the right of Congress to decide when foreign Powers shall be recognized or when recognition shall be withdrawn, and Secretary Olney, in his blunt declaration respecting the Cameron resolutions now before the Senate, has raised an issue that promises to provoke much discussion and some feeling. He says, and his statement has been indorsed by the President, that even if Congress should pass the resolutions over the President's veto he will ignore them if he deems it best, for "the power to recognize the so-called republic of Cuba as an independent state rests exclusively with the Executive. A resolution on the subject by the Senate or by the House, by both bodies or by one, whether concurrent or joint, is inoperative as legislation and is important only as advice voluntarily rendered to the Executive regarding the manner in which he shall exercise his constitutional functions."

For reasons stated in the preceding paragraph we do not think that the contest between the Executive and legislature, made possible by this declaration, will be fought out before the Supreme Court tribunal, nor will the talk of impeachment prove to be more than the vaporings of rampant partisans like Senators Call of Florida and Chandler of New Hampshire. Hitherto Executive and legislature have been so nearly in harmony on foreign affairs that the question of authority in this matter has not been raised. Precedent seems to support the Executive, at least technically. Ex-Senator Edmunds of Vermont and ex-Judge T. M. Cooley of Michigan, among others, admit this, and few men now have higher rank than they as interpreters of the Constitution. But it is not difficult to imagine how a stubborn or unsympathetic Executive asserting this on the whole necessary absolute authority might defy sometime unwarrantably the deliberate sentiment and will of the people.

The National Legislature.

The Senate, after but little opposition, has passed Senator Lodge's bill imposing an educational test on all immigrants, and excluding all persons over sixteen years of age who cannot read and write in some language. The bill now goes to a conference with a House committee, and before Congress adjourns we shall have a law modeled on similar lines, by which we shall take a new position on this question, and cease to be as generous and as careless as we hitherto have been. Confessions of intention made during the past week, by Republican and Democratic leaders, make it clear that the Dingley Revenue Bill introduced at the last session cannot pass at this, and everything points now to the formulation this winter of a tariff measure which will be brought before an extra session of the new Congress soon after Mr. McKinley's inauguration. Congressional action respecting Cuba has already been referred to.

Serfdom in the United States.

Bishop Potter of New York, in a recent sermon, asserted that "the condition of our American legislative bodies, great and small, today is one that may well fill any true lover of his country with apprehension." Why? "Because," he added, "independent action has largely perished." He challenged contradiction. Who has arisen to dispute with him?

But how can independent action, say, in the United States Senate, be expected when ancient and influential States like New York and Pennsylvania persist year after year in sending men to the Senate who are not selected because of any moral or intellectual superiority but solely because they are servile partisans. If the older and more conservative States do thus, what can be expected of the younger and more inchoate? New York's legislature apparently is about to return to the Senate a man who when in the Senate earned no other title to fame than that he was the echo of Roscoe Conkling. Pennsylvania, so long the pocket borough of the Cameron dynasty, but intent now upon bettering her representation, finds that Senator Quay stands in the way determined to name Senator Cameron's successor, the man who shall be his colleague —and echo.

And yet, let a man like Dr. Parkhurst, or a journal like the New York Evening Post, voice their preference for Mr. Joseph Choate in terms that imply that Mr. Platt is to be fought and not conciliated or supplicated, and the Republican journalists and party leaders, either by their silence or slurs, let it be seen how little independence they have.

We have long wondered how a State with as many Christian citizens as Pennsylvania could tolerate such misrepresentation in the United States Senate. We cannot explain the mystery now, but are glad to see the United Presbyterian of Pittsburg speaking out to its constituency in unmistakable terms:

> We refuse to be driven as cattle, to be held as serfs, to be domineered over by political managers, or to be regarded only as a part of the framework to hold together a political machine. Our great State is dishonored. It does not have the place in the national legislation which of right belongs to it. We have not sought out and kept in place statesmen whose wisdom would command the respect of all the country. And at home we have seen the most reckless legislation, and are made to feel the rapidly increasing burdens of taxation, and all because we have allowed the control of public affairs to pass into the hands of men who have neither the statesmanship nor the public spirit to give them the proper qualifications for their positions.

This deliverance, and the spirited opposition of the Philadelphia Business Men's League to Mr. Quay's further dominance, show that a ferment is at work, which in time may produce a sadly needed revolution.

The American Federation of Labor.

The annual meeting of this largest organization of wage-earners in this country, held in Cincinnati last week, was notable for its decision to co-operate heartily with all other organizations which favor one day's rest in seven; for its reindorsement, by a vote of 1,915 to 362, of the free coinage of silver at a sixteen to one theory; and for its deliberate, formal criticism of our judiciary, and recommendation that hereafter legislative decree—not judicial interpretation of the constitutionality of law—shall be final. To this pass have some recent decisions of Federal courts brought us, and yet how imperfectly do such men appreciate the American spirit if they really think that we, one of the most conservative peoples on earth, are going to put life and property at the disposal of legislators, most of whom are partisans, and few of whom are trained in discerning the equities of contentions that come before them. Ways of disciplining judges without abolishing the judiciary have been found in the past, and will be again.

Municipal Betterment.

The ratification by the stockholders of the West End Railroad of the compact with the city of Boston, to which we referred last week, settles satisfactorily and equitably Boston's most pressing local problem. The municipal elections on the 15th showed mixed results on the license question, Lynn changing to the license column, Boston voting license but by a smaller majority, and Cambridge giving the largest no license majority in its history. Lynn's election of a Populist as mayor is not as significant an event as some have made it out to be. Peculiar local conditions caused it. Cambridge elected a Negro as alderman.

New York's aldermen have been forced by the clamor of people and press to rescind their gift of a franchise to a fuel gas company, and if it is granted again it will be on terms far more just to the taxpayers. Governor Morton has appointed W. W. Olcott as district attorney in Colonel Fellows's place. He is a young, untried but well-meaning lawyer, who, if his purpose be right and keeps so, can aid greatly the work of reform. Too often in past days the department has been in collusion both with a corrupt police force and the criminal classes.

Minneapolis is on the verge of an earthquake. Already its city clerk has fled, two of its aldermen have been indicted, and bribery and corruption on every hand are coming to the light. For several months evidence of the most damaging character has been quietly gathered by agents employed by a few of the leading business men of the city. As might be expected, Rev. D. N. Beach is to the front, calling for courageous action, pertinacity in ferreting out and dealing with the guilty, and a civic uprising which will redeem the fair fame of the city and put an end to misrule.

Relief for Armenians.

Up to date, Armenian's only relief has come through the action of individuals charitably inclined. The Powers of Europe have not acted save as they may have intimated that massacre must cease. But no reforms in administration have been wrought and nothing has been done to warrant the Armenian merchant in re-stocking his warehouse or the Armenian farmer in sowing his grain. Our consul at Erzroom, writing Nov. 21 in a letter just made public by the State Department, puts the number of orphans at 50,000 and adds:

> German charitable or religious societies are preparing to establish industrial orphan asylums at Oorfa, Cæsarea and elsewhere, and the Kaiserswerth deaconesses of Germany have made provision for receiving Armenian orphans at Smyrna and thirty have been sent there from here. The British Government or its ambassador at Constantinople has initiated a movement leading toward settling a number of widows and their children on the island of Cyprus, more particularly, at present, at least, those within the province of Erzroom, which number in the cities of Erzroom, Erzingen and Baibourt 2,049 who are without means and are recipients of relief.

Here is official corroboration of the extent of the need, and gratifying news telling of interest in the work in Europe.

Relief funds for the Armenians gathered in Germany are coming in now, thanks chiefly to the labors of Dr. Lepsius, concerning whom the latest news is that he is making the round of the universities interesting students and professors in the charity which he has at heart. The Catholics of Venice are also collecting funds with the blessing and encouragement of Cardinal Sarto. Nor are some of the people of Russia wholly indifferent to the fate of the Armenians still living. Thus the St. Petersburg Viedomosti has recently published the following appeal:

> Peace and rest to the dead who have gone into the next world with wide-open, horror-staring eyes. They are, perhaps, the happiest of all the Turkish Armenians. But even is this to be permitted? Three thousand corpses in Constantinople alone, and in all the Ottoman Empire not less than 100,000 murders in one year! Verily, if the hellish sufferings endured on this earth are at an end for the dead, still there are those living of whom many probably prefer death to their present existence. Europe is now fully decided that all the subjects of Turkey shall have better days, and that if these evil doings occur again —even in the smallest degree—or, more correctly, do not cease (because every day means fresh tortures for the imprisoned and starving), the authors of these misdeeds should receive their deserts. From a united Europe there is no hiding.

The Situation in the Far Orient.

The veteran missionary in China, William Ashmore, writing to The Watchman, sums up the situation in China thus, referring to the new treaty between China and Russia: "Russia has gained extraordinary privileges and Chinese statesmen have made fools of themselves. . . . They have secured a right to run their railroad in two or three directions through Chinese territory; to have their men-of-war possess the freedom of a Chinese port of rendezvous, repairs and supplies; and to establish armed garrisons on Chinese territory to protect railway stations. . . . What now will England do? What can she do? . . . Things have gone too far. . . . From Roman Catholic (French) and Greek Church ascendancy we expect nothing, and not even fair treatment." Reports from the missionaries of the American Board supplement and indorse this statement, and it conforms to all we have read in our foreign exchanges. China has been overreached; her one progressive statesman, Li Hung Chang, has been humiliated and disgraced since his return, Europe and America's favor being the occasion if not the cause of his discipline by those who are jealous of him. Fortunately there are signs of rebellion among the people and a revolt against the present dynasty, and China's internal regeneration may come along this line.

Japan unquestionably has designs upon the Philippines and Hawaii, and the officials of the latter republic now in this country do not hesitate to admit that their errand is one that has for its purpose opening the eyes of responsible men here to the grave peril in which their home government is placed by the ever-increasing influx of Japanese and the rights guaranteed to them by treaty. We find in The Friend of Honolulu, the organ of the Christians of Hawaii, the following significant statement:

> It may be possible for a planter who thinks only of immediate dividends to desire the continued importation of Asiatic contract laborers. But every patriotic citizen of Hawaii who desires her destiny to be a noble one must crave annexation to the United States as speedily as may be, in order to bar out this influx of Asiatics and determine our future as a home of the white race.

NOTES.

The British Government is purchasing corn in this country to be shipped to India to relieve the sufferers from famine.

Herrmann, the necromancer and prestidigitator, who died last week, had rendered good service to society by his exposure of the trickery of spiritualistic "mediums," and his demonstration that what they attributed to "spirit" he could duplicate by sleight of hand.

Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle in his annual report reiterates his plea for a retirement of the greenbacks, and denies that new revenue legislation is necessary. "What is most needed," he says, "at present is not more taxes, but more economy in appropriations and expenditures."

An earthquake, the most violent ever experienced in Great Britain, caused great alarm and much damage last week. In the old days this might have been interpreted by the God-fearing and liberty-loving as an omen of God's displeasure at British supineness in dealing with Sultan Abdul Hamid.

Nearly 14,000,000 votes were cast in the recent national election, 1,813,124 more than in 1892. Of these Mr. McKinley had 7,109,480 and Mr. Bryan 6,508,681. The important fact concerning these figures, which no one can determine absolutely, is, how far was each candidate's vote the result of party discipline, and how far the result of intelligent assent to the principles for which he stood?

Henry L. Pierce, ex-mayor of Boston and ex-congressman, who died last week, was so independent and uncorruptible in his conduct, personal and official, that Wendell Phillips said of him that "if Diogenes were to come to Boston in search of an honest man he could find him in the mayor's chair." As a manufacturer he stood on this principle: "I am not indifferent to the making of money, but I care more for the making of a good article than I do for the pecuniary returns from it." He was a noble, generous, useful citizen and his name will ever be honored.

The Dawes Commission has induced the Choctaws to assent to the relinquishment of tribal government within eight years, the allotment of lands and transfer of criminal jurisdiction to Federal courts. This great triumph of Senator Dawes and his associates will have weight as a precedent when the commission comes to deal with the other tribes after the holidays. The House Committee on Indian Affairs has reported favorably on the bill to create a board of Indian commissioners, three in number, who shall draw generous salaries and hold office four years.

IN BRIEF.

The dainty and tasteful cover in which our Handbook for 1897 appears predisposes every one in its favor, and, judging by the commendations which are already reaching us, its contents are more satisfactory than ever. A prominent official in one of our benevolent societies, who travels widely, writes: "The service you are rendering by this annual publication is of immense value,—not only to us in our missionary work, but all over the field where I visit, and where I hear commendations of the warmest kind." A pastor tells of the usefulness of this little manual in acquainting those not bred in a Congregational atmosphere with the history and principles of our denomination.

Those who live most like God find it easiest to believe in the incarnation of his Son.

The Congregational Clubs are this week performing the annual feat of landing the Pilgrims. It is a pleasant task indeed—rather easier than it was in 1620.

In the various plans for aggressive work which the churches are invited to consider for the opening weeks of 1897 the foremost place may well be given to secret prayer.

For the benefit of several who seem to be in doubt, we would state that copies of the new missionary monthly, Congregational Work, may be obtained by addressing to care of the Bible House, New York.

In the little village in Scotland which Ian Maclaren has immortalized as Drumtochty, with a population of only 500 persons, there are four churches. The wastes of money through sectarian divisions are as great in Scotland as in America.

The good news comes by telegraph just as we are going to press that Colorado College needs only $21,000 in order to meet the conditions of the Pearsons bequest. A week from today marks the expiration of the time which has been set by Dr. Pearsons. May the next seven days witness a great inpouring of gifts.

The Book of the Pilgrimage lacks only one thing and that is the ability to utter its thanks for the many compliments that are being showered upon it, so we take upon ourselves the pleasant civility. We suspect that the book appreciates especially the kind words spoken by persons who are themselves book makers and book writers of high degree.

Many inquiries and letters which would otherwise have appeared in columns of Gleanings during the last few weeks have been crowded out by the pressure of other matter incident to this season. Some of them, we hope, may yet find place before interest in them has passed away. A like reason explains the omission of many items of news from the churches we have received.

In the Church of England there seems to be considerable excitement over Canon Freemantle and Archdeacon Wilson because of their advocacy of the doctrine of evolution. A recent largely attended meeting at St. James Hall, London, passed resolutions calling on the Lambeth Synod, which is to meet next year, to condemn such teaching. It will probably be easier for the synod to condemn the teaching than the teachers.

At the recent symposium of ministers in New York City on the daily press, the opinion was expressed that if merchants would refrain from advertising in Sunday papers one of the most weighty motives for printing them would be removed. We recently noted the fact that R. H. Stearns & Co., one of the most prominent dry goods houses in Boston, does not advertise in Sunday papers. To that firm we are glad to add the names of Chandler & Co. and Gilchrist & Co.

Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, in addressing the Merchants' Club of Boston last week, pointed out the deplorable waste of manhood and moral power in much of the present social structure, and he did not hesitate to say that the waste product of the fashionable club was quite as poisonous as the waste product of the North End lodging house. As the descendant of one of Boston's most famous merchants of the old school, he with great propriety asked his hearers to be vigilant lest they become mere business men and either ignorant of or indifferent to the claims of the Christian Church.

This same bishop, by the way, in The Church Standard, comes to the defense of the younger Episcopal clergy and the Episcopal divinity schools. He dissents absolutely from Bishop White of Indiana, who recently affirmed that most of the recently ordained clergymen "have an inordinate longing for the most attractive parish possible," or that "they are led by the higher criticism to doubt more of the Bible than they believe," and he concludes thus:

> From an intimate knowledge, during twelve years, of a body of young men preparing for, or just in, holy orders, I am glad to say that in preparation and efficiency I believe they are the peers, and in spiritual life and consecration the superiors, of any class of men in any calling.

The Connecticut General Association, by voting to arrange its tables of churches according to post offices instead of towns, has put a difficult task on the State registrar or on some one else, for those tables must be readjusted to conform to those of other States in order to be put into the Year-Book. To arrange the tables of many of the other States according to the new plan proposed for Connecticut would be impracticable. The association discussed the question of economy in church statistics. It might perhaps with advantage follow the plan of several States whose tables are printed from the forms of the Year-Book, thus saving the cost of composition.

Dr. Pentecost informs our London editor that he is considering seriously his call to Yonkers, N. Y. His attachment to his London congregation is strong, and the unanimous opposition of his session to his going makes the decision still more difficult. He may not announce it before the end of the year. Special interest is lent to this possible severance of ties between Marylebone Church and Dr. Pentecost, because of the part which Dr. John Watson had in consummating them. He acted as "pleader" for Dr. Pentecost three years ago when the presbytery was inclined to thwart the desire of the Marylebone people to have Dr. Pentecost for their pastor.

North Dakota Congregationalists are pluming themselves a little on what they consider their share in the sound money victory in that State. And their utterances on this point chime with the sentiments expressed in the article in last week's issue by Superintendent Herrick of Minnesota. Our North Dakota friends, by the way, are disposed naturally to take advantage of the confidence engendered in North Dakota among Eastern men of wealth. President Simmons of Fargo, for instance, writes us, enumerating certain specific wants of his college which he thinks ought to appeal to the Christian public in view of North Dakota's stand against the lottery and for temperance and sound money. On the other hand, President Penrose of Whitman argues that the defeat of the sound money cause in Washington shows the absolute importance of economic education for the West. There seems to be no aspect, either of defeat or victory, out of which a Western college president cannot construct an argument for the bestowment of gifts upon the institution dear to his heart. And why shouldn't he thus argue? And why, moreover, shouldn't people listen?

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

BOSTON LETTER.

Professor Wright's Lowell Institute Lectures.

Intellectual and appreciative, if not large, audiences are attending Prof. G. Frederick Wright's course of ten lectures on the Scientific Aspects of Christian Evidences. The earlier ones on Limits of Scientific Thought, The Paradoxes of Science, Darwinism and Design, etc., were necessarily more abstruse than the later lectures dealing with the evidences of the four gospels, although Dr. Wright claims that in treating of the human elements we are studying scientific aspects no less than when we are on more pronounced scientific ground. Mediate Miracles, such as the division of the Red Sea and the destruction of Sodom, was the subject of one of the most interesting lectures in the course, given three weeks ago. Last week's addresses on Internal Evidences of the Early Date of the Four Gospels and Newly Discovered External Evidences of Their Early Date were particularly helpful and enjoyable. Dr. Wright spoke in a pleasant, conversational tone, without manuscript—an unusual thing for a Lowell Institute lecturer—developing his subject simply and logically and driving home his points as well as enlivening his discourse by apt illustrations. His array of convincing scientific facts, his impartial treatment and reverent handling of his subject leave a strong impression on his hearers and make it evident that science and Christianity are not irreconcilable. The course ends this week with two lectures on The Science of Textual Criticism and Positive Results of Cumulative Evidence.

Southern Colleges and Their Advocates.

Boston is a good friend to Southern instiitions and the autumn and early winter have witnessed several noteworthy gatherings in the interest of schools that are already quite strongly intrenched in the affections of Northern givers. Berea had a field night in Trinity Church not long ago, and President Frost was fortunate enough to secure as one of the leading speakers Hon. Theodore Roosevelt who, as was to be expected, based his appeal on the broadest grounds. Booker T. Washington and his principal assistant at Tuskegee have also been in this vicinity and Trinity Church was again the rallying place for the friends of the institution who were made to understand by Drs. Gordon, Donald and others that its needs were never more pressing and its work never more encouraging. President Horace Bumstead of Atlanta was tendered a delightful reception the other afternoon by the Boston Atlanta University Association at the University Art Club rooms, and he has been heard, also, at the Twentieth Century Club and elsewhere. These earnest and consecrated laborers in behalf of the negro race represent in themselves a high degree of culture, tact and Christian consecration. They take the generous attitude toward one another and certainly there ought to be in New England a sufficient constituency for each and all. They appeal not only to Congregationalists but to Episcopalians and Unitarians. Their work is distinctively religious in its motive and purpose and we are glad that so much Congregational money has already been invested in plants that yield so large a dividend.

While referring to educational institutions mention may fitly be made of the recent annual meeting of the Alumni Association of Hartford Seminary. It draws its members from eastern New England, and its annual dinner is always an occasion of good cheer and of the renewal and deepening of interest in the alma mater. The gathering last week Monday was favored with the presence of Prof. A. R. Merriam, and it discussed pulpit preparation, intellectual and spiritual. The latter phase of the subject was treated in an admirable paper by Rev. Dr. A. C. Thompson, who was again re-elected president; and the tenor of the proceedings, as well as the entire spirit of the gathering, gave evidence of the strong hold which the seminary maintains upon its sons.

The Subway up to Date.

If the people who bitterly bewail the present wretched condition of our streets could make a tour through that portion of the subway which is approaching completion, their complaints would be turned into exclamations of surprise and delight. About 500 permits are granted daily to those who wish to inspect this marvelous piece of engineering. Among recent visitors have been delegations from various municipalities, one from distant Honolulu, for the fame of this undertaking has gone out to the ends of the earth. Only one other city in the world—Budapesth—has a true subway, all other underground modes of transit being in the form of tunnels. The one in Boston is far more extensive than the one in Budapesth, being several feet higher and wider and traversing a larger area. Entering the opening on the Public Garden and walking as far as Park Street Church, one is astonished at the spaciousness of this great subterranean passage. At the junction of Tremont and Boylston streets, where this loop joins the main line, there is a sub-subway, thus avoiding all danger from grade crossings. At regular intervals are immense ventilating chambers of solid masonry, in which huge fans will be kept in constant motion by electricity for the purpose of supplying fresh air. The side walls, which are a series of concave surfaces resembling corrugated iron, are faced with enameled brick of a beautiful cream color. The massive brick arches overhead and the strong iron girders give a sense of security sufficient to reassure the most timid soul. It is expected that cars will run along this loop line by next summer, and by the end of two years we shall have a system of underground transit in operation unparalleled elsewhere.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

The Volunteers.

Chicago has been favored with another visit from Mrs. Ballington Booth. No matter under what auspices she comes she is always welcome. Her earnestness and eloquence attract large numbers. Last Sunday she spoke three times. Her special plea was for prisoners—those still in confinement and those just released. No allusions have been made to the causes which led to a separation from the Salvation Army, and no efforts are made to interfere in any way with the work of the army. Mrs. Booth says that the Volunteers now have over 400 commissioned officers and more than 200 organized posts. This growth has been secured in eight months. The Salvation Army is also exhibiting increased energy. It, too, is looking after prisoners. It believes with Mr. Moody and Mrs. Booth that their spiritual condition is far from hopeless. Mrs. Booth says that she believes that fully eighty per cent. of those who in prison profess conversion become, when released, respectable members of society. No wonder she names the home provided for them Hope Hall.

Sunday Experiences.

First of all there were the usual number of fights and murders. Five persons were either shot dead or dangerously wounded. Not a day passes, to say nothing of a night, when some one is not held up or robbed. No wonder that there are calls for university settlements, mission Sunday schools and churches in neglected portions of the city. Yet the hold-ups and the murders do not take place, as a rule, in the poorer parts of the city. It would seem as if the arm of the law might be strong enough to prevent the reign of crime under which we are now living. No one seems inclined to blame the mayor for these crimes or to suggest any plan by which their number is to be diminished. Still, Monday morning's papers contain a great deal of food for thought.

A Great Event.

This was the opening to the public, Dec. 15, of the new home of the Chicago Historical Society. It stands at the corner of Dearborn Avenue and Ontario Street. It is Romanesque in architecture and imposing in its appearance. It is as nearly fire proof as a building can be. No wood has been employed either in its construction or its equipment. Its total cost has been $180,000. It is lighted with electricity, and is furnished with every convenience for the storing and use of books, pamphlets, newspapers and manuscripts. It has a museum, also, for relics, and on its walls are to be hung the portraits of the men who have made the history of the Northwest and of Chicago. Ornamented with smilax, palms and potted plants and filled with a brilliant company of men and women interested in the objects for which the society exists, the rooms of the newly dedicated edifice presented a scene on dedication evening which no one present can ever forget. The social hour was followed by literary exercises. First came the address by the president, Edward G. Mason, to whose untiring energy and foresight the splendid results we now witness are chiefly due, then a paper which dealt in reminiscences by Dr. N. S. Davis, one of three survivors of the founders of the society, then an address by Hon. George E. Adams, who spoke of the place the society should fill in the future.

But the address of the evening, both in matter and style, was that of the president. It was historical and descriptive in its character. Forty years ago last April twelve gentlemen met to form a society which should have for its object the collection and preservation of historical material relating to Chicago and the Northwest. The legal existence of the society is reckoned from Feb. 7, 1857. It then had nineteen corporate members. It began its work in a single room in the heart of the city. In November, 1868, in what was then thought to be a fireproof building costing more than $57,000, the society dedicated its home to historical research. There were at that time more than 100,000 books, pamphlets and manuscripts in the library, some of them—for example, the original of the Emancipation Proclamation, for which $3,000 had been paid by Hon. Thomas B. Bryan—of almost priceless value. This proclamation was intrusted to the society for safety. Materials pertaining to the history of the Northwest and Canada had been gathered which cannot be duplicated. In 1871 all these treasures were destroyed by fire. Undaunted by this loss the society began its work again, but the collection, with a few exceptions, was destroyed in the fire of 1874. It seemed impossible to do anything more but after a time the members of the society rallied. Such men as Hon. I. N. Arnold and Hon. Elihu Washburne identified themselves with it as its presidents. Men like Dr. D. K. Pearsons, W. G. Hibbard, and generous women like Mrs. C. J. McCormick and the Misses Skinner responded freely to appeals for money.

Many precious relics have been wrought into the new edifice. In the massive fireplace of the main hall there is stone from the old court house and the depot of the Illinois Central, which were destroyed by fire in 1871. The society is rich in portraits and in manuscripts. Its library, although not yet large, is rapidly growing and is very valuable. Its files of newspapers are valuable, also. The rooms will be open to the public on certain days of the week, but will be accessible to students at any time. It is hoped that in its beautiful hall many instructive lectures will be given, and that its literary treasures will be constantly consulted.

Chicago, Dec 19. FRANKLIN.

The Lost Christ; A Christmas Story.

By Rev. Hugh Pedley.

Once upon a time, and that time not very long ago, there lived in a large city in the Eastern States a man whom, for convenience sake, we shall call the Deacon. This particular Deacon was, as is not uncommon with the order, a righteous man; nay, more, he was even a good man. He had a certain orderliness of life, a clear-voiced and sometimes despotic conscience, and a tendency to look at matters from the intellectual rather than the emotional point of view. But a good deal of the asperity and angularity of his forefathers had disappeared. His religion was not any sounder but it was a little sweeter than theirs had been. He was more accustomed to begin his prayers with "Our Father, which art in heaven," than with those long polysyllables of adoration which had formerly been the common exordium of supplication. Without being sucked into the Unitarian movement, which had received such an impulse from the sweet spirit of Channing and the impetuous zeal of Theodore Parker, he had, nevertheless, been so far influenced by it that he was inclined to make much of the human side of Christ. There was no lack of reverence towards the Saviour, but the reverence was more that which goes out towards character than that which is exacted by authority. To him Christ was the life center, and all the tenderness of his strong nature went out to meet his Lord.

With this change in general religious tone came a certain relaxation in regard to the details of life. He was not disinclined to the beautiful in worship. He could see no sin in setting apart for the service of Christ a building of noble architecture and chaste ornamentation. That Christ was born in a stable was no reason why there should be no room for him now in palaces and temples.

He was a Sabbath keeper, but he sought, and not in vain, to make the Lord's Day a day of gladness in his home. He was even disposed to make a good deal of Christmas Day. He knew that his ancestors had been disposed to treat the observance of all such days as papistical and leading to error, but the birth of Christ into this world had come to mean so much to him that he could not endure that other birthdays should be commemorated and this birthday, the birthday of all time, passed over in silence. It is true that at first his conscience rather rebelled against the observance of a day which, perhaps after all, was not the actual anniversary of the advent, but concluded that it was better to keep Christmas on the wrong day than not keep it at all.

So it came to pass that Christmas was a right royal day in his home. Christmas Eve was a sort of high fever in the family. No wonder, then, that after the good Deacon had retired his sleep should have been disturbed by dreams, nor that being a man of orderly life his dream should be characterized by a certain continuity and consistency. Let us leave him lying there in his comfortable chamber, the crib of a little child not far from his own bedside, and just across the hall the bedroom, stocking hung, where the older children are sleeping, and follow that dream soul in its strange journeyings up and down the city.

He went out into the street, and as he looked about him there was that peculiar mingling of the familiar and the unfamiliar which we experience in our dream life. It was his own city, and yet it was not his own. It was his own street, and yet there was a strange something about it which he was unable to analyze. He saw faces that he had seen before, and yet there was a certain expression in them that he could not explain. He heard voices that he had been accustomed to hear, but there was a lack of something in the tone—a kind of hollowness—that affected him with an inexpressible sadness. Once or twice he was on the point of speaking to a friend, but was repelled in some unaccountable manner. At last he saw coming towards him a good Methodist brother, whose church was right across the way from his own, and with whom he had often walked a block or two after the service, comparing notes about the sermons of the respective dominies. He made up his mind to greet him, so as soon as his friend came within arm's length he held out his hand and said in his kindly fashion, "Well, and how do you do, brother?"

"Brother!" replied the other, sharply. "What do you mean? I'm not your brother."

The Deacon couldn't help smiling at this unexpected turn of humor in his friend, who was ordinarily rather a serious man, but the smile evoked no responsive smile on the angry face.

"What are you laughing at? If I were brother to such an ass as you are you may be sure I wouldn't own up to the fact."

The Deacon's smile vanished. He was not angry, but he felt puzzled.

"Why," he said, "you know what I mean. I mean brother in Christ."

"Brother in what?" was the astonished retort. "What are you talking about?"

"In Christ," said the Deacon, and added gravely, "Come, brother, it's all very well to jest, but it is about time to stop our fun when we come to that name."

"That name!" said his companion, "who ever heard of that name before?"

"What!" cried the Deacon. "Did you never hear of Christ?"

"Never."

"Well, I'm sure you have heard of John Wesley."

"John Wesley! Who's he?"

"Come now, you are a Methodist, are you not?"

"A Methodist! I never heard of such a creature before. If you want to know what I am I'm a Theosophist, and I'm just on my way to see a mighty Mahatma that came in yesterday from the Himalayas. So good-by, whoever you are. I must hurry on or I will be late."

To say that the Deacon was astonished is to say very little. Never did the sky that overarches the city of Boston look down upon a man more dazed and dumbfounded than he was. He had encountered a wonderful phenomenon—a Methodist that didn't know he was a Methodist, a Methodist that had never heard of John Wesley, and worst of all a Methodist who seemed absolutely and utterly ignorant of Christ. It occurred to him that his friend must have gone out of his mind, and he wondered whether he should not go to the proper authorities and see that he was taken in charge.

After walking some distance he found himself in front of a building that he knew very well. In it were the offices of the American Board of Missions, which he had often visited as the bearer of the contributions from the church and Sunday school. He thought he would go up and see an old friend, and by a talk with him dissipate the somewhat unpleasant feeling left by his recent encounter. Coming to the general entry, he was rather surprised to see, instead of the time-honored initials, A. B. C. F. M. (American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions), quite a different set of letters, viz, S. S. A. M. S.

"What!" he said to himself, "that's strange. It looks as if they had been amalgamating the Sunday School Society and the A. M. A. But I never heard anything about it. However, I'll go in and inquire."

In he went, therefore, and found himself at a sort of counter face to face with a man who was well dressed and exceedingly polite, but whose face made a most disagreeable impression on his mind.

"Good morning."

"Good morning," replied the Deacon. "I see you have been making important changes here."

"In what way?" inquired the clerk.

"Why, these used to be the rooms of the American Board."

"The what?"

"The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions—the A. B. C. F. M., you know."

"Honestly," said the clerk, "I haven't the slightest idea what you are talking about. It's the first time in my life that I ever heard of any such society. It must be something new."

"New!" cried the Deacon. "New! why it's more than eighty years old. It's the oldest society of the kind in America. It's a strange thing that you should be in the Sunday School and American Missionary Society."

"The what?" broke out the astonished official.

"Well," said the Deacon, "that's what the letters S. S. A. M. S. stand for, isn't it?"

"I should say not. But I'll tell you what they do stand for—Society for Supplying an Agreeable Method of Suicide."

The Deacon was astonished. He had read that in the palmy days of ancient Rome suicide had come to be looked upon as a kind of luxury by men who had grown weary of the world's pleasures; but to find this piece of paganism revived in Boston astounded him beyond measure. He stood for a moment speechless, then exclaimed, "Surely, such an institution cannot be tolerated in this Christian land."

"I don't know what you mean by a Christian land," said the clerk. "Never heard of that kind of a country, but I do know that this society exists and is doing a splendid business. They thought they had got the thing into pretty good shape in old Rome, but I guess we are a little ahead of them in America. Look! There are some of our circulars. Read that one," and with this he pushed over a very showy sheet for the Deacon's inspection.

The Deacon read it. It was a glowing account of the suicide of a fashionable young man who had been disappointed in a love affair, and, instead of vulgarly blowing his brains out, had put an end to himself in the most refined and æsthetic fashion. There was a dashing heading—"A Brilliant and Most Recherché Finale"—and then came the description of the way in which the society had, in this particular case, turned suicide into a fine art. The affair took place in a magnificent chamber, and was attended by a splendid company of ladies and gentlemen. There was music, dancing, refreshments and all the elements of a most brilliant social function. The interesting victim of the evening, having finished his last waltz, was conducted to an ivory couch, richly upholstered. Silence fell upon the assembly. A young damsel, richly dight, came from a side door bearing an amber goblet set with brilliants. Kneeling, she offered the potion. The young man took it and, as he raised it to his lips, there stole forth from an alcove at the opposite end of the room strains of the most delicious music. A look of pleasure was seen upon the young man's face, which grew in intensity, until his countenance was in a flame of ecstasy. In the very climax of delight he sank gently to a reclining position, and so breathed his last.

"There," said the clerk, "what do you think of that?"

The Deacon did not stop to answer. With a bewildered air he turned and made his way to the street. It was beginning to dawn upon him that all his life he had been living under a tremendous delusion, that he had been trusting in and loving a Being that the world knew nothing about, and that, perchance, had never existed. It was a horrible idea and shook him to the very center of his life. As he walked along he kept asking himself: "Can this indeed be a Christian city? Can this be a Christian world? Can it be that the name Christ stands for a figment of my own imagination, and not for a great fact in the history of humanity?" The very question was a terror to him, and he was in the hight of his torture when he noticed coming towards him a well-known professor from Harvard University. "Now," thought he, "there's an authority who will set my mind at rest." So, composing his features, and trying to appear as if nothing unusual were on his mind, he accosted the learned gentleman.

"Good morning," he said; "it looks as if we were to have fine weather for Christmas."

The professor seemed a little puzzled, but answered, with a smile: "It certainly does look as if we were going to have fine weather, but may I ask what you mean by that peculiar expression, 'for Christmas'? What's Christmas?"

The Deacon's heart sank. He groaned in spirit. His worst fears were apparently to be confirmed, and on so high an authority as Harvard University. But he was not going to give up yet. He would sift the matter through. So he resumed the conversation and replied to the professor, who stood with a puzzled look on his face: "Christmas! What's Christmas? Why, it is the anniversary of the birth of Christ, our Saviour."

The professor looked none the more enlightened, but was too much of a gentleman to smile at the evident distress of his interlocutor. He replied, therefore: "Who is this Christ, whose anniversary you have spoken of? I thought I was fairly familiar with the great names of the world, but this one must have escaped my notice."

"This," said the Deacon, "is A. D. 1895—Anno Domini, the year of our Lord 1895."

"Indeed!" replied the professor. "That will be news to the people of Boston. To us this is A. R. 119—Anno Reipublicæ, the year of the republic 119."

The Deacon was dumb for a moment. He drew a deep breath, however, and went on: "Did you ever hear of Jerusalem?"

"O, yes, I've been there. It's rather a dirty place, too."

"Did you ever hear of Pontius Pilate?"

"Yes. He is on the list of Roman procurators and comes in—let me see—in the reign of Tiberius, I think."

The Deacon's face brightened. Here was something like solid footing at last. "Then," he continued, "you must have heard how one Jesus of Nazareth was crucified during Pilate's term of office in Syria."

"No," was the reply. "There were a good many crucified in those days, and of course there may have been one of that name, but I do not at the present moment recollect the name. If you like, though, I will look the matter up when I go home."

"Never mind," said the Deacon, sadly. "A Jesus that had to be looked up in an old book would not be my Jesus."

"Your Jesus!" cried the astonished professor. "How could he be your Jesus any way if he was contemporaneous with Pontius Pilate?"

The Deacon saw nothing for it but to speak right out, and so, in tones full of emotion, he tried to explain to the professor who this Christ was, how he had lived, how he had died and risen from the dead, how he had come to men's hearts as the message of divine love and power, what he had been to himself and to his home, and he concluded, the tears standing in his eyes, "I thought of him as the Saviour of the world, and it seems as if it were all a mistake and a dream."

"Dream it must have been," said the professor, "but a beautiful dream. It seems to me that life ought to be a different matter to us all if this story of yours had only been a reality. Good morning."

They parted, and the Deacon resumed his journey. All hope was gone now and he felt as if he wanted to die, and yet he hoped against hope. Surely in the great city there was some one who had heard of Christ. He would walk on, and perchance, without his seeking, the name would be brought to his ears. As he was thus meditating he heard a confused noise in a house close by—a noise of struggling, scuffling, screaming and horrible bellowings. Thinking there must be some foul play, he pushed the door open and dashed into the room from which the sounds came. There his eyes fell upon a startling spectacle. Two men had just been exerting their utmost strength to bind a raving maniac, while in a corner of the room stood a woman with face bruised and bleeding, and a group of children whose looks indicated the extremity of terror.

"What's the matter?" cried the Deacon.

"The matter!" said one of the men, roughly. "This man is mad, and this is the fourth or fifth time within a year that he has all but murdered his family."

"Well," said the Deacon, "why in the world don't you put him in the asylum?"

"The what?" exclaimed the two men simultaneously.

"The asylum—the lunatic asylum. Every Christian country has lunatic asylums."

The men looked at each other. They looked at the Deacon suspiciously, then looked at each other significantly. At last one of them touched his head and said something about "another of the same sort."

"Good heavens!" thought the Deacon, "they evidently think I am out of my mind!" And with that he rushed back into the street. After walking a little distance he noticed the sign of a famous music store, and, remembering that he intended to make a friend a Christmas present of one of the great oratorios, he went in to make the purchase.

"Good afternoon," he said to the lady clerk.

"Good afternoon," was the reply. "What can I do for you, sir?"

"I would like to see some of the best editions of the Messiah."

"The Messiah!" said the young lady. Is that a new production?"

"O, no! no! The Messiah—Handel's Messiah—the great oratorio by the famous German composer."

"O!" exclaimed the fair clerk, "you are a foreigner, I see. You had better go over to ——'s store. They make a specialty of foreign works."

This was quite enough for the Deacon. In Boston to be thought a foreigner because he had asked for the Messiah! The music of the world and no "He was despised and rejected of men!" He began to see how much more than a personal calamity was the nonexistence of Christ. It was a disaster to song. It brought an awful beggary into the realm of music. It left every organ, every stringed instrument, every glorious human voice the poorer. It meant eternal silence to the world's most majestic strains.

Rousing himself from his reverie he found himself entering the poorer quarter of the city. He was passing a rather miserable dwelling when a sad-looking man, evidently attracted by a certain kindliness that never left the Deacon's face, caught him by the sleeve and said: "Would you mind coming in here for a moment?"

"What's the matter?"

"There's a young man here very sick."

This was quite enough. The Deacon went in, climbed a broken stairway and was ushered into a bare looking room where, on a wretched pallet, lay a young man in the first stages of a dangerous fever.

"Dear me!" said the Deacon, "this looks serious. Where are your friends?"

"In the Old Country," replied the sick lad

"And have you no money?"

"None. If this man hadn't divided up with me I don't know what I should have done."

"Well," said the Deacon, after a moment's thought, "the best way for me to do is to get a cab and send you to the hospital."

"And what's that, sir?" said the man at his side.

"Why, don't you know what a hospital is? It is an institution founded by benevolent people for the care of the sick. They are to be found in every Christian land."

The word "Christian" had scarcely passed the Deacon's lips when the situation flashed upon him. No Christ, no hospital.

"I see you don't understand me. Perhaps I am mistaken. Perhaps there is no Christ. Still, for his sake," said the Deacon, tremulously, "for the sake of what he was to me once take this and spend it in the best way for your friend." And he handed the man a twenty-dollar bill.

It was nearly dark as he came into the street and pursued his journey. Soon he found himself in the lowest part of the city. Ragged women, ruffianly men, neglected children swarmed on every side. Saloons were open in great numbers, and men and women crowded into them. There was a vile stench in the air—odors of bad liquor combined with odors of unwashed humanity. It did not seem quite so strange that there should be the absence of Christ here, but the thought that there was no Christ to come here filled the Deacon's heart with sorrow. There was a tumult of cursing in the air. The Deacon had always had an intense dislike of profanity, but now he found himself listening with breathless eagerness to the chorus of blasphemy that resounded in the street. Epithets the vilest smote upon his ears. But still he listened. Maledictions the most horrible flew past him. But still he listened. Men swore by gods and swore by devils. But still he listened. At last he gave a groan. "Then," said he, "there can be no Christ, for men don't even swear by him."

He turned wearily away from this hopeless Gehenna and walked on, striking into a street that led to the outskirts of the city. He was quite unconscious of the direction he was taking until he found himself at the great gate of the city cemetery. The sight revived the greatest sorrow of his life. He remembered how once, and only once, in the history of his own family, he had passed those gates as a mourner. His first child, the one who had opened the mysterious fountain of fatherly love in his breast, had died in her fourth year, and had been laid away in the greenest part of the great Necropolis. Many years had passed since that sad day, but all came up before him again. He remembered he had thought then that there was no sorrow like his sorrow, that it was not possible for a human heart to suffer more than he was suffering. Now, however, he felt that he had reached a lower depth. Then he had suffered as a Christian, now he suffered as one that had no Christ. He had cried then, but there had been a Christ to whom he could cry. There was no use crying now. His eyes were tearless, but his heart was breaking. By some means or another, he never thought to inquire how, the gate opened, and he followed the path until he came to the spot where his child lay buried. The night was dark. A great wind from the east came sighing up from the Atlantic and swept by with a dreary, moaning sound. Gigantic cloud masses were rolling and writhing upwards to the zenith, blotting out the stars one by one, and leaving only the white snow to give light.

The Deacon had just noticed that one solitary star was still visible overhead, when he found himself at the grave. The stone was a simple one. He disliked ostentation anywhere, but most of all at the place of burial. He remembered that he had had engraved on the marble the words, "Jesus said, Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." Here then, he thought, I shall find at least the name of the Saviour. He passed his hand over the face of the stone to feel the letters, when, to his dismay, he found that it was as smooth as if it had never been touched by a chisel. He was just putting his hand into his pocket to find a match, when suddenly, from the grave itself, there shot forth a blue phosphorescent flame that waved hither and thither, giving light enough to show that beneath the name of the child all was blank. The Deacon lifted up his eyes in despair, only to notice that the last star had disappeared and then threw himself upon the cold, white ground.

But strange! It was not cold. It was soft and warm. He opened his eyes. There was dim light around him. Something white came gliding towards where he lay. A child's timid voice whispered, "Papa!"

He was too astonished to make reply.

"Papa! Merry Christmas, papa!"

"Christmas!" he managed to stammer out. "Christmas! What's that?"

"O, you big silly papa. Don't you know what Christmas is? Why, it's the day that Christ was born."

At that moment there came a clash of golden and silver bells from the towers of Trinity Church across the way, and the deacon knew it had been all a dream. A little hand now touched his face and was suddenly drawn back.

"O, papa! you are crying. Are you sorry that Christmas has come?"

"No, my darling, but I am so glad that Christ was born."

And indeed he was glad. All through the day his face shone with the glow of a great joy. His wife and children noticed it; so did the servants; so did the people on the street as he went to church that morning, for of course he did go to church. Indeed, I think if there had been no service that day he would have borrowed the key and gone into the church to have a service by himself.

The service he attended was a union service in the Methodist church and it was worth a good deal to hear the Deacon sing: "Hark! the glad sound, the Saviour comes," to see the intense interest with which he listened to the sermon and the lively anxiety he showed lest by any possibility the collection plate should escape him when the offering was being made for the General Hospital. It may also be mentioned that on the way out he startled his serious Methodist friend by saying to him, in a playful manner, "You never heard of John Wesley, didn't you? You don't know you're a Methodist, don't you?" and then bursting forth with a vehemence not commonly vouchsafed to deacons; "But thank God, brother, you know who Christ is!"

ADDITIONAL ATTRACTIONS AT HARVARD CHURCH.

The Christmas season was ushered in at Harvard Church, Brookline, last Sunday, with special rejoicing, owing to the fact that the new organ which has been building for a number of weeks was formally dedicated in the presence of large congregations. It is a splendid instrument, possessing no less than 2,700 pipes and fitted with all the latest improvements and attachments. The builder, George S Hutchins of Boston, has made it an altogether suitable representative of the new era in organ construction. Its operation by electricity puts an end to the laborious mechanical effort which accompanies the use of an instrument not thus equipped, while the cable couplings permit the removal of the keyboards from one part of the church to another. The organist, Mr. McDougall, takes special pleasure in this feature of the instrument. Last Sunday, for instance, he sat on the floor of the church at the left of the pulpit at a sufficient distance from the choir to be able to hear them properly and to accompany them to the best advantage. The organist in most churches being so near the choir has the least advantageous location from which to judge their work. Mr. McDougall also anticipates much satisfaction in testing the almost infinite variety of combinations of sounds that the instrument affords, while its equipment with electricity makes it possible for him to secure instantaneous effects. The exterior of the organ is chaste and beautiful and its tone is rich, full and mellow. It is understood that its cost is about $10,000.

Another welcome and notable addition to the equipment of the church is the echo organ, placed in the east transept and tested also last Sunday for the first time. This is the gift of Joseph R. Winch, a member of the church, who, in preference to a memorial window to his wife, chose this form of commemorating her. It is specially appropriate in view of the fact that she was herself a fine musician. This echo organ is hardly one-half the size of the other instrument and is located seventy-five feet from it. Here, again, the subtle but powerful force of electricity is made to execute the organist's behests and thus he is as complete a master of one instrument as of the other, and makes one tributary to the other. The effect both in connection with preludes, interludes and postludes and the regular work of the choir is most impressive. This is the only echo organ in New England and throughout the country there are not more than half a dozen.

The programs last Sunday morning and evening were naturally rich in the musical element. The Christmas songs and anthems were rendered with much beauty by the quartet and the strains of the two instruments admirably supplemented each other. The playing of Handel's Pastoral Symphony was one of the most telling numbers in the morning services. In the evening Dr. Thomas, the pastor, preached on Religious Music, and in his own scholarly and virile way showed that the foundation for the praise of God, whether with the voice or on the instrument, is in genuine soul life. He made a strong plea for the highest grade of music, though he would not have the preaching side of the service relegated to a subordinate place. He felt that in New England there was a sad lack of participation by the congregation in the songs of the sanctuary.

In speaking of recent additions to the interior of Harvard Church mention should be made of a memorial window recently placed in position by Mrs. John Reece. It is in honor of her husband, who was a prominent member of Harvard Church. The spiritual activity of Harvard Church keeps pace with its material prosperity. The Brotherhood, an organization for men, holds an attractive and profitable meeting once a month, at which questions relating to the welfare of the nation and the kingdom of Christ are discussed. There is strong probability that an assistant pastor will be called within a few weeks. The church last Friday voted to adopt individual communion cups.

Yale receives $60,000, one of the many generous gifts to various objects from the late George Bliss. The bequest is to be disposed of at the discretion of the president.

Prof. W. G. Craig of McCormick Theological Seminary has been elected president of Center College, Kentucky, from which he graduated in 1851.

CHRISTMAS HYMN.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

Through the solemn midnight, ringing,
Falls the sweet, triumphant singing
Of the choir of God.
Hear the message they are bringing,
Hear the answering song upspringing
From the echoing sod.

Blessèd voice of God's own angels,
Echoing word of his evangels,
Hark! they fall again.
Balms for wounds and peace for anguish,
Rest for souls that toil and languish,
Peace, good will to men.

From the sad earth's stricken places
Lift the tear-worn, furrowed faces;
Christ the Lord is born.
Born to bear our cross and sadness;
Born to change our gloom to gladness;
Bring our night to morn.

His the giving and forgiving,
Bitter dying, anguished living,
Cross and pain and smart.
His the bearing and forbearing,
Ours the blessing and the sharing
Of his gracious heart.

Soft the music grows and tender,
Loving hearts what can ye render
To the Christ, your King?
Praising voices fail and falter,
What that's worthy of his altar
Can his children bring?

PEACE ON EARTH.

But not alone for those who still Within the motherland abide
We deck the porch, we dress the sill
And fling the portals open wide;

But unto all of British blood—
Whether they cling to Egbert's throne,
Or, far beyond the western flood,
Have reared a scepter of their own,

And, half-regretful, yearn to win
Their way back home and fondly claim
The rightful share of kith and kin
In Alfred's glory, Shakespeare's fame—

We pile the logs, we troll the stave,
We waft the tidings wide and far,
And speed the wish, on wind and wave,
To southern cross and northern star.

Yes, peace on earth, Atlantic strand!
Peace and good will, Pacific shore!
Across the waters stretch your hand
And be our brothers more and more!

Blood of our blood in every clime,
Race of our race by every sea,
To you we sing the Christmas rhyme,
For you we light the Christmas tree.

KEEPING CHRISTMAS TILL IT COMES AGAIN.

BY REV. EDWARD L. PELL.

This modern city custom of trying to squeeze all the sweets of Christmas inside of a single day is as unsatisfactory as the greedy boy's effort to swallow a whole orange at a gulp. One gets a good deal that is indigestible, while most of the juice spills through the fingers. In the country one knows better: you cut a tiny hole in your Christmas orange, put it to your lips, settle back in an easy-chair and quietly taste it away, if it takes all the winter.

I once spent a Christmas two months long. Indeed I am not sure that it was not a good deal longer, for it came in almost without observation, and I was never quite sure that it ever went entirely away. It was down in the county of Hyde—an almost ideal community hidden away in the swamps of the Carolina coast. Here for a hundred years and more a group of fine old families have sat under their own vine and fig tree and read and chatted and looked out upon one of the most beautiful lakes in the world until their faces have come to reflect its perpetual calm. Naturally in such an atmosphere the spirit of the Christmas-tide stole in upon us as leaves find their way into spring. There was preparation of a quiet, thoughtful kind, enough to encourage the genius of the season, but never enough to warm the blood of the most enthusiastic to a suspicion of fever, and when the day came it was like a handful of flowers dropped in the lap with a promise of more. There was no feverish rushing to and fro, as if tomorrow meant the knell of happiness. There was no skeleton at their feasts labeled "Christmas comes but once a year." There was no wild extravagance of any sort. They had their simple pleasures which they enjoyed without the fear that they would melt or slip from their grasp, and when bedtime came they quietly put them away till tomorrow. And when tomorrow came, because they had not been extravagant nor had surfeited or wearied themselves, and because they had sought to enjoy the spirit of the season rather than its ornaments, Christmas was with them still with as sweet a taste as it had yesterday.

All the cost and trouble of the two months' easy round of simple entertainments did not exceed what we townspeople usually spend upon the single day we keep for Christmas; and yet, though the merry-making was so thinly spread, there was hardly a day which did not yield the joys the world has learned to expect only when Santa Claus comes. Of course these good people had more time on their hands than we have on ours, but I cannot help thinking that it was not the abundance of time which made their Christmas, but the abundance of Christmas spirit which they cultivated and imbibed. In their quiet atmosphere they had learned to view things in their proper perspective and they had found that the secret of Christmas joy is not hidden in the fatted calf with which we make merry (though they did not deny themselves of the calf), but in the very atmosphere which heaven seems to prepare for the Christmas season. They had become acquainted with the genius of Christmas and opened their hearts wide to its influence. They enjoyed the loving companionship which is perhaps never sweeter than at the Christmas-tide. They found delight in being generous, in quiet efforts to make others happy, in stooping to lowly service. They drank deep of the spirit of good will which seems to pervade all things during the "most human of seasons." They found as much pleasure in the merry greeting as a boy finds in his first horn and drum. In a word, they welcomed Christmas not as an opportunity to be generous for a day, but as a teacher to show them how to be generous all the year—how to keep Christmas till it comes again. While our way of keeping Christmas is not without its compensations, there is no reason why we should spoil a large part of our pleasure in trying to make the most of the day simply because it comes but once a year.

HOW THEY KEPT CHRISTMAS ON THE GALATEA.

BY HELEN MARSHALL NORTH.

It was a cold, sunshiny morning, the day before Christmas, on the good ship Galatea, bound from Liverpool to New York, and two days overdue. Walking briskly up and down the deck, with the jolly purser to steady her steps, little Barbara Conway, going alone to New York under the captain's care, was trying hard to be happy and gay and to keep the tears out of her eyes because there would be no Christmas tree for her and no presents.

"If we had not sailed into the storm we would have reached New York by today, wouldn't we?" she asked the jolly purser for the third time in a half-hour.

"And you would have had a merry Christmas, no doubt, with all your friends and a big basket full of presents," said the purser. "But mayhap you will make a jolly day out of it here at sea," he added.

"A merry Christmas on board a ship when there isn't a bit of green or a tree or a father or brothers to make presents," and Barbara gave a great sob in spite of herself for she remembered that last Christmas there had been a dear mother, too.

Just then they stopped near the line that divided the second cabin deck from the first. The purser looked at the little girl gravely as she stood in the golden sunshine that was not more golden than her pretty curls, and thought she was very snug and well cared for in her warm sealskin ulster, then he lifted the rope for her to pass under and they continued their walk forward to the deck where the steerage passengers, men, women and children, some of them scantily clad, were trying to keep warm in the sunshine. They were nearly all neat-looking Germans, and the broad-faced boys and girls looked happy and rosy, despite the rough passage and their poor quarters.

"Do you know what I am thinking, miss," said the jolly purser. "If I were a nice little girl about your size, I would make a merry Christmas for these youngsters, who are far happier now than they will be when we get to a strange land."

"Make a Christmas here," cried Barbara; "why, what would I make it with?"

But before the purser could answer he was called away, or, at least, he seemed to think he was called away, and left Barbara standing in the midst of the little German strangers. She was rather frightened at first, but the boys and girls nodded and smiled and said something to her in their own language, which she could not understand, but it sounded nice and friendly. And one little girl showed her a poor doll baby, nothing but a rag-baby, but to her a great treasure. They laughed and talked, each in her own language, and Barbara felt quite comforted when she turned to go to her own part of the deck.

Barbara was not a selfish child, though every one made a great pet of her at home. The tiny sealskin purse in her pocket was well filled with spending money, but here was an occasion where money was of no use for buying things. All through the soup and fish and dessert, at the lunch table, Barbara was thinking and thinking about the poor children, and when the children, Lulu and Fanny and Johnnie and Tom, came running up to her and said, "Come and play shuffleboard with us," she said, just as merrily, "Come and help me get

Of course they all laughed at the idea, which seemed so absurd to them at first, but they listened eagerly while Barbara unfolded her plans, and were delighted to help her, even though they were so bitterly disappointed about not getting home to Christmas delights themselves. All that day and the next they were very busy. Long consultations were held in every sunny nook and corner of the deck and in the saloon. They consulted with the captain and the purser and the ship's cook and the stewardess, and some of the mothers, and, though they worked hard with heads and fingers, no one complained of weariness.

It was quite astonishing how bright and happy every one seemed when Christmas morning dawned, and how every one, even those who had scolded most because the ship was delayed, wanted to help the children in their plans. The stewards were constantly coming to say that Mr. or Mrs. Somebody or the second mate or the cabin boy would be glad to do one thing or another to make the evening a success. From the cook's galley issued fragrant odors of boiling sugar. Since no confectioner was to be found just around the corner, the cook had offered to make Everton toffy and some other goodies, and several ladies were going to make a supply of other candies.

Away down in the hold, at the bottom of her biggest trunk, Barbara had a wonderful box of lovely perfumed tissue papers from Paris, a great store of rose pink, buttercup yellow, rich cardinal and dainty leaf greens, and an old Frenchwoman had taught her to make beautiful paper flowers. Barbara took several minutes to think about it even after the trunk had been brought up from the hold. She tried to convince herself that the children out in the dull, dismal steerage would not appreciate the beauty and delicacy of these wonderful French papers, but into her mind floated the words of a hymn that her mother used to sing:

> I gave my life for thee.
> What hast thou given for me?

and she jumped up from the floor with a bright face, gathered all her treasures in her arms and carried them to the large stateroom where Lulu's mother lived and where the children liked to gather.

Great excitement prevailed in the steerage Christmas morning when a notice, written in two or three languages, was put up announcing that Santa Claus invited all the fathers and mothers and children to the big cabin, at three bells, to celebrate Christmas Day, and the mothers worked all day long to put their families in the best possible condition for a merrymaking. In the first cabin there was great hurrying about and whispering and planning. No one said, "What a pity that we haven't this or that!" instead, all worked with a will on what they did have. Each passenger had been asked to contribute at least one gift for the steerage children, and to leave the gifts in Lulu's mother's stateroom. The children were gay with excitement when they saw the great piles of packages that came in, enough to fill one berth and run over into another and another. Even the frosty old judge, whom they had hardly dared to ask, brought a splendid pocket-knife with five blades, and three cunning little boxes with a silver American dollar in each. The handsome Italian opera singer found a warm muffler and a box of bon-bons, and the pale invalid gentleman, who had hardly spoken all the way over, contributed some curious Japanese whistles. Nearly every one brought something pretty or useful.

At length three bells rang out cheerily a long and pretty chime that the boatswain had contrived to practice, and before the last stroke had sounded every one was hastening to the big cabin, from which the captain had caused every unscrewable thing to be removed. Some one was playing a merry march on the piano, and as the steerage children came in, their faces shining with pleasure and hard scrubbings, each was welcomed with a "Merry Christmas," and led to a seat, not alone, but with some more favored child to keep him company. Then a select choir, which a professional musician had volunteered to train as his part of the evening's amusement, sang a beautiful Christmas carol. Next, the captain made a little speech of welcome, and while he was talking there came a furious rapping and jingling at the door, and the sound of whistles blowing and of some one calling, first in German then in English, "Let me in. Let me in, I say." Barbara and Lulu and all the children rushed together to the door, and as they opened it in bounced the biggest, broadest, jolliest Santa Claus—a red-cheeked, big fellow dressed in all the pretty, soft, white wool things that could be had, and a tall white cap, on which the Italian opera-singer's long white plumes were waving. On his back was a heavily loaded pack from which suspicious looking parcels were peeping, and from a pack under his chin pretty lace bags made in hearts and rounds and boots and ships showed full of candies.

The jolly fellow danced all round the room, jingling the tin things that answered for bells, singing scraps of Christmas songs and tossing his candy right and left until every one was supplied. The dear little stranger children were so delighted that they could do nothing but shout and clap their hands. One rosy Gretchen laughed until the tears rolled down her fat cheeks. When the candies had been distributed, Barbara and Lulu and Meena and Gretchen went around passing baskets of pink and red roses, paper to be sure, but sweet and pretty for all that, and each tiny nosegay was wired to a sharp wooden toothpick. When all the company stuck the flowers in their coats and dresses, they presented quite a gay and festive appearance.

Then came the presents, for the strangers only. If you had understood German and French you might have translated all the exclamations, but any one could guess their meaning. One little girl fairly cried with joy over the lovely French doll, bought for an American child but given instead to the young traveler who had never known the pleasure of such a beautiful possession and would never forget it, either. It was the same little girl who had shown her rag-baby to Barbara. The judge's handsome pocket-knife went to a lad of sixteen who was likely to tear his pocket out looking at it. The jolly broad Santa Claus went everywhere and played games with the children when his pack was emptied, and let them climb on his shoulders and told stories in German and French and English. And when it was all over and the cabin was deserted, Barbara told the captain that it was the very best Christmas that she had ever spent.

Closet and Altar

Begin each day by tarrying before God and letting him touch you. Take time to meet God.

From end to end, alway,
The same Lord, I am with you. Down the night,
My visible steps make all the mystery bright.
Lo! it is Christmas Day!

—Holy-Tides.

Let us now go with the shepherds to the manger of Christ, that is, his church, and as he lay in that manger in swaddling clothes, so in the sacred Scriptures we shall find our Saviour. Let us also with a lively recollection of the words of this mystery, like Mary, the blessed mother of our Lord, keep pondering them continually in our hearts. Let us with glad voices join in the angels' song, for if they rejoiced so greatly on our account how much more ought we to rejoice to whom this Child is born, to whom this Son is given.—Gerhard.

O blessed day, which giv'st the eternal lie
To self, and sense and all the brute within,
O come to us amid this war of life,
To hall and hovel, come; to all who toil
In senate, shop or study; and to those Ill-warned and sorely tempted—
Come to them, blest and blessing, Christmas Day!
Tell them once more the tale of Bethlehem,
The kneeling shepherds and the babe divine,
And keep them men indeed, fair Christmas Day!

—Kingsley.

It is good for us to think as richly and deeply of Christ as we can. It is good for us to analyze in patient meditation all that he is to us and all that we can be toward him. But O, let us beware lest any subtlety of thought or depth of meditation ever deadens or dulls in us that first, great, deep longing of the soul for him who is its only Saviour. In deepest grief, in uttermost perplexity, often in great and overwhelming joy, always in conscious sin, that yearning desire asserts itself. It is as instinctive as the movement of the hurt child to its mother or of the parched beast to the river. . . . While others call the wondrous Lord by partial names that utter some one side of his wondrousness, to us he has but one name—Saviour. He is that and that alone, and all besides only as it is wrapped up in that.—Phillips Brooks.

Almighty God, teach us the meaning of love, for we know it not, though we speak it often. When we say we love God may our heart go with our word. We bless thee for a gospel of love. We rejoice that when the heavens were opened and thy voice was heard it was a voice of love, and our highest rapture is to remember that Jesus Christ came to show the love of God which passeth understanding. We bless thee that in God our Father, made known to us by the Saviour of the world, we have all we need for time and for eternity. Blessings be upon him who delivered us from our low estate. We will say of our Redeemer that he is mighty to save. The Lord have us in his holy keeping. Build us on the rock of truth. Light us with the lamp of love. Comfort us with the consolations of the gospel. Stir us with an immortal hope of being forever with the Lord, whose birthday we are now holding in remembrance. Amen.

The Conversation Corner.

IT is only three weeks since the Corner had a letter from Dr. Grenfell about our crippled Cornerer in Labrador, but I have now one from Pomiuk himself, and I am sure that in the midst of your Christmas rejoicings you will be glad to get good news from the poor boy whose life your contributions have helped to make happy. It is in fact the Christianity of Christ, whose birthday we keep, that has sought out this suffering, dying, heathen boy on that wild coast, saved his life and made him, even in weakness and pain, a patient, joyous Christian.

Aukshenai Martin: I'm glad to get letter. Nakumeek angiuallumeek. [Thank you very much indeed.] Me like more letter. I'm glad bicycle pictures. You want my picture. You got my picture here. I want some more Martin picture. You ask him aukshenai his ladies, Mr. Smith, Mr. Vincent. I'm glad tomorrow I'm going Battle Harbor, I suppose. Sister too. Dis man here, sick man, George. [A lad with double pneumonia, now getting better.] George sing "shelf behind the door." I'm sing Takpanêle. By and by me learn crutches. I'm glad [he means happy] all the time. I'm in bath in morning all the time. Nice, warm. You got a bath? Me want you come to Battle Harbor. You come see me [and] Sister, please. Me make little komatik [dog-sledge] for you next year, I suppose. Yesterday Sunday. A fine sing yesterday. [He came to service and lay on the top of a chest of drawers.] Sir Donald anchor outside. I'm see it inside de window. I can't go out now, too cold. I'm very laughing. Good-by, Mr. Martin. Sister put me to bed now. Me Gabriel, Pomiuk, Grenfell, please. Dat's all. [A fit of laughter.]

POMIUK

The signature is Pomiuk's own autograph, but the letter was dictated to Dr. Grenfell, who added the explanations in brackets and the following cheering note:

Dear Mr. Martin: Here is Pomiuk's answer to you. He is better, I am thankful to say, and as happy as a cricket. You will, I expect, have to grow young enough to pay a visit to Battle Harbor next year and see Pomiuk there! I shall leave him all winter there with Sister Williams.

W. T. G.

I see by the maps that Battle Harbor is on an island a few miles north of Belle Isle, at the eastern extremity of the Straits of Belle Isle, in about Lat. 52° 15′. On your atlas you can locate it near St. Louis's Bay or Cape Charles. There we can imagine our boy Gabriel to be all the long winter, singing his favorite "Takpanêle"—

Up in heaven, up in heaven,
There will be no sorrow there—

although I hope we shall get another word from the missionary before the winter storms (of November) oblige him to leave the coast. The above letter from Indian Harbor Hospital was dated Oct. 18.

We may increase our holiday joy, too, by thinking that two Armenian orphans are to have a home all winter on account of the contributions already received at this writing—two weeks before Christmas. Twenty dollars have thus been added to the fund, but I presume other gifts from the children will still continue to come in. Two letters from Taunton, Mass., Providence, R. I., and Wethersfield, Ct., are unsigned, and although anonymous contributions of this kind are never put in the wastebasket, it is better that names be given so that receipts can be returned. One gentleman writes:

The inclosed is sent as the result of interest awakened in our six-year-old boy from the reading of the "Conversation Corner"—a regular practice on Sunday afternoons. His dime, included herewith, represents a larger part of his total possessions than most of us give at the call of any need, however worthy!

Here are two letters which give a hint of the same thing—the happiness of making others happy.

DEDHAM, MASS.

I live close by the Dedham jail. The young people of our Christian Endeavor go to the jail once a month on Sunday afternoon to sing Gospel Songs. The prisoners remain in their cells and the songs are sung in the large entrance hall, where all can hear. The men enjoy the music very much. The first time the songs were sung the prisoners clapped their hands, but the sheriff told them not to do it again. On Thanksgiving Day a good dinner of turkey and plum pudding is given them.

MASON S.

BARTON, VT.

Dear Mr. Martin: My school commences tomorrow. I have had two weeks' vacation. I went to Junior Christian Endeavor this afternoon. We sent a Thanksgiving dinner to some poor people and they enjoyed it and I am sure we did.

A lady in Oregon speaks of Mr. Coffin's juvenile books, and both she and a Connecticut boy refer to the Hampton Beach wreck.

FOREST GROVE, ORE.

I have just finished reading, with my children, The Boys of '76—a wonderful incentive to patriotism, is it not, as well as a most fascinating story? It seems as though every American boy ought to read it. The picture of the wreck in the Corner reminds us of a disaster on the Washington coast, a few miles north of the Columbia bar. While there in September we walked up the Long Beach to see the Glenmorag, a fine, large, four-masted Scottish vessel which went ashore one afternoon in a dense fog. Before they had any warning of being out of their course they found themselves in the breakers and were soon grounded in the sandy beach. There she stood, uninjured, perfectly upright, her hulk ten feet deep in the sand, and at low water one could walk all about her. Her anchors were put out to save her being considered a wreck.

THOMPSON, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am eight years old today and would like to join the Corner. I read the Conversation Corner every week. In July I went to Beach Cottage, Hampton Beach. What cottage did you go to? [The "Day."] I saw the wreck. Did they sell candy and ice cream when you were there? [They offered it for sale.] Did you ever go berrying up the road opposite the fish-houses? [Sarah Noah says we did not.] Did you know my grandfather? [Yes, both of them.]

HERBERT C.

A Merry Christmas now to all the Cornerers—including Gabriel, the children in Japan and Turkey and Australia, and even D. F.!

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Childrens' Names. I half promised last week to print some time the names of children of the Pilgrims. The following list is not from the Plymouth records, but one which I penciled down a few weeks ago when a gentleman was giving me some of the names of his "Highlander" scholars in one of the Southern States. How funny it would sound to hear him call them up in their classes, one after another—Noah, Jacob, David, Ezekiel, Jessie, Daniel Malachi, Odas, Martin Bird! The parents must have been interested in the lives of great men, past and present, for they named their children Alexander, Caius, Homer, Virgil, Byron, Napoleon, George Washington, Robert Lee, Cleveland. In one family were these names: Joseph, Isaac, Elisha, Cyrus, Luther, John Wesley and Polly Ann. Polly Ann was a girl, but Jessie was not. Here was my friend's girls' class: Doshy, Luler, Leler (perhaps they were twins), Jimmy, Willie, Odor (perhaps she was sister to Odas), Parthenia, Larkanelia, Saraleria Zuila and R V. The names of places from which the scholars come are taken from Scripture also, as Joppa, Mt. Pisgah, Mt. Hebron, Mt. Zion, Boaz, Ruth, Lot. Some of the people belonged to a sect called "Saints," and they settled in a place called Hog's Jaw—a name I do not remember to have seen in the concordance or classical dictionary! (Curiously enough, a few minutes after writing this, I received a message from my friend as to a new pupil: "Columbus has just discovered us and gone into the class with that other eminent navigator, Noah.")

Picturesque Place Names. A Boston paper had, a few days ago, an interesting article with that title, which gave many names, right here in our own Massachusetts, almost equal in picturesqueness to the residence of the Southern saints above noted. Here are some of them: Jinglejerry Hill and Shillyshally Brook in the Middlesex Fells; Bad Luck Swamp in Rehoboth, Bad Luck Mountain in Granville, Bad Luck Pond in Douglas; Burncoat Brook in Leicester, Sought For Pond in Westford, Wrangling Brook in Groton. Most of these seem to indicate troublous adventures on the part of travelers or settlers, but here are others which give hints of happier experiences: Baiting Brook in Framingham, Bean Porridge Hill in Westminster, Cheese-Cake Brook in Newton, Bread and Cheese Brook in Bristol County and Clam Pudding Pond in Plymouth County. Probably some of our readers residing in those places may know the traditions connected with the singular names.

What the Children Say. A little girl of two and a half had been told several times that it was not polite to do so and so. Afterwards, when the lamp was lighted, she thoughtfully asked, "Is that a po lite, grandma?"

The Christmas Angels: A Study in Sacred Art

By Estelle M. Hurll

As royal personages announce their visits to any of their provinces by sending forward heralds of the glad tidings, so the Prince of Peace prepared his advent into our world by advance messengers from the Father's throne. Those most deeply concerned with his coming were the first to hear the word, Mary and Joseph, she who was to mother his human babyhood and he who was to guard and protect the growing youth. As the day of his coming was at hand, the message was extended to the people at large, and those who were chosen for the revelation represented both ends of the great scale of human life. The shepherds of Judæa stood for the poor and ignorant, the seers of the East represented the profoundest scientific and philosophic learning of their time. Thus none were left out by the royal summons.

The revelation was made in all cases, except in the vision of the star, by the appearance of angels, and thus our meaning will be clear when we designate the whole glorious company as the Christmas angels.

And still their heavenly music floats
O'er all the weary world.

The vision of their glory still dazzles our imagination, and art is ever striving to seize and fix for us some faint suggestion of their beauty.

THE ANNUNCIATION—Andrea del Sarto

To Mary, the highly favored, the blessed among women, the royal annunciation came by the mouth of an angel of high rank, Gabriel, who stands in the presence of God. Their mysterious interview has been a favorite subject in art from an early period in the Christian era down to our own times. It is counted among the wall paintings of the Catacombs, on the sculptured sarcophagi of early Christians, in mosaics, in miniatures, in the frescoes and altarpieces of convents and churches of the Renaissance and in easel pictures of the nineteenth century. The earliest example I can mention is in the cemetery of St. Priscilla at Rome, and the latest a lovely easel picture hung in the Boston Art Club Exhibition of January, 1896, by Miss Mary L. Macomber; and the two pictures are not so dissimilar as might be imagined. The motif remains substantially the same through the centuries, the two figures being invariably opposite each other, the Virgin usually at the right and the angel entering at the left.* Nevertheless, in spite of this fixed basis for the composition, there is room for abundant variety in accessories—the furnishings of the room, the occupation of the Virgin, the gesture and attitude of the angel, the details of drapery and the symbols introduced. All these matters are so interesting that the study never becomes monotonous, and beyond that the subject itself is so dramatic that we can never tire of its interpretation. Untold ages of divine love lie behind the angel's message, untold ages of human joy reach beyond the Virgin's answer; the destiny of the human races hinges upon this moment of history. We therefore turn with intense interest to each new picture of the scene to gain the artist's conception of its real significance.

THE ANNUNCIATION—Fra Angelico

In going back to early art we cannot of course look for much "expression" in the period of crude technique. It is interesting to notice, however, the curious details of those compositions which are based upon the Protevangelion of St. James. This document relates that the angel's voice was first heard by Mary when she was out drawing water, and that the vision became palpable when, on returning to the house, she had taken up her spinning. Accordingly, the first artists who treated the annunciation showed the Virgin at the spring or occupied with her spinning.

The only example I have seen of the former subject is on a carved ivory book cover dating back to the sixth century. The spinning scenes are more common, or at any rate have happened to come oftener to my notice. One is carved on a sarcophagus at Ravenna, another is wrought in mosaic in S. Maria Maggiore at Rome, and still another is a miniature in the Evangelarium of Bruchsal in the library at Carlsruhe. The distaff and pitcher are in later art replaced by the book in the hands of the Virgin, on the supposition of St. Bernard in the Perfect Legend that she was reading the Scriptures when the angel "came in unto her." Sometimes she kneels with her book open upon the prie dieu, sometimes she sits with it resting on her lap, or stands holding it closed in her left hand. The attributes of the angel do not spring, I think, from any legend or authoritative writer but grew up spontaneously out of natural symbolism. He carries a wand or scepter as the attribute of a herald, a scroll as an ambassador's message, a branch of olive as a token of peace, or a lily stalk as a tribute to the Virgin's purity. His hair is bound by a jeweled tiara, a simple fillet, a wreath of olive, a garland of flowers, or is ornamented by a tiny, tongue-like flame. The tiara belongs to early art, both German and Italian, the olive wreath to the Sienese, and the flowers and flame to the Florentines. Filippo Lippi has three times painted the Annunciation and always his figure of Gabriel wears a charming garland of flowers on his fair ringlets. The flame-touched brow belongs to the two monk painters, Lorenzo Monaco and Fra Angelico.

The fillet is seen in the lovely Annunciation by Bartolommeo, in the Villa Ferati di San Marco. Many pictures show the angel's hair unbound and unadorned. In a few rare instances the angel has no wings, this conception being adopted by Rossetti in his famous Ecce Ancilla Domini.

In general treatment the German annunciation is far more elaborate than the Italian. The background is usually a richly furnished bedroom, with fine Gothic windows and tiled floor. The draperies of both figures are voluminous and heavy. The Italian annunciation is more often seen in an open court, and the treatment of draperies is much simpler.

The best German art is intensely earnest. The angel delivers his message with solemn

*I recall four exceptions to this rule where the position of the figures is reversed: by Filippo Lippi, in the Doria, Rome; by Rubens, in the Belvedere, Vienna; by Baroccio, in the Vatican Gallery; by John of Bologna, on the door of the Pisa Cathedral. Can any reader refer me to others?

dignity and the Virgin receives it with devout seriousness. To the lighter Italian temperament the joy of the message overshadows its solemnity. Each phase may be exaggerated beyond proper limits, making the occasion as grave as a funeral or as gay as a child's holiday.

The most famous paintings of the annunciation are so widely known through many reproductions that it seems a vain repetition to speak of them here in detail. For our illustrations we choose two which, though from the same school of art, the Florentine, represent two widely contrasting types. Andrea del Sarto wished to make a fine and elaborate composition; Fra Angelico reduced the subject to the simplest possible scale. He has even discarded the usual symbols, the dove, the book and the lily.

Andrea del Sarto gives the scene the beautiful setting of an Italian landscape, enriched by fine architecture, while Fra Angelico places it in his own quiet, beloved cloister of San Marco. The Virgin of Andrea del Sarto stands in the majestic pose of an antique statue, wearing her strong young beauty with the dignity of mature womanhood. She is a princess receiving a royal messenger, while the Virgin of Angelico is a delicate, shrinking maiden, who hears the fearsome tidings with timid humility. The contrast is equally marked in the two types of angels. With Andrea del Sarto Gabriel is a creature of flesh and blood, of robust, virile beauty. With Fra Angelico he has a delicate loveliness which belongs to another sphere than ours. The one is the idealization of a fine model; the other is the embodiment of a celestial vision. The one shows the cultivated taste of a man of the world; the other is the work of a visionary monk. Had we only these Christmas angels to judge the artists by, we could readily understand how the one was called "senza errori," the faultless painter, and the other Fra Angelico, the angelic brother.

The Virgin Mary having heard and accepted the royal message, the angel of the Lord now appears to Joseph, her espoused husband, in a dream, explaining the divine character of the Virgin's experience, revealing the sacred mission of the coming Child and committing the mother to his guardianship. We scarcely realize, I think, the importance of this annunciation and its bearing upon the life of our Lord. It was, in fact, a necessary complement of the annunciation to the Virgin, in order that the good man in whose keeping the holy Child was to be placed should have the same assurance of his true origin and mission as did the mother. By this angelic revelation a close understanding and sympathy were established between husband and wife, without which the Child could not have been "subject to them" through his boyhood. Art has, however, failed to note either the importance of the event or the essential picturesqueness of the scene. This is doubtless because Joseph's second angelic visitation, when warned to take flight into Egypt, has completely overshadowed the first with its larger pictorial possibilities.

Thus it nearly always happens that when we see mention of a picture called Joseph's Dream the subject proves to be the second dream, where Joseph, Mary and the Babe are discovered asleep, and the angel speaks to the husband pointing to mother and Child. I think we may fairly make an exception of the pictures by Raphael Mengs of this title. Several times he has treated the theme and always he gives us the two figures only—Joseph seated at his carpenter's bench and the angel beside him. This we may interpret as referring to Matt. 1: 20, where the angel says, "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife." We are impressed by the strong, honest face of Joseph, seamed with lines of toil. He is enjoying the deep sleep of the laborer, his muscles relaxed, his body completely at rest. Into his dreams comes the reassuring voice of the angel who stands behind him, a figure of radiant beauty.

In Tissot's Illustrated Life of Christ, just now issuing from a great publishing house in France, we have a very remarkable interpretation of Joseph's dream from the standpoint of a student of Jewish traditions and customs. Joseph is lying on a rug in Oriental fashion, and is just starting up, his hands raised in surprise, as the vision appears to him. This vision takes form from the descriptions which would be most familiar to the reader of the Hebrew Scriptures. Six overlapping wings, pink tipped, form the chief substance of the angel's body, as in the vision of Ezekiel. A face gleams from the center of the whirl of yellow light which veils the whole figure. In dim outline one sees two tiny hands pointing up. That all this is in a dream we may know from the fact that Joseph does not look up at the angel, but takes rather the attitude of one listening.

There is a very quaint and unique picture in the Berlin Gallery which forms a sequel to the dream of Joseph. It is by an unknown German master of the fourteenth century, and is entitled Joseph Recognizing in Mary the Mother of the Saviour. As I have never seen the picture I quote directly from the catalogue description, translating the German literally: "Under a Gothic canopy-like wood structure, from the gable of which hangs a lamp, sit Joseph and Mary on a bench, at the left Joseph, a staff in his hand. He begs Mary's pardon for his distrust, now that an angel who appeared to him in a dream has shown him that the Child which Mary is to bear is the Saviour and springs from the Holy Ghost. On each side is a musical angel."

THE APPEARANCE OF THE ANGEL TO THE SHEPHERDS—Castiglione

The months go by, and at length comes the holy Christmas night when the Bethlehem manger receives the Prince of Peace.

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord

And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

This beautiful incident we conceive as occurring simultaneously with the nativity, and Christian art has always connected the two scenes in a single picture. Usually, however, the Annunciation is made subordinate to the Nativity. In the earlier art, little being known of perspective, the scene is literally at the side of the manger. Sometimes a single shepherd receives the message, as in the Greek Menologium of the Vatican; sometimes there are two, as in the nativities of Duccio and Giotto; sometimes three, as in The Great Latin Psalter of the Boulogne Library. When art became more advanced "the field" was relegated to the distant background, and to give it sufficient prominence it is a hillside rather than a plain. An Italian example is Luini's Nativity in the Louvre, and a German, the Nativity by Peter Cristus in Berlin. The Annunciation to the Shepherds is also combined frequently and in the same way with the Adoration of the Shepherds, as in Palma's in the Louvre, Aspertini's in Berlin and Signorelli's in the National Gallery.

In all these pictures the "multitude of the heavenly host," whose song followed close upon the annunciation of the herald angel, appear above the roof of the stable, transferred thither from the field by poetic license. Three figures only did duty for the "multitude" in the early days, the number having a mystic significance. In later times, when the artists' powers were greater, the number expanded into a genuine "host." The association of three musical angels with the Christ-child was, however, an idea which art did not relinquish. In pictures of the enthroned Madonna, so common in the schools of northern Italy, we find the lovely conception perpetuated in a new form. The angels, once above the manger, are now at the foot of the Christ-child's throne singing the praises of the infant King. From such a picture we take the Christmas angels of our cover picture. They belong to the splendid altarpiece by Girolamo dai Libri in the Church of San Giorgio Maggiore at Verona. Mrs. Jameson, in speaking of chorister angels, calls attention to the difference between those which are merely decorative and those which truly express the spirit of music. These of Girolamo dai Libri certainly belong to the latter class. They are singing because they love their song: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

The Annunciation to the Shepherds is treated independently when introduced into the life of Christ as one of a series of compositions. We find it among the subjects in early miniatures, a notable example being the codex of Egbert, Archbishop of Treves, made by Keraldus and Heribertus, two illuminators of Reichenau in the tenth century. Much nearer home are three very interesting examples in the collection of Mr. Thomas F. Richardson, now on exhibition at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. They are in service books dating back to the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and are fine specimens of illumination.

In Gaddi's series of frescoes in the Baroncelli Chapel of Santa Croce, Florence, one panel is devoted to this scene and is here reproduced as an illustration. There is a quaint charm about it which completely captivates the fancy. The angel is of that early type which so naïvely imitates the bird form, the draperies sweeping back in just the curve of a bird's breast, the small wings spread for flight. He bears a scepter, a symbol whose use we have already noted in the hand of the angel of the Virgin's annunciation. Coming on a pale yellow cloud, he beckons to the shepherds just awakening in the gray mist of dawn, and they raise their faces to him earnestly.

Outside series of the life of Christ the Annunciation to the Shepherds as an independent subject is rare and belongs distinctly to artists specially fond of pastoral scenes, of cattle and peasant life. There were first the Da Ponte family, who flourished in Bassano, Italy, in the sixteenth century and were the real originators of the genre style. I have counted six pictures attributed to various painters of this name in the galleries of Europe. They are fine landscapes, with well-rendered figures of cattle and men, but the shepherds do not take much interest in the angelic message, nor can we blame them for their indifference to so uninteresting a vision.

THE ANNUNCIATION TO THE SHEPHERDS—Gaddi

THE ANNUNCIATION TO THE MAGI—Gaddi

In the seventeenth century the genre style reached its highest perfection in the Dutch school, hence we naturally find many among them who attempted the appearance of the angel to the shepherds. The list of those who treated the subject, including Dutch, Flemish and German masters, contains the names of Rembrandt and his pupil, Govert Flinck, Berchem, Dietrich, Wouverman and Van Haensbergen. In other countries in the same century it was painted by Poussin, a French landscape painter, and Castiglione, an Italian cattle painter. The picture of the latter, in the Brunswick Gallery, is reproduced as our illustration. The motif is entirely unique. The angel has "come upon them" in the midst of their herds—no far-away vision in the sky, but a tangible reality standing beside them. With eager, boyish grace he unrolls the scroll while they cluster about him, listening to his message.

There is nothing to be seen of the angelic host. One would indeed imagine the entire scene an everyday affair. In northern art, on the other hand, although equally commonplace in point of type, there is a more definite recognition of the supernatural in the event. A sense of mystery is given by setting the scene in the darkness of night, and in the vivid contrasts of light and shade we get the effect of the Christmas hymn:

> It came upon the midnight clear,
> That glorious song of old,
> From angels bending near the earth
> To touch their harps of gold.

At just what time the next divine annunciation took place we have no clear knowledge. Some time after the birth of Christ three strangers appeared in Jerusalem saying they had seen his star in the east. We may well believe that their journey from a distant land had occupied a long period and conclude that their vision may fairly be included in the cycle of Christmas subjects. To explain how the star announced the birth of a child was a problem which art solved with naïve and poetic simplicity. It was no common star surely and to make this truth patent some of the early painters show within its rays the outlines of a baby figure. This is the way in which Gaddi treated the subject in the series to which allusion has already been made. It is interesting to place his Annunciation to the Magi beside the Annunciation to the Shepherds and note that the same spirit of simple piety animates the two. Long before Gaddi's time the tradition had taken root that the wise men were kings, and art had accordingly represented them richly appareled and wearing or carrying royal crowns. Thus Roger van der Weyden painted them in the famous triptych of the Berlin Gallery, showing them trailing their embroidered robes on the ground, and doffing their crowns before the Christ-child star. But the simple Gaddi would have none of this. He tries to show us character rather than fine clothes, and to him the Magi were first of all humble men of God. They represent three ages of life—old age, manhood and youth. The old man has the fine head of a genuine sage. The youth is ill-drawn and resembles the shepherd in the other picture, but the real earnestness of the whole conception precludes any caviling at imperfect technique.

There is still another art explanation of the Magi's vision: the guiding star has sometimes been identified as an angel guide. In the Greek Menologium of the Vatican, previously mentioned, is a very remarkable Adoration of the Magi, showing the three men led to the mother and child by a tall, graceful angel. From the tenth century to the nineteenth is a far cry, we are told, in matters of art, but one of the greatest artists of our time has seen fit to adopt this old and long forgotten conception. Sir Edward Burne-Jones in his beautiful water color painting of the Adoration of the Magi (Manchester Art School) shows a lovely Christmas angel floating above the ground just in advance of the three kings who approach the holy child.

As a companion picture to this he has given us the great work representing Angels Leading a Shepherd and a King. The original painting is in the church at Torquay, Eng., and is reproduced here as one of our illustrations. As it was a pre-Raphaelite conception to give the Magi an angel guide, so also was it a pre-Raphaelite method to bring both Magi and shepherds into the same composition. When the shepherds adore the Christ-child, the Magi are seen approaching with their train along a winding road (Ghirlandaio's Adoration of Shepherds in the Florence Academy). In scenes of the Adoration of the Magi, the distant hillside shows the annunciation to the shepherds as a correlated event (Ghirlandaio's Adoration of Magi in Foundling Hospital, Florence). Again all meet at the manger, the shepherds on one side and the kings on the other (Botticelli's Nativity in the National Gallery). This last motif Rossetti has adopted in a more generalized form in his picture of The Infant Christ Adored by a Shepherd and a King (Llandaff Cathedral).

Burne Jones, like Rossetti, has doubtless drawn his inspiration from pre-Raphaelite art, but in the particular picture before us he has struck an entirely new note. He has seized upon the moment hitherto disregarded in art when shepherd and king are on their way to the manger, both drawn hither by the same divine leading, by the hand of the Christmas angels. The artist's angels are as distinct a type as those of Fra Angelico. There is a mystic sweetness in their faces which suggests the older painter. But with this is united a graver mien as of those intent upon a sacred mission.

Each lays a finger solemnly on the lips. Is it to hush us to silence that we may hear the Gloria in Excelsis or does the gesture mean, as it means when made by the Christ-child, that they bring God's word? These questions we cannot answer, so we are left free to choose any meaning we like from the many sided suggestiveness of the symbol. But the meaning of the entire picture is so clear that he who runs may read. The wise and the foolish, the rich and the poor are all led to the Christ-child by the same Spirit. Whatever the difference in their environment and training, their paths finally converge, as with true humbleness of heart they draw near to the Bethlehem manger. This is the keynote of all sacred art; this is the song of the Christmas angels; this is the consummation towards which we press:

Till the whole world sends back the song
Which now the angels sing.

SOCIAL SETTLEMENTS IN CHICAGO.

Ten of these are now reported. Two of them have become prominent—the Hull House and the Chicago Commons. At the latter arrangements have been made through which, for a nominal sum, instruction in art, music, modern languages, mathematics, mechanical drawing, elocution and business methods can be obtained. Nor are the demands of domestic science, industrial training and the common branches of primary and grammar schools overlooked. The managers report seventy-five weekly appointments, attended by over one thousand persons, with visits from about two hundred persons who belong to the so-called fortunate classes. The cost of carrying on this work, in addition to what comes from the inmates of the home and from money received as tuition, is about $3,500 a year.

The Hull House has become the center of a complex system of improvements. It is in the heart of the West Side, is surrounded by a population which is cosmopolitan in its character, and for which, through the influence of the managers of the settlement, many sanitary and other advantages have been obtained from the city officials. For two years Miss Addams held the position of garbage inspector for her ward. It is needless to say that under her care the streets were cleaner than they had ever been. Miss Johnson, a woman who has had a university education and to whom the Civil Service examination presented no terrors, has succeeded Miss Addams in this office. She is also a resident of Hull House, and as a deputy for Miss Addams has become familiar with the duties of her position. As a social center, and a center whence suggestions go forth for improvement in the appearance of our public buildings, for the securing of playgrounds for children, for the beautifying of the homes of the poor, and for the enactment of laws which shall prevent the employment of children of tender age in our factories and put an end to sweat shops, Hull House has done great good during the seven years of its existence. From other settlements similar influences have gone forth, although no one of these settlements has had the means at its disposal which the two just mentioned have had. It is well known that the work in these settlements is carried on without any open reference to Christianity as its motive force. The question is often asked, If those who are to be reached would be kept away were the Christian character of the settlement made more prominent? FRANKLIN.

A reaction from excessive Christmas giving appears this year in the tendency to substitute a letter for the conventional present. And what gladness may be diffused in this simple way! Individuals who have a large and delightful correspondence often fail to realize that the world is full of people to whom the coming of a letter is really an event. A special message, received on Christmas Day, filled not only with the perfume of personal affection, but with some allusion to what the day commemorates, has a power which a merely perfunctory offering, however costly, lacks to refresh the spirit and brighten the outlook into the future. If no missive of this sort to the lonely, the disheartened, the sorrowful went forth from your pen this week try to atone for the thoughtlessness or neglect before the morning of the New Year dawns.

LESSON FOR JAN. 3. Acts 1: 1-26.

CHRIST'S ASCENSION.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The book of the Acts is the record of the history of the first thirty-three years of the Christian Church. The teacher needs first to read the entire book and prepare for himself such an outline of its chief events as will show the early unfolding of the principles which underlie the church. Such an outline may not be exactly the same as that indicated by the International Lessons, but will probably be in harmony with them.

The writer of the Acts first points back to the gospel in which he had recorded "all that Jesus began both to do and to teach, until the day in which he was received up." Then he shows that he writes this book to tell what Jesus continued to do and to teach, through his apostles, for thirty-three years after he was received up. This first lesson summarizes what he did and taught during the time between his resurrection and ascension. It emphasizes these four things:

I. The kingdom of God [v. 3]. That was the main theme of his teaching during the forty days in which he repeatedly showed himself to the apostles. Luke wrote his gospel to show that Christ's kingdom was meant to include all mankind. Jesus had claimed to be the rightful king of Jerusalem. Read Luke 19, 20. The Jewish rulers rejected his claim. But Luke showed that Jesus was the rightful king of the whole world. Read, for example, Luke 13: 18-30. He takes up the subject again in the Acts, beginning with Jerusalem as the point of departure from which the new kingdom is to spread through the earth. What did Christ teach his disciples during those forty days concerning the kingdom of God?

1. He gave them satisfying proofs of his resurrection. He "showed himself alive," not merely by letting them see his body with the prints of the nails and the spear thrust, but by revealing his mind and heart as he had done in the years of companionship before his death. He had taught them about his kingdom till its object had become their absorbing ambition. He had sent out the twelve in a circuit in Galilee, and later the seventy, to proclaim, "The kingdom of God is at hand." Now he was sending them on the same errand through the whole world. In this they had evidence stronger than the testimony of witnesses that the same Jesus was with them again.

2. He commanded them to wait in Jerusalem for the signal to begin their work. The new kingdom was to unfold from the old. The promises to the fathers were to be continued as promises to them. They are ours also. The spiritual life, which is the abiding impulse of the Christian Church, was to come first to men in the city where the glory of the old kingdom had been most clearly seen, where God had made known in his temple his presence, his justice and mercy.

3. He told them not to try to make known about his kingdom what had not been revealed to them. They did not know much about the time when particular events connected with its coming would take place. He had told them, and now he repeated the assurance, that his own knowledge on that subject was limited [Mark 13: 32]. They would know more than they then knew as time went on. But they would better learn about the kingdom by advancing in knowledge of his spirit and aims than by speculating about the date of its consummation. No doubt he would say the same thing to us today.

4. He taught them that their chief work in extending his kingdom was to be bearing witness to himself. They knew him. They loved him. He had lived with them and would continue to be their teacher. He was about to withdraw his bodily presence, but instead of that he was coming to abide in them by his spirit, the Holy Spirit of God.

II. The promise of the Father [v. 4]. He reminded them that he had already spoken of it [John 15: 26; 16: 7]. The life of the church has been from the beginning, and still is, the Holy Spirit. If he were taken away the record of Christ's life and teaching would bring us no hope. The Holy Spirit was not a new gift after Christ's ascension. He had been the life of the Jewish Church. Christ was begotten by the Holy Spirit [Luke 1: 35], baptized by him [Luke 3: 22], sustained in temptation by him [Luke 4: 1] and received power through him [Luke 4: 14, 18]. Yet the presence of the Spirit up to the time of Christ's ascension had been only preparatory to that full outpouring and that indwelling in all believers and in the church as the body of Christ which began at Pentecost and which is now the power of the church. Peter in his first sermon declared that the prophets had foretold the gift [Acts 2: 17], that Jesus had fulfilled the promise [Acts 2: 33], and that every one who repented of sin and was baptized into the name of Jesus Christ should receive the gift. That promise is to us also [Acts 2: 38-40].

III. The ascending Christ [v. 9]. With this promise of the Holy Spirit on his lips he was received up out of the sight of his disciples. Luke is the only writer who gives any account of the ascension. But all the apostles bear witness to the fact. When they proclaimed his resurrection from the dead and were asked, "Where is he now?" their one answer was that the heavens had received him. They spoke of him as "seated on the right hand of God." They exhorted his disciples to fix their affections on things above where Christ was. They taught that in the general resurrection of believers he would descend from heaven, when they should be, as he had been, "caught up in the clouds."

But this ascension of Christ was not a journey to some distant sphere. It was simply his passing from human view into the unseen where he now is. "A cloud received him." He was not far away. He was at hand, Peter said, to bestow the Holy Spirit. The new light and love in which the church was born was evidence of his presence. "Being by the right hand of God exalted, he hath poured forth this."

IV. The promised return of Christ [v. 11]. As his ascension was a withdrawal from sight, but not a journey to a distant realm, so his coming again was not to be from some far-off world, but simply an unveiling of what is now hid from our view. The men in white apparel who gave the promise were not seen coming from a distance. "Behold, two men stood by them." They said that, as Jesus had disappeared into heaven, he should "so come in like manner." They did not say he would be seen coming by the same people, nor that he would come to the same place, nor appear in the same body. "As the lightning cometh from the east," Christ said, "and is seen even unto the west, so shall be the coming of the Son of Man."

The disciples at first believed and preached that Christ's coming again would be soon and would be visible, just as some now anticipate his return in our own day. They believed that he would come to complete the establishment of his kingdom on earth. But Second Adventists expect him soon, because they believe the work of perfecting his kingdom is nearly completed. Perhaps none of us who look for him have sufficiently realized that his second coming is not to be a journey from a distant heaven, but an attainment of spiritual vision to behold him as he is.

The book of the Acts begins with themes of great present significance—the kingdom of God; the gift of the Holy Spirit; the ascension of the Redeemer to the right hand of God, where he ever liveth to make intercession for us; his expected coming to reign over all. We have spoken of these things as related to the new-born church just starting on its career of conquest over the world. But we teach and study under the inspiration of the kingdom of God as now advancing; of the nearness of the unseen world into which Christ withdrew; of the indwelling Holy Spirit promised of old by the prophets, shed forth by the Son of God, whose work already done and being done is the warrant of the time drawing swiftly nearer when, because we have become like him, "we shall see him even as he is."

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Jan. 3–9. What Prayer Should Do for the Christian. 1 Kings 8: 22-40.

What should it not do? We are asking today what can electricity do for the world. Already it has been harnessed and set at work, but those who are concerned with its practical adjustment to life feel that they are constantly on the edge of still greater discoveries. This subtle, mighty force has always been in the world, but only within comparatively recent years have its resources been apprehended and made available. It is much the same with prayer. The church has never fully tested the might of this spiritual force. It has not presented all its claims at the bank of heaven. It has many times relied on worldly methods instead of the divine aid. Think how full the Bible is of expressions indicating the willingness of God to bless his children. He even goes so far as almost to put himself in the attitude of a suppliant, and pleads with men to prove him and see if he is not willing to pour them out a blessing.

We must not only pray more, but we must pray with greater directness and confidence. I remember a sentence in one of Dr. Parkhurst's pulpit prayers: "Lord, teach us that it pays to pray. Help us to mean business when we pray." If any one could have dispensed with prayer it would have been, humanly speaking, our Lord himself, for did he not possess exceptional inward resources? Yet how significant it is to find over and over again in the gospel records the statement that he withdrew himself from the multitude, and even from his disciples, in order that he might pray. Let us cease theorizing about prayer, cease wondering if all prayers are answered, and give ourselves this new year to the practice with more system and more heart. Whether we get just what we seek is altogether a minor question. Whether we can go to God full of zeal and with a faith that could remove mountains is not the main thing. It is our very emptiness and coldness and deadness that should drive us to prayer. If we waited until we were spiritually minded we might never go at all. We pray because we need God, and no one who seeks him humbly and with the whole heart is sent empty away.

Prayer can do more for us than the finest university in the land. It can rid us of selfishness and lust. It can make us pure, patient and brave. It can give us power over men. There is a little book by Andrew Murray, entitled With Christ in the School of Prayer, which I wish we might all read in connection with this subject, and which it would pay us to consult often.

Mothers in Council.

JANET'S IDEA.

The Hemphills were a wealthy family, consisting of the father, mother and four children. The eldest son had graduated from college and was now practicing medicine in a Western city. The eldest daughter was married and lived in the West also. Only Gertrude, now nineteen, and Janet, aged eleven, were at home. One summer Mr. and Mrs. Hemphill and these two daughters went to visit the Speedwells.

The Hemphills had attended, more or less regularly, a fashionable city church. They had contributed liberally to its support and the children went to Sunday school—when they were not at their country home, nor in Europe, nor traveling about various mountains and shores in search of amusement. As this was not a very large proportion of the time, the children, as such things were not much talked of at home, had not received the average amount of religious instruction among the class of people to which the Hemphills belonged.

The Speedwells had been intimate with them for many years, but it so chanced that the children had never stayed in the Speedwell home until the occasion of this visit. The religion of the Speedwells was of the genuine, unobtrusive, living kind. Their home was a thoroughly Christian one and every morning, before breakfast, father, mother and children gathered together and enjoyed readings from the Scriptures and prayer. Little Janet, singular as it may seem, had never been before in a home where family prayers were observed. She was of a serious and thoughtful temperament, and was deeply impressed with the beautiful exercise. Her father afterward told Mrs. Speedwell the following story:

"On our way home from your house Janet and I had a quiet little talk together, and she said, 'I like the Speedwells very much, papa, and I would like to do a good many things that they do. Now their way of reading and praying in the morning is very nice, I think. Why don't we do that way?'

"I told her that it was pretty hard to get our family together in the mornings. Mamma wasn't very well and she got tired going out with Gertrude, and they both wanted to lie in bed in the morning. I didn't believe that we could manage it. Janet had to admit the truth of what I said, but she thought a minute and then broke out with, 'But you and I could have prayers together, papa. Why couldn't we?'

"'O,' I said, 'you think that you could be up for it, but you would want to sleep over, too, and papa would have to go down town—and we couldn't keep it up.' 'Yes we could, papa,' she persisted. 'I know that I could keep it up. I wouldn't let anything hinder me. Now you try it, will you?'

"Of course I promised that I would. That was two years ago, and Janet and I have had prayers together ever since. Never, when she has been well and we have been at home together, has she lost a morning. It has been a crown of blessing to us both."

"Verily," breathed the good woman who heard this touching story, "verily, a little child shall lead them!" K. B. C.

A CATECHISM FOR CHILDREN.

Parents often express a wish for a simple catechism in which important questions will be answered in Biblical language, as a supplement to the instruction imparted in Sunday school. An excellent little manual of this sort has been prepared by Dr. J. W. Cooper of the South Church, New Britain, Ct. It is called Gospel Truth and is a revision of a similar pamphlet published fifteen years ago for use among the boys and girls of his own congregation. It is particularly well adapted for use in Junior Endeavor Societies.

ANOTHER VIEW OF SELF-CONTROL.

In the article on Self-Control in The Congregationalist of Nov. 12 the writer asks: "After the child's outburst of kicking and screaming is over, what shall be done? Obviously find out the cause of the disease if possible, and, if we be the offenders, repent of it in anguish and bitterness, and strive to cast out the devils which we ourselves invited in." Who in such a case are the offenders but the parents? Had they begun right with the child the devil would never have possessed the child to such an extent. Had no always meant no and yes always meant yes, had the first and every succeeding stamp of the tiny foot in anger been met with reproof and punishment, he would have learned self-control right along and never have lain kicking and screaming on the floor. Granting that these manifestations are a sign of disease, if it were any physical ailment would you try the "let alone" policy? If your child had convulsions or pneumonia, would you refuse to do anything for it till the disease had spent itself?

The writer says: "As well try to put out fire with kerosene as to punish a child at such a time." My experience proves the contrary. We lived two years in the house with parents who pursued the let alone policy with their two-year-old daughter. On the least provocation she would kick and scream, sometimes for two hours, till she was a nuisance to the neighbors. At the end of two years the child was placed in our care. One morning she wished to go down street with an aunt. We got her hat and jacket to put on, when she declared she would not wear the jacket. Down she went on the floor and shrieked till a stranger would have thought she was being murdered. Reasoning with her was of no avail, and finally we tied a piece of cloth over her mouth. I had to hold her hands to keep it there, but in fifteen minutes from the time she threw herself down the screams had stopped and she was sobbing quietly.

Taking her in my lap I removed the cloth and told her how sorry she had made Jesus and mamma, and asked if she would like to have me tell Jesus all about it. After that she asked, "Can't I go down street now if I will have on my jacket?" "What did auntie tell you?" "That I could not if I did not get right up." "Did you get right up?" "No, and I can't go." I rocked her a while and told her a story, and sent her out to play as happy as need be. Every time she threw herself down and began to kick and scream I said, "Blanche, get right up." If she did not mind the cloth was put over her mouth and she was put on the bed. In three months' time the habit was almost broken up. She would sometimes throw herself on the floor, but we had only to say, "Blanche, get up at once," and she usually obeyed. If she did not I picked her up and put her on the bed. Last summer, however, when with one who believes in the let alone policy, she screamed more than an hour because she could not have her own way.

"Never meet passion with passion," said the writer quoted above. I would go further and say, Always make a child understand that you punish him because he is wrong; that God has given him to you to train, and that allowing him to do as he pleases when he pleases to do wrong is not training him; that you punish him because you love him so much that you can't let him grow up doing wrong unchecked. Never tell a child you do not love him when he is naughty. Make him understand that you love him just the same when you punish as when he is good. If you really do not love him when he is naughty keep it to yourself. Above everything else never tell a child that God does not love him when he does wrong. That is utterly false, for "God commendeth his love to us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."

It is not love but selfishness that withholds a needed punishment. One of the saddest remarks I ever heard was made by a young lady who had never been crossed in anything if it was possible to grant her wish. She had grown up wild and wayward and shunned. She became a Christian, but many did not believe in the reality of her professions and withheld a helping hand. For two years she had battled with the lifelong habits so hard to conquer. One day in utter discouragement she said, "I am just learning the lesson that should have been taught me before I was three years old. It would have been so much easier if only I had been made to obey when I was a child." E. J. H.

WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass.

FROM NORTH WISCONSIN.

Few persons outside the State can know how much was lost to home missions in Wisconsin by the death of Professor Blaisdell of Beloit College. His presidency of the H. M. S. represented an actual and inspiring leadership in a forward movement in church extension throughout the State. Although the northern district is a separate field with its own officers, his influence was hardly less potent there than south. One of the plans which failing health compelled him to abandon was a visit among some of the churches of the new North before the State convention. His qualities for leadership, displayed annually at the State convention, inspired the feeling that such men ought in some way to be entirely at the service of all the churches, not to any one or to the chair of a college. Great as was his usefulness as a teacher, it seems as if he had an enlarged usefulness for the denomination during the last years of his life in a general ministry among all the churches.

We do not crave the abuses connected with a bishopric, but we need the benefits of a general ministry among the churches. Perhaps the natural development of our home missionary superintendencies will make it possible, after a time, to fill those offices with men of the most commanding ability for extensive leadership. The great gain that would come to our churches by placing the very strongest men in the several missionary districts is evident.

Waste of Missionary Money. The serious deficiency in the treasury of the national H. M. S., after the strenuous effort at debt paying last year, is doubtless in part due to the impression that much home missionary money is wasted in sectarian rivalry. A benevolent and intelligent layman, who was trained for years under a ministry conspicuously loyal to the missionary interests of the denomination, that of Dr. Storrs in the Church of the Pilgrims in Brooklyn, and led by his investments to travel extensively in the West, said in my hearing two years ago that he had ceased to contribute to the Home Missionary Society, and gave as his reason the wicked waste of missionary funds in denominational competition. He said that he based his judgment on his own observations.

While the existence of unwarrantable competition and consequent waste is a fact to be deplored, and ought neither to be covered up nor excused, I am persuaded that, in the mind of this good man, it is greatly exaggerated and that his practical conclusion is a sad mistake. In the first place, the over-multiplication of churches is largely confined to boom towns, where great expectations have never been fulfilled, and the waste of church funds is less than the waste in other forms of unproductive investments. Only as the children of the kingdom—contrary to the nature of things—are very much wiser than the men of this world can such waste be prevented. In the second place, Congregationalism is almost never responsible for overcrowding of churches. Its missionary funds do not produce the mischief.

Then, again, the Congregational mission church is the best way yet discovered to prevent over-multiplication. Those who give to our missionary society are supplying an effective ounce of prevention against that evil. It should also be remembered that while duplication of churches is confined to a certain class of towns, in the country at large and in the cities churches and ministers are too few. I have recently preached in four mill towns within twelve miles of Rhinelander as a center with an aggregate population of about 800, who for eight years have been without pastoral care of any sort. There are hundreds of such places in Wisconsin which our denomination ought to care for, and it could with the aid of a small missionary appropriation. Often in towns seemingly overcrowded the churches would not be too many when once they became able to care for the surrounding country by missions and branch churches.

School and College. Spite of hard times Ripon College has the largest attendance in its collegiate department in its history, and President Flagg is working hard to procure funds for a much needed science hall. The scientific department under Professors Marsh and Leavenworth is exceedingly strong, and new applications for admission to it have to be refused continually. Plans are being made for an adequate building for this work, and it is hoped that funds will soon be forthcoming.

Ashland Academy is keeping bravely on and meets the peculiar needs of many promising boys and girls in the little villages who have a thirst for knowledge. The field agent, Rev. S. E. Lathrop, is engaged in a peculiar form of "good reading extension" by getting together traveling libraries of about 100 volumes each, one of which is loaned to a little mill town for two or three months under responsible care and then exchanged with another. The headquarters of the travelers will be at the Vaugn Library at Ashland, a gift to the city of Mrs. E. E. Vaugn, not simply in money but in time and present administration. Just now a strenuous effort is being made by the friends of the academy to raise funds for a Blaisdell perpetual scholarship as a kind of memorial to Professor Blaisdell, one of the stanchest friends of the school.

The church in Ashland is rejoicing in an enlargement of its house of worship which cost about $6,000. This sum was happily all pledged on the Sunday of rededication, Nov. 29, before the formal service. The success of this difficult undertaking, considering the place and time, is largely due to the energy of the pastor, Rev. R. W. McLaughlin, a nephew of Dr. Meredith. Under his leadership the church is forging rapidly ahead in many ways He is fortunate in having as chairman of his trustees a man with the Scotch grit of our Superintendent Grassie.

Sunday Evening Club. This organization, which originated under Rev. John Faville at Appleton some years ago, is going on to larger things in that church and is a great success at many other points in the State. The latest thing at Appleton is a men's and boys' choir of 150 voices and still growing, with an ambition to be the largest in the world. At Berlin, where Rev. C. A. Payne is pastor, a layman always presides, and half the sermon time is given to an address by a layman. Here the service resembles those of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Societies of England. In both places it is reported that the congregations are only limited by the size of the auditoriums. The club, however, is not always a success. At Fond du Lac Rev. D. L. Holbrook has recently reorganized a Sunday Evening Club into an Open Brotherhood, which does most of its work on a week night.

The excitement at Denver last year over Schlatter, the "divine healer," was described in our columns and was discussed by the secular and religious press all over the country. More than 80,000 persons visited him to be healed of all sorts of sicknesses, and many thousands proclaimed themselves cured. We are informed on good authority in Denver that probably not ten persons can now be found who received any permanent benefit from him. This fact may suggest to some who see signs and wonders in current events that before pronouncing final judgment on them it is well to wait till they can be seen in perspective through the distance made by a few months or years.

BOOK REVIEWS.

GENIUS AND DEGENERATION.

The volume of Dr. Max Nordau, which appeared a year or two ago and argued that civilized races are rapidly degenerating, has been subjected to much severe criticism, but we recall no more outspoken and skillful opposition to its teachings than that of Dr. William Hirsch in the volume before us, which has been translated from the second German edition. His main conclusion is that Nordau and those who indorse his views have adduced no satisfactory proof of the universal degeneration of highly civilized nations which they allege, and that, on the contrary, the outlook on the whole is encouraging. Much of the volume is devoted to the relation of insanity to society and to the questions whether genius is a form of insanity or not, and whether a high intellectual culture tends to promote insanity. One chapter is a keen, analytical critique upon Richard Wagner and psychopathology.

In his study of the psychology of genius Dr. Hirsch compares dozens of definitions which have been advanced, and finally gives his own opinion that no psychological meaning can be attached to the word genius. That is to say, we can make out what a poetical genius is, or a military genius or a scientific genius, but we cannot accept "genius" as a term which may be explained by any single psychological definition. This seems a sound position and one the acceptance of which often would clarify confused discussions of the subject. Dr. Hirsch also believes that more latitude should be allowed than is common in conceding the limits of sound health. That is to say, many facts which commonly are called "morbid symptoms of genius" are not morbid at all, but are phenomena of health which it is the duty of science to explain and account for. No two persons are precisely alike, and the fact that in one the fancy predominates and in another the logical quality is no reason for assuming that the one or the other is the sounder in mind.

His discussion of hallucinations is of considerable interest and we observe that he places under this head many religious visions, such as those of Saint Paul and other saints. Saint Paul's should not be so classified. He puts special emphasis on the power of suggestion and speaks with becoming condemnation of those who trifle with the phenomena of hypnotism. Spiritualism, he believes, has now died out nearly as much as religious superstition and fanaticism. He regards it as "at present almost entirely in the hands of swindlers and their weak minded victims." Musical people will value the Wagner chapter pre-eminently and the literary world will welcome his criticism of Ibsen. The book leaves one a little in doubt whether it was written originally as a connected treatise or is made up in part of essays written independently at first, but in any case it is a work of signal ability, of large interest in its way, and a vigorous and apt answer to such volumes as Dr. Nordau's. [D. Appleton & Co. $3 50].

RELIGIOUS.

The World for Christ [Eaton & Mains. 90 cents] embodies the Graves lectures at Syracuse University, delivered this year by Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D. D. It is a study of the motives and principles of missions, and is a fine example of the blending of logic and eloquence for the loftiest of ends. Apparently delivered without notes, it nevertheless is polished in style. It discusses the authority of missions, their field, their aim, hindrances to success, qualifications of leadership and the agencies necessary to success. It is both profound and practical, and it combines in a comparatively small book abundant learning and wise and consecrated suggestions.——Mornings in the College Chapel [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25] is a collection of the addresses made by Prof. F. G. Peabody of Harvard University at morning prayers. One of the features of this service is a religious address occupying three or four minutes only and intended to impress upon its hearers some single thought which may prove of value during the day. It is from utterances of this sort that this book has been made up. They of course are diversified in theme, and they strike us as fine examples of terse and telling appeals to both the intellect and heart in behalf of spiritual living.——The Inspiration of History [T. Whittaker. $1 00], by Rev. Dr. James Mulcahey, is a series of short chapters in which are discussed the credibility of history, the significance of the Biblical history regarded simply as history, the fact that its truthfulness is not invalidated by the higher criticism, the witness of history to the divine personality of our Lord, and other topics, emphasizing as a conclusion the importance of a living consciousness of communion with God. It is a thoughtful, earnest, practical and generally commendable volume, but not too scholarly for ordinary readers and neither elaborate nor profound. Its chapters may have been used as sermons or talks.

The World Beautiful, Second Series [Roberts Bros. $1 00] is by Lillian Whiting, and it discusses various social, intellectual or moral subjects from the point of view of a reverent moralist possessing a cultured mind, keen perceptions, broad sympathies and a power of facile expression. The book is one of those which, without being specially denominational, seems to be in closest sympathy with a certain type of Unitarian thinking. An utterance here or there seems overwrought, for instance, the statement that the fact of clairvoyance is as well established as that of hypnotism. But the book as a whole is not only readable but helpfully stimulating ——In Noble Living [Universalist Publishing House. $1.00], edited by C. S. Nickerson, is gathered a series of studies by various writers upon the development of the deeper life in men. They are the utterances of earnest minds animated with a sincere purpose to render their reflections of spiritual advantage to their fellowmen. These chapters read a little as if they had been sermons originally. They are eminently plain and practical and enter successfully into some of the inner recesses of human nature with their messages of comfort and strength.

POETRY.

Miss Edith M. Thomas's new book is A Winter Swallow and Other Verse [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1 50]. The opening poem, which gives its name to the volume, is the most elaborate and is dramatic in form. There is one other long poem and the balance of the book is made up of shorter verse, including a score of sonnets. No one can read Miss Thomas's poetry without appreciating its thoughtfulness. It is meant for those who are not content to skim the surface of life, and the least of the author's efforts appeals to something deep down in the reader's heart. This quality gives her verse lasting significance, and its metrical quality also is so fine that her pages always are rewarding and each new volume adds something to her creditable fame.——Reliques of the Christ [F. H. Revell Co. 30 cents], by Rev. Denis Wortman, D D., is out in a new and cheaper edition. It is a good example of religious poetry of the higher order. It abounds in sentiment but is far from sentimentalism. It embodies the tenderest and loftiest emotions of the Christian in verse which is melodious and vigorous, and which, if at times disregardful of metrical perfection, never fails to be poetry of an inspiring quality and a spirited form. It is an excellent book to be read in one's hours of private devotion.

Paul Laurence Dunbar is a new poet, and his little book, Lyrics of Lowly Life [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25], exhibits genuine poetical ability. It is conspicuous for pleasant and often picturesque conceptions and for an agreeable diversity of metrical form, which sometimes indicates exceptional power in the author. The poems are suggested by many themes in nature and morals and are ordinarily short, but they are full not only of genuine promise but also of commendable performance.——Aloha and Other Poems [H. H. Carter & Co. $1.25], by Mrs. Mary Johnson, is a collection of poems which is pervaded by a just appreciation of the needs and the emotions of common life. Without rising at any time to lofty hights of either imagination or expression, it is tender, wholesome and pleasing. A multitude of readers always welcome such poetry and enjoy it thoroughly. Some of these poems are distinctly religious and all are animated by the spirit of home-love and devotion to duty.——The Poems [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00] of Robert Loveman are short, diversified, musical and many of them are striking. In a few the effort to be picturesque has somewhat blurred the intended meaning. The author's special excellence lies in the brief, terse yet often vivid and sympathetic utterance of a single thought.

Poems of love always find readers, especially among the young, and Love's Demesne [Dodd, Mead & Co. $2 50], in which Mr. G. H. Ellwanger has gathered from many sources two volumes of contemporary love poems, is a carefully chosen and commendable collection in which the works of the choicest American and English modern poets have been gleaned, and the large variety of subject, treatment and metrical form adds attractiveness.——The Lover's Year Book of Poetry [Roberts Bros. $2 50], by H. P. Chandler, contains poems suggested by the passion of love for each day in the year. But it deals with the other life, and many poems are religious in character. The majority are from modern sources, but some are voices out of the past. It is a choice collection, more than ordinarily rich in food for reflection, and eminently uplifting in temper. The two volumes are tastefully printed and bound.

Another collection of religious verse and a work even more distinctively religious in tone is The Treasury of American Sacred Song [Henry Frowde. $3.00], compiled by W. G. Horder. Living poets, or those comparatively recently deceased, are the authors of these poems, and the arrangement is chronological, the order of the birth dates of the writers being followed. This, too, is a collection gathered with discrimination and good taste, and we commend it very heartily. The publishers have done their part successfully.——There is considerable difference between the poems in An Autumn Singer [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25], by G. M. Gould, M. D., and several might have been omitted without loss to the volume. Most of them, however, are commendable both in substance and form. Those which perhaps represent the author's average in respect to ambitiousness we like best. The more philosophical do not interest one quite so much.

The Macmillan Co. has made good use of its large experience and abundant resources in order to bring out in a fascinating edition A Book of Old English Ballads [$2.00], illustrated with decorative drawings in black and white by G. W. Edwards, and introduced by a charming essay from the pen of Dr. Mabie. Such ballads as Chevy Chase, Annan Water, Barbara Allen's Cruelty, the Twa Corbies, the Nut Brown Maid, the Braes o' Yarrow and others compose the book, and among volumes of poetry intended for holiday gifts this one must be conceded a foremost place. Its covers also call for a word of praise.——Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey have combined to furnish More Songs from Vagabondia [Copeland & Day. $1.10]. The title warns the reader to expect a considerable variety in the character of the verse and much carelessness as to conventional form. We like very much certain of the poems and some of quite different sorts, but there are others which do not particularly appeal to us. The volume is too miscellaneous for some tastes but, if taken as offered, as a bunch of variegated flowers of all sorts and colors and forms, it will afford pleasure.——A Boy's Book of Rhyme [Copeland & Day. $1 00] is by Clinton Scollard. It is not only for boys, but a good deal of it might have been written by a boy. It is intended to make this impression and is lively and entertaining, and through many of its lines the spirit of the love of nature is breathed pleasantly.——Another book of verse for children is Three Little Folks [Picturesque Pub. Co. $1 00], by Clarence Hawkes. There is some prose in the book, but it consists chiefly of poetry which is simple and pleasing, and a great many illustrations such as young folks will appreciate increase its attractiveness.

STORIES.

Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. have issued a beautiful illustrated edition of Ian Maclaren's two famous books, The Days of Auld Lang Syne and The Bonnie Brier Bush [Each $2 00]. Mr. Clifton Johnson, whose excellent work in photography has become well known to our readers through his contributions to our own columns, has illustrated them with dozens of fine pictures taken from real life at Drumtochty. The admirers of the famous author will find this the ideal edition of his volumes thus far issued, and, once having seen them, will find it exceedingly difficult to be contented with any others.——Sister Jane, Her Friends and Acquaintances [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50] is a new book by Joel Chandler Harris. There is in it no likeness to his Uncle Remus stories but it is a novel of the customary sort. The scene is laid in Georgia in a quiet village, the inhabitants of which, for the most part, are the characters. It is a simple and comparatively uneventful story but fresh and lifelike. As a portrayal of various types of character, too, it abounds in interest and blends humor and pathos naturally and delightfully. It is a sweet and wholesome story which uplifts the reader without preaching to him and will do much to extend the author's already wide and honorable reputation.

The Story of Hannah [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1 50], by W. J. Dawson, is the work of a master hand although the author's name is new to us. It is another example of the possibility of finding profound interest in the lives of commonplace people. The personages who appear are very ordinary English men and women of the lower middle class and the thread of the story is the experience, often depressing and rarely bright or beautiful, of the household of a Methodist minister in the days when dissent was looked down upon socially more than at present. But such is the author's skill in appreciating individuality, his sympathy with what is noble and beautiful, and his self-control and artistic sense of propriety in description that he has constructed out of his somewhat unpromising material a story engrossing, uplifting and more enjoyable than many narratives of lives far more conspicuous and inherently entertaining. We have taken great pleasure in the book and heartily commend it.

Mr. Benjamin Swift, author of Nancy Noon [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1 50], is a new writer, and great successes are prophesied for him. Evidently influenced by George Meredith, whose style his own strongly resembles in some respects, he nevertheless has distinct originality and ability. This novel fairly may be called remarkable, but it is hardly agreeable except as a piece of literary work. It deals throughout with the darker side of life, with sordidness, passion, trickery and various other forms of evil. There is hardly any brightness or beauty between its covers, and it leaves the reader somewhat depressed even though admiring. As a study of some striking types of individuality it is not only powerful, but at times brilliant. It is abler as such a study than as the working out of a natural plot, but whether it was worth writing after all is a question which many readers will ask themselves as they lay it aside. To our mind its best feature is the unmistakable promise which it affords of the author's ability to write an equally strong and much more inspiring book.

We cannot say much, either, for Marie Corelli's Jane [J. B. Lippincott Co. 75 cents]. We sympathize entirely with the author's condemnation of the frivolity, shabbiness, and we might even say brutality, of such behavior on the part of so-called fashionable society as is described in these pages, assuming it ever to occur, but it is too unlikely to be worth supposing, and the lesson of the book might have been taught in a pleasanter and more impressive fashion.——It is pleasing to turn to so sweet and charming a story as A Genuine Girl [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25], by Jeanie G. Lincoln. It is a sequel to her former story, Marjorie's Quest, and the genuine girl and her friends and the genuine boys whom they know and for the most part equally genuine men and women—of course there has to be a villain in the plot and this time it is a girl—all behave in a manner which is entertaining and full of good suggestion throughout. The author would have done well to persuade some Yale man to supervise her allusions to college matters, especially boat racing, but, in spite of an occasional slip, she has caught the atmosphere of college life, which is the most important thing for her purpose, admirably and we heartily like and cordially commend the book.——His Brother's Keeper [Congregational S. S. & Pub. Society. $1.50] is another of Rev. C. M. Sheldon's picturesque and graphic stories which deals with the great subject of Christian stewardship. A period of trouble between labor and capital involving a great strike is selected for study and portrayal. The operations of the Salvation Army afford considerable material, and the book does good service toward promoting righteous views of society and of personal responsibility for the management of property. Like one or two of the other books of the author it was read, a chapter at a time, to his congregation on Sunday evenings. It deserves a wide sale.

Stone & Kimball have issued in a pretty volume Mr. Gilbert Parker's A Romany of the Snows [$1.25], the second series of An Adventurer of the North. Pierre is the prominent hero and the stories take the reader into regions of Canada and beyond unknown to most of us except by an occasional glimpse, such as is here afforded. Place and people alike have their fascination, which the author understands well how to intensify. The life which is pictured has little in it which is humorous, but much which is pathetic. It is not without its elements of tragedy, but it is not depressing and one reads with growing zest and with keen appreciation of the ability of the writer.——West Virginia is the scene of Love in the Backwoods [Harper & Bros. $1.25]. It contains two stories, Two Mormons from Muddlety and Alfred's Wife. It paints in bold and striking colors, although not without considerable delicacy of touch, the simple and crude yet forceful characters of the mountaineers and affords decidedly enjoyable reading. One feels, however, that the Mormon elders are somewhat overdrawn.

The Violet [Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25], is by Julia Magruder and has been published already in the Ladies' Home Journal. It is a light society story, the result of which, and perhaps the object of which, is to suggest that a second marriage may be not only justifiable but wise. It is pleasant reading without being exactly engrossing and is one of those stories which entertain but whose characters illustrate no unusual types and of which the plot is a minor feature.——At the Gate of the Fold [Macmillan Co. $1.25], by J. S. Fletcher, is an unpretending, but inherently interesting story. English rustics are the characters, and their loves and hates and trials make up the body of the book. The style is simple and agreeable and the story is one of those wholesome, entertaining pictures of country life and character which gratify by their local coloring and are truly enjoyable. This one also points some important moral lessons emphatically but without obtruding them. ——Old London during the plague and the great fire is the scene of The Sign of the Red Cross [T. Nelson & Sons. $1 25], by E. Everett Green. The author is at home with her subject and has written a vivid and interesting book. It will abundantly sustain her creditable reputation and young people or others may gain from it considerable valuable historical information in a gratifying manner.

The Star Sapphire [Roberts Bros. $1.50], by Mabel Collins, also has a moral purpose. It is a somewhat unusual sort of production, a genuine novel written to inculcate teetotalism. It is a painful but quite powerful story, and it leaves a vivid mark on the reader's mind, but we should like it a great deal better if the death of the hero's love for his wife and the birth of his love for Laurence had not been confessed at so early a period. That kind of a hero ought to have more self-control.——Ring o' Rushes [Stone & Kimball. $1.25], by Shan F. Bullock, is a group of about a dozen Irish stories, inherently believable if only for their audacity and their odd finishing turns. Whether the author be Irish or not, he knows the Irish character and knows how to describe it and his book is realistic in the true sense and very entertaining.

JUVENILE.

Admiral Farragut always must remain a hero to American boys, but many of them cannot be aware of the gallantry which he displayed while younger than many of them. Midshipman Farragut [D. Appleton & Co. $1.00], by James Barnes, is based upon the facts of his career with hardly an exception. It is a spirited and most suggestive book, which takes the reader back into a period of the history of the American navy which is past, never to return, although there can be no doubt that the bravery of the past would be duplicated in the future should occasion arise. The book will not only delight but benefit the boys.——Black and Blue [Macmillan Co. $1.50], by A. R. Hope, is a live book for live boys. The hero is a youngster of English family who through stress of circumstances after the supposed death of his father becomes an inmate of a Scotch household and finds companions at first uncongenial, association with whom goes far to develop manliness in him. The boys are real boys and the story is full of incident and indirectly of wholesome moral teachings. It cannot fail to be a great favorite.

Vivacious from the first page to the last and sure to be voted a prize by the boys and girls is Nan at Camp Chicopee [Roberts Bros. $1.50], by Myra S. Hamlin. Nan spent a summer with the boys, and their pranks and adventures are unfolded in a manner showing that the author understands children thoroughly and knows well how to put her efforts in their behalf into an acceptable literary form. The book will make a pleasant Christmas present.——Olive Roscoe [T. Nelson & Sons. $1.25], by E. Everett Green, is for girls somewhat older. It pictures the experiences of a girl whom unusual circumstances prevent from being an inmate of her father's household until she has become a young woman and her mother has died. Entering it almost a stranger and somewhat at a loss, she gradually assumes her own place, and her experiences and theirs, including various love affairs and some occurrences outside of the family circle, help to make up the story, which is interesting and usefully suggestive.

There is plenty of life and action in Catalina, Art Student [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25], and the young heroine wins her way to the reader's heart very soon. She is somewhat of a novel sort of bird for such a nest as her household, but what they would have done without her is hard to tell. Her history, even including its trials, is abundantly worth reading.——In The Oriel Window [Macmillan Co. $1.00] Mrs. Molesworth has told one of her pleasant stories of English family life, which, without any notably original features, is a graceful and high-toned story which the boys and girls will read more than once and never without satisfaction and profit.——Mrs. Mary Johnson's Mac [H. H. Carter & Co. $1.25] has for its frontispiece a portrait of its hero, evidently a large Newfoundland dog, who tells his own story in the first person by the aid of the author's pen. It is a skillful interpretation of what an intelligent dog may be supposed to think, and is very amusing and suggestive. The countless boys and girls who love their dogs almost as much as they love each other will give it a warm welcome.

MISCELLANEOUS.

One of the choice volumes blending history and art effectively is Venice [H. T. Coates & Co. $3.00], translated by F. J. Sitwell from the French of Charles Yriarte. It contains an appreciative and well-written account of the history of art in the famous city, together with information concerning its modern life and industries. It is illustrated by many excellent full-page pictures and contains a map. The critical and narrative efforts of the author are combined skillfully, and the book will do good service. It is not a hand book exactly, still less a guide-book, but it does supply much such information as the more thoughtful class of visitors and students desires. So far as one can judge without having seen the original, the translation is good and the volume is handsome in all respects.

Mrs. Alice Morse Earle has added to the list of her writings a volume which is perhaps the most quaint of all in its revelations of the past. Curious Punishments of Bygone Days [H. S. Stone & Co. $1.50] is its title, and it describes the bilboes, the ducking stool, the stocks, the pillory, the whipping post and other penalties, and is based on historical studies in the early colonial records of this country. The illustrations by Frank Hazenplug are a great addition to the interest of the book, being exceedingly faithful reproductions of the old-style illustrative work. They not only represent the different punishments but the representations might have been made by artists a century or two ago, and possibly there may be some measure of legitimate reproduction of such old work. Mrs. Earle has handled her theme with her usual skill and has made a most interesting and valuable book.

Another book by James Barnes is Naval Actions of the War of 1812 [Harper & Bros. $4 10]. The brilliant record of the American navy in the War of 1812 has been narrated before, but there is room for another so good a book as this by Mr. Barnes. He tells afresh the stories of the Constitution, the Wasp, the Hornet, the Chesapeake and others in a skillful and effective style, and points out once more how American enterprise and valor took the world by surprise and defeated the greatest naval power in existence, establishing the United States on a footing of excellence not to be disputed. It has been said that by the victory of the Constitution over the Guerriere, the United States was raised in half an hour from a semi-obscure second-class power to a supreme position among the great nations of the world. And this is hardly overstating the fact. The book is illustrated by many full-page pictures of engagements, some of them in colors, by facsimiles of medals, etc., and is a book to be preserved in many a library.

Another sea book is The Ship's Company and Other Sea People [Harper & Bros. $2.50], by Lieut.-Commander J. D. J. Kelley, U. S. N. It describes an ocean steamer, its crew and its routine of life. It pictures yachtsmen on board their yachts, gives a minute and interesting account of the training of midshipmen for the navy, has chapters on the superstitions of the sailor, the Basket of the Sea, that is to say the island of Tahiti, especially the town of Papeeté, and one or two other chapters on different aspects of sea life. Made up thus, of somewhat miscellaneous papers, the book nevertheless has a certain unity and affords probably the most complete idea of some of the topics considered, such as the training of midshipmen, ever put into print for popular reading. The author's spirit in criticising the course of training at the military academy is friendly and his suggestions in the way of improvement, such as that a somewhat higher standard of admission should be established, seem worthy of consideration. The book is illustrated and will be appreciated not only by adults but by the boys.

Harper's Round Table [$3.50] in its bound volume for 1896 gathers up the delights of the year, with which the regular readers of the magazine are familiar, and with which all the other boys and girls in America ought to be familiar. Sense and nonsense, wisdom and fun, prose and verse, sport and studies are all represented in these fascinating pages, and lavish illustrations of the highest artistic merit and the most successful appropriateness abound in these successive numbers. We can only recommend every boy and girl to ask their parents to subscribe for it on their behalf and all parents to subscribe in behalf of their children.——The annual assortment of Prang's Holiday Publications is at hand and it includes several charming calendars decorated in colors, a considerable number of dainty little books of poetry and pictures, one of which is Songs of the Birthdays, by Rev. E. W. Shurtleff; another is Heart's Ease, consisting of selections of verse adorned with brilliant pansies; another is Saxe Holmes's I Wonder What the Clover Thinks, with life like clover blossoms for pictures, and yet another is Carnations, by Bessie Gray, the designs in which are the most brilliant we remember to have seen. There are the usual number of small but handsome cards. Among the calendars for 1897 one or two of special interest are the Bicycle Calendar, the Boston Baked Beans Souvenir, in which are historical buildings and spots in our city drawn as if on the outside of a pot of baked beans; a charming Waiting Calendar, the pictures of which illustrate in one or another way the idea of waiting; and a Poster Calendar, in which the idea of the modern brilliantly colored poster has been adapted for service in connection with the purposes of a calendar. The whole collection is as brilliant and attractive as in any previous year.

Another pretty production, sure to be a favorite this season, is a Shakespeare Calendar [75 cents], in which are many selections from Shakespeare and considerable general literary information, together with illustrations by Marie D. Page. The calendar is published by Louella C. Poole and Andréa Johnsson. Shakespeareans especially will appreciate its merit, as well as the artistic beauty of its production.—— Messrs. G. H. Ellis & Co. also send us Strength, Sweetness and Light [75 cents]—a selection of passages, chiefly prose, for every day in the coming year.——The holiday issues of The Illustrated London News, The Ladies' Pictorial, The Graphic, The Chatterbox Christmas Box have been received from the International News Co., also several large pictures, Symphony, a little girl playing on the violin while her little dog is lifting up his voice in accompaniment, A Strolling Juggler, an English village scene, Flaming June and one or two more—all brilliant pieces of color, yet in good taste. They are excellent examples of the work in this line issued by the English illustrated journals. They are certain to be as much liked on this side of the water as on the other.

NOTES.

—— Mr. W. D. Howells is about to appear upon the lecture platform. He will discuss the modern novel.

—— Ian Maclaren gave his share of the proceeds of his lecture in New York on Robert Burns to aid the Scotch poor in that city.

—— We are glad to learn that the Arena Publishing Company of this city has been reorganized and will continue its business.

—— Books by popular authors now are sold by auction almost. That is, the author's agent offers the manuscript to successive publishers and gives it to the one who bids the highest sum for it.

—— The New York University's committee on the Deems lectureship has invited the Duke of Argyle to deliver the inaugural course of lectures, but he has declined on account of his health.

—— Mme. Adolphe Rogé, better known as Charlotte Fiske Bates, the poet, is not dead, as has been reported, but very much alive. She is teaching in Florida, and a new volume of verse from her pen is soon to appear.

—— One of the three bronze doors for the principal entrance of the new Congressional Library at Washington is cast. It was designed by Edward P. Casey and executed by the late Olin L. Warner. Its figures represent Tradition, Writing and Printing.

—— Tennyson, just after finishing the manuscript of In Memoriam, had trouble with his landlady and gave up his lodgings. He forgot the manuscript, but could not be induced to go back and face the landlady. Had it not been for his friend, the late Coventry Patmore, who was with him and who returned to the lodgings, forced his way in and found the poem, already thrown carelessly into a drawer of rubbish, probably the manuscript would have been destroyed.

Rosa Bonheur

Tells the Story of Her Life

How she struggled with art: her first picture: her painting of "The Horse Fair": her methods of work, and how she lives in her chateau in the forest of Fontainebleau. It is an interesting story in the Christmas Ladies' Home Journal.

One Dollar for One Year

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

THE CONGREGATIONALIST'S ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND.

The long list of acknowledgments that follows comprises all that have been received at our office for the week ending Tuesday noon, Dec. 22, and the amount has been cabled to Turkey as the Christmas offering of the Congregationalists of America. From this time on we shall announce in the paper from week to week only the aggregate of gifts, but receipts will be sent by mail to individual donors. The inclosure of a stamped and addressed envelope will greatly facilitate the process of acknowledgment.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. BENJAMIN TAPPAN, D. D.,

died at his home in South Norridgewock, Dec. 3, aged 81. He was born in Augusta, June 26, 1815, the son of the late Benjamin Tappan, D. D., and Elizabeth Bowdoin (Temple) Tappan. He graduated from Bowdoin College, Class of '33, from Bangor Seminary in 1837, was ordained at Hampden, Me., in 1883, where he was pastor ten years. He was then pastor at Charlestown, Mass., for nine years, when he assumed charge of the church at Norridgewock, Me., where he remained more than 25 years, till his health compelled him to resign in 1885. He was married in 1838 to Delia, daughter of the late William Emmons of Hallowell. One son, Henry Lyman Tappan of Waterville, and two daughters are living. Dr. Tappan was an able pastor, a wise counselor, a deep thinker and a man beloved and esteemed by all. He was on the board of overseers of Bowdoin College from 1864 to 1887, a trustee of Bangor Seminary from 1868 to 1878, and president of the board for a part of that time.

REV. NATHANIEL RICHARDSON.

Rev. Nathaniel Richardson died in Providence, R. I., Dec. 3. On that date ninety years ago he was born at Rockport, Mass. He was a graduate of Amherst College and of Yale Seminary in 1837. His first pastorate was at Terryville, Ct. He was chaplain of the 36th Massachusetts Volunteers for nearly two years during the War of the Rebellion and had two sons in the army with him. His last ministerial charge was at Bradford, N. H., but for the past eight years he had lived with his children in Rhode Island. A full half-century he had preached the gospel in New England, having had charge of churches in Vermont and Maine. On Thanksgiving Day there were together twenty-one of his descendants, including his seven children, who now survive him.

Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

A church in the Sunflower State has hit upon an interesting and practical way of aiding the H. M S. Another shows how conducive to spiritual growth is a clean balance sheet and a cash basis of payment. If "Bleeding Kansas"—which epithet was never more applicable than now—can do this, what might not be accomplished in States where there is less financial stringency?

That two new churches should be organized in the State within a month speaks well for the efficiency of the Vermont Missionary Society's secretary and his helpers. The young women workers have accomplished much in the past which has deserved notice, and their success suggests that just such work as they are undertaking is needed in discouraged and churchless districts.

A sigh from one who has known the inside workings of the supply committee of a certain Congregational church ends with the announcement that finally a Methodist has been secured. "Over fifty," writes our correspondent, "have applied for the pulpit, and some of them have destroyed any remote possibility of a hearing by their unmannerly persistence."

A few weeks ago a Western pastor preached what his people have named The Poker Sermon. It was from a text which may be rendered, "Stir into flame the gift of God which is in thee" [2 Tim. 1: 6]. The weekly prayer meeting has, in consequence, increased to three times its usual size. Poker sermons at this season are in order in all our churches.

The new missionary periodical, Congregational Work, is finding its way rapidly into hundreds of homes. It would be well for all churches to follow the plan of a few which have determined to place the paper in every home in their parishes.

The Kansas pastor who uses the line-upon-line, precept-upon-precept plan to instruct his people as to the work of the national benevolent societies is doing valuable service, such as would prove helpful in other churches as well.

Some rather curious references are brought out in a Massachusetts coast town regarding the first American born Pilgrim and her relations to the church of our forefathers.

Upwards of fifty of our churches are now known to us as using the individual cups. An influential church of Greater Boston has just joined the ranks.

Another suburban church near Boston celebrated last Sunday a victory which merited the marked recognition it received.

Seventy-four Congregational churches in Chicago is the latest record up to date.

AN EPOCH-MAKING MEETING.

Congregational work among the Scandinavians in North Dakota and northwestern Minnesota has lately received a strong impulse. Scattered communities of free church workers have stood separately for years. Their fear of outside control and their reaction against ecclesiastical domination in their old relations has kept them radically independent. They have been jealous of anything approaching ecclesiastical union with Congregational churches because of fear that they might again be in spiritual bondage. During November a conference of nearly 20 of these little groups was held at Christine, N. D. The meeting was earnest. There were sermons and addresses and a free conference of all the people. A special effort was made to unite all in more harmonious and co-operative work. Some of these congregations were Congregational; others were made up of free and independent groups, but all had an earnest Christian spirit and were desirous of real fellowship in Christ.

A better understanding of the purpose of Congregationalism resulted. Prejudices were removed, and the people have come to see and to express emphatically their desire for greater co-operation. The Ministers' and Elders' Association of the Scandinavian Free Churches in North Dakota and Western Minnesota was formed, and, while not Congregational, it is a cheering sign and will undoubtedly lead to a more complete organization. The movement took place entirely among the Scandinavian brethren, and was in no sense engineered or urged forward by Congregational officials. There are signs of a widespread feeling among the Scandinavians, even in the Lutheran Church, that they need more aggressive spiritual work and less ecclesiastical machinery.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Bangor.

Sec. D. P. Hatch of the Maine Missionary Society addressed the students Dec. 14 on The Work of the Society and the Problem of the Country Church. ——The annual catalogue for 1896–97 is just out. Several elective courses are offered for the ensuing year.——Mr. A. B. Hunt, '98, has been appointed assistant librarian for a year.—— The Senior Class in church history has begun study on the third volume of Neander.

Hartford.

Last Thursday Rev. Samuel Freuder of Boston spoke on The Present Religious Conditions of the Jews, dwelling especially on the difference between orthodox and reformed Jews.——Last Friday Prof. G. F. Wright, D. D., of Oberlin gave a short address, to which the public was invited, on his own experiences as a minister ——Thursday evening the semi-annual spread was enjoyed. Several after-dinner speeches were made by the students.——The Christmas vacation began Wednesday afternoon. The seminary opens again the first Monday of January.

Yale.

The Missionary Society was addressed on Monday of last week on Prisons and Prison Reform by Rev. W. J. Batt of the Concord Reformatory. He also spoke before the Senior Class in Sociology the next day.——On Wednesday evening the second lecture in the Leonard Bacon Club course was given by Dr. T. T. Munger on Jonathan Edwards. The next lecture occurs Jan. 13 and will be by Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D. D.——The senior address before the school last week was by Mr. G. E. Ladd on The Minister's Place in Social Life.——Sermons of Dr. Joseph Parker and Frederick W. Robertson were reviewed last week before the class in homiletics.

Oberlin.

The first semester closes Dec. 23, after two days of examinations. The next term begins Jan. 6.—— The event of the past week, and the chief musical event of the year, was the production of Handel's Messiah by the Musical Union with its chorus of 175 voices, assisted by an orchestra of 40 pieces and by soloists from abroad. A number of the students are members. Students less advanced in musical ability secure training at the conservatory, which holds each term a series of artists' recitals.

Chicago.

Saturday night Professor McKenzie delivered an address at the Hull House.——Professor Paeth is ministering to Christ Church (German) with good success.——There are now five German Congregational churches in Chicago, which have been largely fostered through the German department of the seminary.——A large audience in Carpenter Chapel Thursday afternoon heard Professor Chamberlain lecture on The Messiah. Friday afternoon, by special request, he read Dickens's Christmas Carol to the faculty, students and their friends.——The winter recess began Saturday. Work will be resumed Jan. 4

CLUBS.

MASS.—The Cambridge Club listened last week Monday night to an address on Religion in Politics, Problems of Our Forefathers and Our Own, by Rev. C. E. Jefferson.

The Fall River Club celebrated Forefathers' Day, Dec. 15, by observing ladies' night and hearing an address on The Pilgrims' Message to Their Heirs. Rev. Dr. A. E. Dunning of Boston was the speaker of the evening.

The Worcester Club held its Forefathers' Day meeting Dec. 14. Rev. Wallace Nutting, D. D., of Providence gave the principle address on A Broadening Patriotism. Rev. H. A. Blake of Webster was the second speaker.

The Essex Club met, Dec. 21, in Salem for its Forefathers' celebration. Dr. G. A. Gordon of Boston and Hon. A. H. Wellman, president of the Boston Club, gave the addresses.

At its meeting on Forefathers' Day the Newton Club was addressed by Rev. C. H. Beale, D. D., on The Pilgrims and Their Relatives, and by Rev. W. E. Barton, D. D., on The Pilgrim of the Twentieth Century. An old-fashioned supper was served.

The North Bristol Club met at the Winslow Church, Taunton, last Monday night to celebrate Forefathers' Day. Rev. Dr. A. W. Archibald of Hyde Park gave an able address on Plymouth Rock, the Rock Whence We Are Hewn. Rev. Morton Dexter of Boston also spoke informally on The Pilgrims.

N. H.—The Central New Hampshire Club met in Nashua, Dec. 16, and despite a furious snowstorm was well attended. The address was by Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D. D., on the topic With Our Faces Towards the Dawn. He dealt with Sunday school work, outlining the marks of its progress. Prof. B. L. Cilley of Phillips Exeter Academy was a guest of the club and in a pertinent speech presented the formal salutations of the Pascataqua Club of which he is president.

R. I.—The winter festival of the Rhode Island Club was held at the Trocadero, Providence, Dec. 7. About 375 members and guests were present. The addresses were by Rev. Henry Baker, D. D., of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, Newark, N. J., and Rev. W. V. Kelley, editor of the Methodist Review of New York.

MINN.—The Southern Minnesota Club held its annual meeting, Dec. 7, at Faribault. The reports presented made a hopeful showing. Hon. L. L. Wheelock of Owatonna was chosen president for the ensuing year. Pres. G. A. Gates, D. D., of Grinnell, Io., was the guest and made the principal address, a candid and thoughtful discussion of present day problems, entitled The Outlook for a Democracy in America. It was favorably received, though it called out adverse criticism.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

CHELSEA.—First. Last Sunday throughout was a day of Christmas observance. The morning service was largely choral, a number of fine selections being rendered by the chorus and quartet of the church. The pastor, Rev. Dr. R. C. Houghton, gave a special greeting to his hearers appropriate to the season and preached on Why Do We Keep Christmas? The evening service of the Sunday school was largely attended, every seat in the house being filled. The special attraction was the exercise of the children, including a German service in which the "advent tree" was used. The exercise illustrates the darkness of the world before the promises of a Saviour were given. Total darkness is produced in the auditorium, and as the children go forward, one by one, and recite a promise a candle on the large tree at the front is lighted. Sixty or more lights were thus arranged. Miss J. B. Buck, a member of the church, who has been abroad for nearly two years, introduced the idea which was so successfully carried out. The children also brought presents to be distributed among needy ones in the city.

CAMBRIDGE.—Wood Memorial. When Rev. I. W. Sneath was called to the pastorate, a little more than nine years ago, the church was struggling with a mortgage debt of $4,200, so placed that it could not be touched for the first five years of his pastorate. Four years ago pastor and people began a determined effort to liquidate this debt. They have succeeded and last Sunday, Dec. 20, they held special services in recognition of the victory. The pastor gave a historical address, a bugler announced the fact that the church was free, and amidst the ascending incense and the praises of the assembly the note was burned by the treasurer of the church. It was a day of jubilee for this people.

NEWTON.—Auburndale. At the morning service, Dec. 13, five of the jubilee singers from the recent meeting of the A. M. A. sang and three gave brief addresses. The offering amounted to about $300.

WEST MEDFORD.—Harvard Avenue shows a good record for the year. The benevolences have been larger than ever before. All bills are paid and a balance remains. It has been voted to adopt the system of free seats for all services and to raise the funds by weekly pledges. Several hundred dollars above the amount appropriated for current expenses of next year have already been pledged. It has also been voted to increase the pastor's salary $200. Rev. J. V. Clancy is pastor.

LOWELL.—First. The advisory council held its third session Dec. 16. The entire day was spent in secret session considering the difficulties of the situation. Without reaching a conclusion the council adjourned to the 23d inst.

DRACUT.—Central. A farewell gathering was held, Dec. 17, in "the old yellow meeting house," built in 1794. After a bountiful supper addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Cyrus Richardson, who was born in the parish, Rev. W. W. Nason who with his father, Rev. Elias Nason, supplied the pulpit for several years, and by pastors and friends of the neighboring Lowell and Dracut churches. The next day carpenters took possession of the venerable landmark and began the work of transforming it into a modern house of worship. The contract price for the alterations are less than $10,000. The society has already raised over $8,000, and it expects to dedicate the renewed building in the spring without debt. During the rebuilding the congregation will worship with the First Church.

MIDDLEBORO.—Central subscribes for 150 copies of Congregational Work. It designs to put the paper into every home represented in the congregation. Rev. R. G. Woodbridge is pastor.

MARSHFIELD.—First. The church edifice was reopened for worship Dec. 13, after thorough renovation. The Y. P. S. C. E. co-operated actively in raising the necessary funds. This church dates back to 1632, being one of the few Pilgrim churches which have maintained their organization and their faith intact from the beginning. Peregrine White, the first Pilgrim child born in this country, joined it when 77 years old. Rev. Ebenezer Alden was the pastor for 40 years and is still pastor emeritus. Rev. F. W. Manning has now been the pastor five years. Nine new members have been received during the past year, six on confession.

WORCESTER.—Union. The recent A. B. C. F. M. offering exceeded $200. The church has voted to continue the pledge system for benevolence for next year. The ladies held their annual fair for two days, clearing over $450.——Plymouth reports an S. S. membership of 586. The additions last year numbered 15 on confession and 18 by letter. Gifts for home missions amounted to $1,620, foreign $3,999, and the total benevolence $11,534.——Pilgrim has organized a chapter of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, the fourth chapter in the city.

FISHERVILLE.—Union. The new bell has arrived and been placed in position and was used for the first time last Sunday and gave good satisfaction. It weighs 1,300 pounds. The Men's League of the church is in a flourishing condition.

SPENCER.—First. At a recent service under the auspices of the Men's Sunday Evening League, a collection of $73 was taken for the Armenian Relief. The present membership of the league is 135. It is doing more effective work than at any previous time. A special feature this winter has been an instructive lecture course of high grade which is well attended from the neighboring towns. The pastor, Rev. S. W. Brown, and wife recently gave a reception to the league at the parsonage.——The late Deacon J. L. Bush in his will gave $500 each to the Y. P. S. C. E., the Sunday school and the Ladies' Charitable Society, also to the church committee $1,000, the income only to be used each year at Christmas for the benefit of the poor of the church. Other benevolent gifts were to the C. H. M. S., and the A. B. C. F. M. $5,000 each, the Evangelistic Association of New England and the Children's Hospital, Boston, $1,000 each, the hospital cottages at Baldwinsville, Mass., $500 and the Spencer Good Samaritan Rooms $300.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Rev. F. L. Goodspeed occupied his pulpit Sunday morning for the first time since his illness, but was unable to preach in the evening.——Park. The financial year of the church has just closed. A balance in the treasury remains after paying all bills, and the debt of the church has been reduced $5,578.——Emmanuel. Rev. R. M. Taft, State evangelist of the Massachusetts H. M. S., conducted special meetings last week.

HUNTINGTON.—Second is passing through deep sorrow because of the sudden removal of one of its strong pillars, Deacon Schuyler Clark. While at his cottage home at Norwich Pond he broke through the ice, and, though he fought valiantly for life and had every possible help at hand, he lived only long enough after his rescue to be carried to his cottage. From early boyhood he had been closely identified with this place. He served prominently on the board of selectmen for many years, and as representative from his district in 1887. For 25 years he has been a loyal member of this church. Special respect and honor were publicly shown on the day of his funeral.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—Williston had 200 persons at the bounteous annual supper Dec. 14. Excellent reports came from all departments. The Sunday school has been graded and an intermediate department organized. The Junior Endeavor Society has doubled its membership and attendance. The church benevolences were $2,795, an increase of $350 over last year. This is the seventh year of Rev. D. M. Pratt's pastorate.——Fourth. Mr. T. A. Smythe, a recent graduate of McGill University, Montreal, was ordained and installed as pastor Dec. 14. This is the first installed pastor of this colored church. The recent incorporation of the church under Mr. Smythe's efficient leadership made a settled pastor possible for the first time. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. G. Merrill, D. D.

BIDDEFORD.—Pavilion has requested Rev. F. P. Estabrook to reconsider his resignation, which it declines to accept.——Second. Rev. T. A. Frey's recent Sunday evening address on The Causes and Preventives of Crime attracted much attention, and the congregation was unusually large.

New Hampshire.

KEENE.—First. The pastor, Rev. W. G. Poor, is giving a series of Sunday evening lectures on the Pilgrim's Progress, supplemented by the stereopticon. They have attracted a large attendance. The report at the late annual meeting of the S. S. association gave an enrollment of 404, with a flourishing home department and a well-organized mission school.

DOVER.—First. A new order for the Sunday evening service lays special emphasis on musical features. A large chorus occupies the front seats. Singing by the congregation and solos vary the program. A brief sermon is preached. Since the new order began the attendance has more than doubled.

PORTSMOUTH.—North held a service of commemoration, celebrating its 225th anniversary, Dec. 13. The exercises were largely responsive and choral. Rev. L. H. Thayer is pastor.

HANOVER.—The increasing number of students in the college has started a movement for enlarging Rollin's Chapel.

In Claremont Rev. J. B. Lawrence, the pastor, has established a Friday evening service for boys, to whom he gives a practical talk.——The ladies in Salmon Falls lately netted $100 from a Christmas sale.——The community about Acworth has met a great loss in the death of Miss A. R. Mitchell of the A. M. A., who had been a worker in North Carolina. ——Pilgrim Church, Nashua, receives $10,000 from the late Mrs. Mary C. Belcher.——By the will of the late T. H. Richardson Mont Vernon receives $400.

Vermont.

WALLINGFORD.—This church mourns the loss of Deacon Samuel E. Rogers, a leading and exemplary member and liberal supporter. One of his sons, Rev. E. E. Rogers, is pastor of the church in Lanesville, O.

MORRISVILLE.—The new house of worship is nearing completion. Nine handsome memorial windows are in place. The building will be lighted by electricity.

NEWFANE.—The new parsonage is completed, and the pastor, Rev. Smith Norton, and his wife and many friends enjoyed the house warming.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE—Central. The music in the services has the help of both quartet and chorus. The Portuguese mission of the church requested a Thanksgiving service in its chapel instead of the usual Thanksgiving dinner which the mother church provides.——Beneficent. A stirring meeting was held Dec. 14, in the interests financially of the Tuskegee Institute and of the best welfare of the whole South. Pres. B. T. Washington gave an address. Mayor McGuinness made brief remarks. The institute quartet sang. The congregation was large, and the collection was considerable.——Plymouth. The course of Sunday evening sermons on Notable Johns, by Rev. S. H. Woodrow, has been successful in attracting a houseful of hearers.

PAWTUCKET.—Weeden Street has held a church week of prayer for the deepening of spiritual experience under the leadership of Miss Deborah Knox.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—Plymouth. The first anniversary of the church in its new building was celebrated Dec. 13. The pastor, Rev. W. W. McLane, D. D., preached a special sermon. The church is progressing in its new environment in a rapidly growing section.——United. The Men's Club service last Sunday evening was addressed by Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke of New York on The Poetry of Tennyson. ——Grand Avenue. Rev. Dr. Burdett Hart was ordained pastor of this church 50 years ago last month. He has served as its pastor during two periods, one of 13 and another of 16 years, with a period of 13 years between them. He has been pastor emeritus since 1889, but has continued his ministry at large by writing several interesting volumes.

MANCHESTER.—Second. Rev. C. H. Barber has recently preached a sermon in recognition of his 10th anniversary as pastor. During his period of work a new house of worship has been erected, costing $25,000. An equal sum has been raised for home expenses, and over $10,000 contributed to benevolent work. The additions during the decade have been 126. Of these 25 came last year.

NORFOLK.—Two hundred and thirteen members of the local Sunday school visited New Haven and Yale last Thursday as the guests of Miss Eldridge, one of the active workers of the church. This is the reward for attendance a certain number of Sundays during the year.

NEW BRITAIN.—First. The death of Adna Hart removes the oldest resident of the town and the oldest member of the First Church. Born in 1804, he joined the church in 1821, and was for a number of years tithing man. In his will he left $100 to the church.

BRIDGEPORT.—By the will of the late Mrs. M. B. Loomis of this city the C. H. M. S. and the A. B. C. F. M. each receive $5,000.

Many revivals are, or will be shortly, in progress throughout the State. Several churches will unite with those of other denominations in evangelistic meetings in January.——Two lady evangelists are holding evening meetings in Center Church, Barkhamstead.——The church at East Hartford has sent a barrel to the South; and West Hartford has sent goods to the New York poor valued at $90. Wapping, Trumbull and Thompson will also send boxes and barrels to missionaries in the South and West. ——Rev. L. M. Kenneston is convalescing after a long illness.——Union Church, Rockville, has raised about $1,100 towards its debt.——The Ekonk church is being repaired and painted.——The King's Daughters at Collinsville netted $70 by a recent enterprise.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

WILMINGTON.—A remarkable work of grace is in progress on this field. For some weeks the new pastor, Rev. H. A. Johnston, has been conducting special work and visiting daily from house to house. It is believed that not less than 40 have been converted, and in some cases whole households. The field has been long without a pastor and somewhat distracted by divisions. The religious interest has been accompanied by material fruits in putting the parsonage into much-needed repair and now in ceiling the church.

MUNNSVILLE.—The meeting house, after having been closed some weeks, was opened Dec. 13, newly frescoed and decorated, with a new carpet also. Rev. Ethan Curtis preached the sermon. An effort was made to clear the indebtedness and the response was so hearty that the amount received was in excess of that asked. In the evening a union congregation of neighboring churches assembled. Rev. E. A. Tuttle is pastor.

MILLVILLE.—A quite remarkable work of reorganizing this church and recalling it to Christian feeling and worship has been done by Rev. H E. Gurney, this being the field where the recent pastor, Mr. Keeley, did so much harm. Mr. Gurney is now general missionary of the H. M. S.

MORAVIA.—Rev. W. H. Hampton, the pastor, is much afflicted in the death of his wife, who has been failing for some months. She leaves two children. Her death casts a gloom over the church as she was much beloved.

RENSSELAER FALLS.—Special meetings now being held with encouraging results have aroused a new spirit of harmony. The pastor, W. D. Eddy, is assisted by neighboring ministers.

New Jersey.

GLEN RIDGE.—The pastor, Rev. F. J. Goodwin, and his wife were given an old-fashioned surprise party in the house of one of his parishioners on the fifth anniversary of their marriage, a recent date. A substantial gift was presented them in the form of a considerable sum of money. The senior circle of King's Daughters has begun aiding at the Bowery Mission in New York. Mrs. J. L. Scudder on a recent Sunday morning gave a stirring address on the Jersey City People's Palace and Day Nursery. The ladies of the church have just held a "sale" as a part of their effort to raise the church debt. This is preparatory to the new task of enlarging the house of worship which will soon be necessary. The pastor, finding his new year's reception last year so much appreciated, will make it an annual custom.

JERSEY CITY.—Tabernacle completed the consolidation of the South Bergen Reformed Church with itself last week in the house of the latter; 200 members of the Reformed Church were received as members of this united Congregational church. Dr. J. L. Scudder, pastor at the Tabernacle, presided and Rev. W. D. Grant, former pastor of the Reformed Church, participated.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Rev. E. A. Steiner and his people have been strengthened by a recent series of meetings held first by Rev. W. F. McMillen of the Sunday School Society assisted by Mrs. Bryner, the primary teacher, of Chicago, and later by a week of meetings attended by Rev. G. E. Albrecht, the missionary to Japan, who was converted in this church, and by Rev. Dr. W. H. Warren of Michigan, a former pastor. The fruit of the reunion is shown in a decided growth of fellowship. For the firs[t] time in the history of the church Forefathers' Day was observed with a typical New England supper and an appropriate address by Rev. Sydney Strong. ——Lagonda Avenue. The death of Mrs. S. A. Fay, the mother of two of our missionaries in West Central Africa, is severely felt by this church.

HUDSON.—The close of the year brings encouraging reports from all departments. Improvements are recorded, and a deep spiritual condition prevails. The number of removals by death and letter have been fully made up by additions. Hereafter the standing committee of the church, called the council, will be composed of the officers and the heads of each department of work. Rev. C. H. Small is pastor.

Illinois.

HAVANA celebrated its first anniversary of late by dedicating a new house of worship. Superintendent Tompkins and Dr. G. R. Wallace of Chicago participated by preaching. Nearly $1,600 of the $1,750 necessary to pay the indebtedness was obtained. The church was organized to meet an apparent need in the vicinity. The pastor, Rev. J. M. Sutherland, has faithfully labored, and is much beloved by the people and esteemed in the community.

WAVERLY, after an interval of several weeks, met in its renovated house the first Sunday in December. Among the improvements are thorough repainting inside and out, repapering, a tin roof, stained glass windows, paneled steel ceiling, a new bell tower and electric lights. The former pastor, Rev. J. B. Fairbank, D. D., preached at the reopening. The union service at night had an address by the Methodist pastor.

FRANKFORT.—Rev. C. F. VanAuken, State evangelist, has just closed a successful period assisting Rev. Z. T. Walker, the pastor. Much of the time the building was far too small to accommodate the people. The village and surrounding country have experienced a great awakening.

Indiana.

DUNKIRK opened its new house last week, Supt. E. D. Curtis preaching in the morning and Rev. J. W. Wilson in the evening. The beautiful structure occupies a conspicuous location in the city and is a monument to faithfulness and sacrifice. It is of stone and brick veneer, and, besides the auditorium, has parlors and reading, kindergarten, study and lecture rooms. The cost, with the lot, was about $9,500.

FORT WAYNE.—Plymouth has a brotherhood of upwards of 40 men. Home missionary day was held recently, the pastor, Rev. J. S. Ainslie, speaking on Christianity and Our Country, and $70 were received. The church starts with a list of 140 subscribers to Congregational Work.

Michigan.

TAWAS CITY.—Rev. A. M. Hills has closed a two weeks' series of meetings in this place recently. Over 100 persons made a profession. The churches of the town have been brought together in an unusually fraternal way.

CONSTANTINE.—A great revival has resulted in 140 accessions to the churches which were united in the movement, the Congregational church receiving its share of blessing.

Clarksville recently gave its pastor a pleasant surprise reception.——Rev. C. F. Hawley has seven neighborhoods under his care in Garden.——Mrs. Joel Martin, wife of the general missionary of the upper peninsula, has completed a successful revival series in Brimley.——Sault Ste. Marie is encouraged by large accessions.——Wyandotte has just held its annual church week, all departments holding interesting services.

Wisconsin.

WILLIAMS BAY.—A council met Dec. 18 to recognize the new church recently organized. The church was composed of members coming from six different denominations, besides some on confession.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

MONTICELLO.—The Hartsough meetings extended through three weeks and aroused deep and widespread interest. The opera house was filled nightly with interested crowds, 410 persons signed cards and about 200 others asked for prayers.

MUSCATINE.—German. Special meetings are in progress, under the direction of Evangelist J. F. Grove. There have been several conversions and the meetings are growing in interest. Rev. Jacob Fath is pastor.

KINGSLEY.—Rev. R. W. Jamison of the Mayflower Church, Sioux City, is assisting Rev. G. A. Conrad in a series of meetings, and Rev. R. W. Harris co-operates with Rev. H. L. Wissler in services at Exira.

PRAIRIE CITY.—Special meetings are now in progress, Rev. A. F. Irvine of Avoca assisting the pastor, Rev. J. J. Mitchell. A recent donation visit to the parsonage added materially to the household supplies.

A series of H. M. rallies began Nov 15 and will close Dec. 20. Secretary Douglass is being assisted in the campaign by Mrs. H. S. Caswell of New York and Sec. H. D. Ward of Chicago. Twenty-nine churches have been visited, and appointments for five more meetings have been made.

The stoves in the audience-room at Hawarden have been displaced by a furnace in the basement.

Minnesota.

WADENA.—The Ladies' Missionary Society Dec. 13 presented an instructive program on the work of the A. M. A., brief sketches of the different fields being interspersed with jubilee songs. The collection completed the balance needed for a share in the jubilee fund. Similar services are contemplated, presenting the work of the other national societies in this interesting and impressive manner.

EXCELSIOR.—During the seven months' pastorate of Rev. C. L. Mears the debt has been liquidated and congregations have increased. At the last communion 12 persons united, five on confession. Addresses at the annual meeting showed the large opportunity of this church, the second of the denomination formed in the State.

BURTRUM.—Rev. E. N. Ruddock, for many years a missionary in Minnesota and for three years pastor at Burtrum and Grey Eagle, has resigned on account of poor health. During his ministry a revival of religion occurred, bringing 50 persons into the Pill after Pudding.

When Christmas comes and Santa brings
His Good-Will Sauce for plum puddings,
With over-eager appetite
We put the dainties out of sight;
Then toss and tumble through the night
And dream of hobgoblins and things
With pudding heads and turkey wings.
Next day, and many days—we're ill,
And all because no Ayer's Pill
Followed the pudding or the pie;
In future let's resolve to try
Pill after pudding—or the pie;
That pill of Ayer's, which, for skill
To cure, is called—"The pill that will."

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Financial and mercantile bodies were considerably upset last week by the adoption of the resolutions recognizing Cuban independence by the Senate Committee. The unanimous manner in which these resolutions went through that committee contributed largely to the shock, but the subsequent declaration of Executive disapproval and their cool reception by the Senate have restored confidence.

In general trade there is not much that is new to state. The Christmas trade has been excellent, and merchants express themselves satisfied with results, particularly when compared with last year and the year previous. In staple lines, however, the movement of merchandise is slow and prices show rather more weakness than strength. Still this is not considered unusual for the end of December when trade is usually dull and people are preparing to take account of stock and make a general clean-up for the new year. After the first week in January it is thought that business will be considerably better and gradually improve until we find ourselves in a very active spring season.

Iron and steel products are now depressed by reason of large supplies and light demand. The reduction in the price of steel rails recently by the big pool that has controlled the price is taken as a confession of weakness, and has influenced buyers of all iron and steel products to hold off for still lower values. In this expectation they may find themselves disappointed, for recuperation usually begins, not only in iron but in most staple lines, after Jan. 1 Woolens and dry goods are in slow movement and prices are scarcely satisfactory. The manufacturers, however, look to the spring trade to clean up, not only surplus stocks, but to keep them very busy besides.

THE RELATION OF SCIENCE TO REVELATION.

Seldom does the Boston Ministers' Meeting listen to a more racy and suggestive, as well as instructive, address than Prof. G. Frederick Wright's last Monday morning. He began by telling informally his personal experience in becoming interested in scientific study and undertaking geological investigations. A large portion of the hour was spent in disabusing his hearers of the idea that science deals with certainties. He showed conclusively that the paradoxes to be found in the theories of evolution, gravitation and the atomic constitution of matter are as difficult to explain as the doctrines of the Trinity, original sin and the creation of the world out of nothing.

Dr. Wright declared that in his opinion our young people do not have their attention sufficiently called to Butler's ground that probability is the guide of our life, and that in matters of science and theology as well as in practical conduct we are obliged to depend upon our best judgment. The latter part of the address was devoted to an interesting discussion of the evidences of the antiquity of man as manifested in the study of glacial phenomena.

QUALITY VS. PRICE.—It is a popular fancy that with the large number of bicycle manufacturers in the field, there must be an over-production before long, and the prices of wheels take a tumble, because the law of supply and demand is bound to govern. There is no doubt the law of supply and demand will govern; but as long as it does, prices of good wheels are likely to remain upon their present basis. Twenty years have passed since the expiration of the last essential patent on the sewing machine. It was then freely predicted that prices of these machines would be cut in two; but supply and demand governed then just as it does today. The high grade machines that were worth their price still command the same price, because there are still sensible people who know that cheapness in the construction of a machine means dearness in the expense of its operation. Although bicycles and sewing machines can be bought at any price one wishes to pay—from $15 upward—yet there are plenty of customers for the standard makes at the higher rates. The competition of the cheaper machines simply incites the makers of the higher priced ones to renewed efforts for improvement of quality by the use of superior material, skill in workmanship and factory facilities. Referring to sewing machines, a statement contained in a catalogue recently issued by the Singer Manufacturing Company accurately and concisely states the relation between quality and price, as follows: "The fact that Singer sewing machines lead all others is due to the extreme care taken to use only the best materials and the most effective means for their fine mechanical manipulation. It is only by the use of such means that really first-class sewing machines can be made. Such machines excel the products of minor establishments lacking these facilities in the same degree that the modern high class chronometer excels the equally modern timepiece intended simply for waking the servant. The latter has no permanent value, and soon wears out; the former renders accurate service during a lifetime or more. The difference between the cost of a high class sewing machine, embodying the best of materials and workmanship, and one made of cheap materials in the cheapest way, is soon eaten up by the added cost of the latter for repairs and lost time in the workroom."

TO HOLD 400.—They are selling long and low book cabinets at the Paine Furniture Warerooms on Canal Street which accommodate 400 volumes in a single cabinet. These long compartment cabinets are usually hard to obtain, and we take the opportunity of calling the attention of our readers to the fact that they are now to be found in Boston. They are not expensive.

400=Volume Case.

We have constant calls for a long and low compartment bookcase which shall fill a wide wall space, and provide generous storage capacity.

In response we now offer this design, having shelf space for four hundred ordinary volumes, with a small inclosed closet which may be used for rare or private books or for other valuables.

The size of the Cabinet demands extra care in the workmanship. The wood is a special order of San Domingo Mahogany, and it is constructed in the finest manner in every part. There are really three separate cabinets. The center cabinet has double doors with quadrant glass.

All the cabinets have stout locks and adjustable shelves. There are eight massive carved feet, and the frieze and panels are richly graven. It is a cabinet that would adorn any library.

It is not expensive.

church. A commodious parsonage has also been secured.

BERTHA.—An extinct church has been revived and plans are secured for a building, a part of the funds being already subscribed. A pastor will be sought when the condition of the H. M. treasury permits.

Kansas.

OVERBROOK contributes annually and regularly to each of the seven benevolent societies. A large placard containing their names, and the date on which each collection will be taken, hangs upon the church wall the year round; and the pastor so often calls attention to the placard and explains it that the people are kept familiar with the meaning of the initials of each society and the general character of its work.

TOPEKA.—First, by a single special effort, recently provided for all deficits and expenses for the church year ending Nov. 1, 1897, a total of $4,160. The effect of this upon the enthusiasm and spiritual life of the church has been most favorable. Eighteen persons were received to membership Dec. 3, including seven on confession.

GARFIELD.—This frontier church, with three vigorous out-stations, held its annual meeting Dec. 4, 50 persons responding to the roll-call. Reports were read from all departments and showed 12 conversions, 12 accessions, four removals. This church is doing an excellent evangelizing work over a large territory.

HIAWATHA, under the leadership of its new pastor, has assumed the payment of $120, the entire H. M. grant to one of the frontier missionaries in the State for the remaining four months of his commission.

Nebraska.

INDIANOLA.—Increased spiritual interest rejoices the pastor, Rev. A. S. Houston, in church and congregation. A Tuesday afternoon prayer meeting has been started by the women to pray especially for its deepening power.

COWLES.—The special services, in which Rev. Samuel Deakin was assisted by Rev. C. G. Murphy of Wallace, closed Dec. 13. There have been a good number of conversions, and the community has been greatly benefited.

RED CLOUD.—The pastor, Rev. O. E. Ticknor, beside preaching here and at Indian Creek, has begun services at Inavale, a station on the Burlington Road, where formerly there was a Congregational church.

North Dakota.

FARGO.—Scandinavian. The work is making substantial gain under the efficient lead of Rev. L. J. Pederson, who is also doing an important work in other parts of the State. There is now an opportunity for Congregationalists to do telling work among this people, there being a decided tendency towards this denomination on the part of the Swedish mission friends and other independent Scandinavian Christians. Their coming into closer contact with the Congregational church is of mutual benefit.

ABERCROMBIE.—Cheering news comes from this field. The audience-room has been greatly improved by lowering the ceiling and decorating the walls. The people enter heartily into the work projected by Rev. W. A. Wilkinson and his devoted wife, in which Minneapolis friends assist. Interest in spiritual matters is also increasing. Situated in a Scandinavian community, the church is making friends with these people, and most cordial relations exist between Mr. Wilkinson and the Lutheran pastor.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

PASADENA.—First. Over 300 members attended the recent annual meeting. Reports showed a successful year and a hopeful outlook. The pastor, Rev. H. W. Lathe, has been conducting a large class in the study of Christian doctrines.——Lake Avenue was organized Nov. 25, 38 persons seeking membership. The Sunday school numbers about 150. Evangelist H. G. Smead preaches. The church has adopted the Council Manual.

Oregon.

WESTON.—The meeting house, seating 300 persons and costing $1,300, was dedicated Nov. 15. The same day a Sunday school of 80 members was organized. The church was formed 18 months or more ago, but rented a place to worship from another denomination which would not permit a Sunday school to be held. It is a little over three years since Rev. A. R. Olds went to this field. Since then, with the little aid that Superintendents Clapp and Rowley of the C. H. M. S. and C. S. S. and P. S. could give from their other pressing duties, four churches and four Sunday schools have been organized, and four good meeting houses and one parsonage built, free from all incumbrance except the small loans of the C. C. B. S. These churches are in a farming region about 20 miles square, much of it in sight of the spot where Dr. and Mrs. Whitman with 12 others were killed by the Indians 59 years ago Nov. 29. It was then a foreign field under the care of the American Board.

Rev. R. A. Rowley of the C. S. S. and P. S. organized Nov. 22 a strong Sunday school of 30 members at a point 15 miles south of Jacksonville, Jackson County.——Eugene has received 23 accessions since July 1, when Rev. R. C. Brooks began work.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, DEC. 18.

Mrs. H. H. Leavitt opened the meeting with a Bible reading from Ezek. 47. She spoke of the comparative ease with which we can interpret God's providences when they are not too deep for our understanding, but as the waters rise higher about us the problem becomes more difficult, capable of being solved only by our faith.

Prayers for the proper reception and use of this great gift of God were offered, as well as earnest petitions for Miss Mary Morrill of North China, whose name was upon the prayer calendar for the day. Miss Kyle followed with a letter from Miss Morrill and her associate, Miss Gould. Miss Colby of Osaka, Japan, spoke of the value of the missionary's home life and influence upon the natives who come in contact with it as household servants and helpers. Many such become Christians and go out as workers into other parts of the field. The greatest good done by missionaries is in pure living. Miss Child told of visiting Miss Morrill and Miss Gould and of the valuable work they are doing. Their school is a feeder for that in Peking. At Miss Child's request two gate gods were taken down from the entrance to the new premises recently purchased for Christian work and given to her, and in the place of these and other symbols of heathenism were put up Christian texts—a sign of the way in which the gospel of Jesus Christ is slowly but surely replacing the old superstitions in China.

Mrs. Leavitt brought a package of Scripture texts neatly written on slips of paper and tied together in small packets, the work of children in a town where it is difficult to arouse the interest of the older people sufficiently to bring contributions to missions. Under the lead of the pastor's wife these little ones had made this offering to the cause. The meeting closed with prayer by Miss Ellen M. Stone of Bulgaria.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

ELY—In Lowell, Dec. 15, Mrs. Laura M. Ely, aged 71 yrs. She was a helpful and devoted member of High Street Church, and although for a long time an invalid she maintained an interest in all forms of Christian activity. She left bequests to the Woman's Auxiliary of the Home Missionary Society, to the A. M. A. and to the Y. M. C. A. of Lowell.

FOSTER—In Springfield, Dec. 17, Samuel K. Foster, the veteran deacon of the North Church, of heart disease. He was born in Rutland, April 25, 1816, but has lived in Springfield since 1869. He has been a member of the North Church diaconate since 1874.

PECK—In Lenox, Dec. 14, Catherine W., widow of the late George O. Peck, for many years a prominent member of the Congregational Church. Uniting with the church under Dr. Shepard, Mrs. Peck has ever been a faithful member. None cherished more lovingly than she the memory of Dr. Alden, none through all these years was more enthusiastic as a reader of The Congregationalist.

WALKER—In Milton, Wis., Dec. 8, Rev. William Walker, for many years a missionary to West Central Africa, aged 88 yrs. He was a man of decided ability and the notes of his observations while in Africa constitute a valuable contribution to geographical and ethnological science.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are unequaled for clearing the voice. Public speakers and singers the world over use them.

THE top half of the back cover of this week's issue is used by B. T. Babbitt, the well-known manufacturer. His re-entry into the baking powder field is announced in a delightful manner. He offers to send etchings to present and future patrons, if any one will send six cents in stamps. Care should be taken in applying to use the address mentioned in the advertisement and not Mr. Babbit's name or address, and thus avoid any confusion.

LAKE SHORE CALENDAR FOR 1897.—The 1897 calendar of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway is one of the most pleasing and unique calendars ever issued. The design is a government mail pouch (the Lake Shore's trade-mark) richly printed in brown and gold on heavy enameled cardboard, size 8 x 15 inches. It will be sent free anywhere on receipt of six cents in postage to cover mailing by applying to A. J. Smith, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agent, Cleveland, O.

TRAVEL VIA THE SAVANNAH LINE.—The Savannah Line fleet comprises the safest, the fastest, the most comfortable and the most elegantly furnished steamers plying the waters of the Atlantic coast. Built by one of the greatest shipbuilders of America, at enormous cost, the steamers of the Savannah Line are unexcelled by any ship of modern construction for elegance, convenience, comfort and safety, and are only exceeded in size by the great transatlantic steamers. The staterooms are more commodious than any other coastwise or transatlantic steamer, each room containing two large berths. Such airy and elegantly furnished staterooms, with their luxurious baths, invite the repose which one may look for in a first-class hotel. The Savannah Line being the great connecting link between the North and South, it is enabled to secure the benefits of both the Northern and Southern markets, thus furnishing the table of each steamer with the freshest vegetables, fruits, all the delicacies, etc., which money can buy. This all without any extra cost to the passenger over and above the price of ticket. For illustrated folder address Richardson & Barnard, 20 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.

SALT RHEUM ON THE HANDS.—I was all run down and full of aches and pains, but since I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I feel like a new person. My little girl was troubled with salt rheum which broke out on her hands. She took several bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla together with Hood's Pills and these medicines cured her." Mrs. J. Twombly, Mattapan, Mass.

Artistic Originality in Dress

SOLD ONLY BY

The Singer Manuf'g Company

OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD

THE correct construction of a costume according to one's own ideas can best be accomplished at home by one's self. The most convenient stitching mechanism for the purpose is the Singer Automatic, making the single-thread chain-stitch. Its simplicity of parts, easy operation, and the excellence of its work, specially commend its use to the dilettante dressmaker desiring to express her artistic perceptions in the most appropriate form.

Having all the advantages claimed for other "automatic" sewing-machines, the Silent Singer has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by comparison. Of faultless construction and finish, it is absolutely the lightest-running, the simplest and most compact. It is more easily threaded, and its parts are better protected from dust. The broad treadle better of the operator, because it is lower and the position of the feet can be changed at will. These points are worthy careful consideration by those of delicate health or unaccustomed to continuous use of a sewing machine.

"BAY STATE" Musical Instruments

Distinction

Talent and work are the only grounds for distinction. We claim distinction for "Bay State" Mandolins, Guitars, Banjos, Zithers and Flutes, and we support the claim with evidence of work. 27 Awards at the principal expositions of the world, for instance. They have won the only American gold medals. Facts speak—and the testimony of experts pronounce the "BAY STATE" instruments the highest achievement in their line.

As the originator of Yeast or BAKING POWDERS in 1849, I was for many years the largest manufacturer of this class of goods until, through the competition from cheap and adulterated articles, the alternative presented itself of either offering a similar quality of goods or abandoning the field. I chose the latter, and for years I have been out of the market; but now, through a revulsion of public sentiment against adulterated goods, I am enabled to offer a new powder, which I have been experimenting with and perfecting during the interim.

B. T. Babbitt's
BEST Baking Powder.

I recommend this powder as absolutely pure—it contains neither alum, lime, or other injurious substances, and is unexcelled by any in the market.

The illustrations in this advertisement are reduced reproductions of beautiful artists' proof etchings. Upon receipt of six cents in stamps to pay for postage, I will send one of these etchings FREE. The other can be obtained by sending 25 Best Soap wrappers, or 10 1776 Soap Powder fronts, or the coupons found in the cans of our Best Baking Powder. The regular size is 14x28 inches. Be particular to use only the following address, viz.: "Dept. G.," P. O. Box 2917, New York City.

At the Gates

If labor calls you, pass the gates with praise,
Since God first wrought,
And willed to man hushed nights and toiling days;

If death, firm-souled approach the untried lot,
For life not less than death transcends our thought.

If love be yours, O prize its hour of bliss;
Love, the great parent, hallows all that is;

Love, Labor, Death — who fearless owns the three Still walks secure, still dwells in victory.

The Book of The Pilgrimage

An Appreciation from

The Outlook

"New World Pilgrims at Old World Shrines is the title of a superbly printed volume which chronicles the pilgrimage of Congregationalists last summer to England and Holland. The volume is published at the office of The Congregationalist, Boston, and in both text and illustration leaves nothing to be desired. The descriptions of the voyage, of the countries and cities visited, of the eminent men and women seen, of the meetings held, and of all that went to make this pilgrimage a unique experience, are given to us in such attractive manner that we feel as though we too had been making the pilgrimage. More than the value of most illustrations to books, the pictures in this volume add interest. They are almost entirely unhackneyed, and give to us the grateful sight of many men and scenes which have not heretofore found presentation. Such a charming souvenir is likely to stimulate others to take a like pilgrimage."

200 Illustrations. 100 Autographs. Cloth, Beveled, Gilt Top, Gilt Side.

Price $3.00, Postpaid.

FACTS Worth Remembering for 1897

TO begin the new year's church business right you should have a good Church Record Book. The best is the PILGRIM CHURCH RECORD, published by your own society at $2.00 and upward.

HAS your Sunday School Library been replenished recently? Remember some of the best books are issued by YOUR OWN SOCIETY. Some of the new issues are very attractive and teach important lessons.

EVERY Congregational Sunday School should, and most of them do, use the PILGRIM LESSON HELPS. If your school does not, isn't 1897 a good time to begin? Samples free. Our S. S. Record Books are also the best.

NOW is the time for ministers to get some good books for home reading and study. OUR GENERAL CATALOGUE gives our reduced prices on the best books from all publishers. Send for one.

EVERYBODY should have a list of the year's S. S. Lessons, Y. P. S. C. E. Topics, etc., handy for reference. Our PILGRIM SUNDAY SCHOOL TREASURY has all this and much more. 4 cts.; $2.00 per 100; $2.40, postpaid.

WHY not start a HOME DEPARTMENT in your Sunday School? It is the greatest Sunday School extension movement of modern times. Hazard's Home Department book, 25 cts., tells you all about it.

YOU cannot afford to longer use Cruden's Concordance now that WALKER'S is such an immense improvement upon it, and only $2.00. We want agents to sell Walker's. It has 50,000 more references than Cruden's.

EVERY college girl should have the "MARY LYON YEAR BOOK," containing a daily thought from this great pioneer in women's higher education. $1.25; beautifully bound. $1.00, postpaid, to any one mentioning this advertisement.

ARE you aware that business sent to the Congregational bookstores helps SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSION WORK? Our business department is the largest single contributor to it, appropriating $3,000 to $5,000 annually.

REMEMBER that the appropriation we now make could be doubled if we had EVERY CONGREGATIONALIST AS A CUSTOMER. May we have you, and your church and school?

"Young people who grow up on ST. NICHOLAS are pretty sure to like the best literature."

Home Journal, Boston, Dec. 5, 1896.

THE JANUARY

ST. NICHOLAS

New Year's Number.

Containing a delightful table of contents, including a complete long story—

"DANNY AND THE 'MAJOR.'"

A Story of the Plains.

Danny is a soldier's boy, and the "Major" is a horse. Mrs. Custer, who read the manuscript, said of it, "It is true to the very life: to read it is like being there."

THE SERIAL STORIES

of ST. NICHOLAS for the coming year are especially noteworthy. One, "Master Skylark," by John Bennett, illustrated by Reginald Birch, is a story of the days of Shakspere, the poet himself being one of the characters, although the hero and heroine are a boy and a girl.

Begin the New Year

by subscribing to ST. NICHOLAS for the young folks of your household. The volume began with the November number and several of the serials commence in that issue. All new subscribers who begin with January may receive the November and December numbers free of charge (December is the beautiful Christmas issue) on request. HOME MISSIONARY FUND.

The great proportions which our Armenian Fund has assumed seem to have somewhat overshadowed this important object. We feel sure that we shall not appeal in vain, however, for sufficient money to continue all the home mission subscribers at present on our list and add a few that have come to us with specially urgent appeals. Shall not this fund be made up within the next two weeks, so that we can then credit the subscriptions promptly and so relieve the minds of our earnest workers on the frontier, who watch anxiously for the dates of their papers to be changed? Here are two typical letters:

"I am now an old man, past 84 years. I have preached the gospel more than 46 years, and my statement is not figurative, but literal, if I say I am very poor in this world's goods. My salary where I am now preaching averages just about $150 a year."

"My dear sirs, what about my paper for next year? I do not see that I can pay for it very well, and I do not know how to get along without it. Did some of those generous New Englanders know my circumstances, and how much we as a family value the paper, how much benefit and comfort it is to my family and how much help for me in my work, I think we should have it free for another year. Please let me know as soon as possible. If you can see your way clear to send it gratis for another year, well I shall be very thankful, if not, then I must try to pay for it and be without something else that I can spare better than The Congregationalist."

IS there not a special lesson in the proximity of Christmas and New Year's? The one festival is so full of gladness. The other great turning point hushes and solemnizes our spirits. It is thus that God would teach us that in the true life the joyous and serious elements are never far apart. Every fresh realization of the joy that Jesus brings into the world is a summons to more earnest grappling with the serious work of life. The best wish we can offer our readers as 1897 slips into the place of 1896 is that the joy and the solemnity of living in God's world may be understood by them more perfectly than ever before.

It is pleasant to note that the religious observance of Christmas Day in these later years is not being confined to the Roman Catholic and Episcopalian churches. Reports have reached us of services in Congregational churches, and we could wish that year by year we might chronicle a larger number of such gatherings. One western Massachusetts church transferred its regular Friday night prayer meeting to the morning of that day, and the change was altogether satisfactory. Other churches recognized the day by a special and extra service. There can be no question that many minds and hearts are in the mood for the right sort of a religious assemblage on Christmas Day. Time enough is left for the family reunion and all the festivity and merrymaking natural to the day. The average old world Christian would think it as strange to see on Christmas Day the doors of the cathedrals and churches closed as to observe such a phenomenon on Sunday. Would not American Christianity be the gainer if the religious element in Christmas Day received more general public recognition?

Pres. W. J. Tucker has always been a careful student of the religious conditions and needs of great cities. When professor at Andover he, more than any other one man, furnished the impetus which led to the foundation of the Andover, now the South End, House in Boston. As pastor of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church in New York city for a number of years, he was daily brought face to face with the problems of a great city, and though of late years he has not resided in the midst of the stream of city life he has kept closely conversant with its tendencies and its special claim upon the church of Christ. If these facts are borne in mind the reader will approach his paper published in this week's issue with the expectation of receiving stimulus and suggestion. Dr. Tucker has certainly diagnosed with great accuracy the situation as it confronts us today. His are not the views of an alarmist, though he does not ignore the menacing elements in city life. He has, however, insight enough to detect the substratum of good and faith enough to believe that this massing together of human beings and of great commercial and industrial forces may be made serviceable to the ends of the kingdom of heaven. The point which he makes that the modern prophets are found in the city instead of in the wilderness is a particularly striking one.

A large proportion of Massachusetts churches already feel a responsibility for supporting the Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, now in its third year of successful operation. We hope, however, to be able to note a considerable increase during 1897 in the number of churches that make a regular contribution to it. At this season, when schedules of benevolence are being made up, let no slip or negligence permit the overlooking of this important cause. The amount desired from each church, one-third of one per cent. of the salary paid its pastor, is small. The board is economically managed. There are no guaranteed funds behind it, and thus far its secretary, Dr. C. B. Rice, has made greater financial sacrifices in its behalf than is generally understood. The more we learn of the patient, delicate and wise work of this organization the more convinced we are that it is an extremely valuable agency in the solution of a tremendous problem. Since last May it has been instrumental in helping nearly one hundred churches to fill the vacant pastoral office. It is consulted by the majority of the churches in the State when desiring a pastor. Besides such direct services the board, without exceeding its proper scope, helps wonderfully in promoting more friendly relations between churches and ministers by giving such counsel as helps to diminish unfortunate complications, to lengthen existing pastorates, to allay discontent and to retrieve the situation in churches where dissension and stagnation have prevailed. What more important service can be rendered to the churches of our order, especially at this juncture, when the hard times accentuate problems of existence and usefulness both for churches and ministers?

The readers of The British Weekly certainly have profited by Dr. Robertson Nicoll's recent visit to this country, for he has written some most interesting letters giving his impressions of life—political, intellectual and religious. We fear we cannot accept his optimistic judgment respecting our daily newspapers, but we are grateful for his kind words concerning authors as deserving of praise as Mr. Cable and Miss Mary E. Wilkins, and editors as noble in their ideals as Mr. Gilder of The Century and Mr. Scudder of The Atlantic. Dr. Nicoll will soon cease contributing these reminiscences of a delightful outing. But American authors will never cease to profit by the influence which his trip must have had in enlarging his stores of knowledge and degree of sympathy for things American. Indeed, he is pledged to the task of securing a larger audience in Great Britain for American books and their authors.

Reconciliation is one of the most important and efficient preliminaries to that special evangelical effort which has been urged upon the churches for the month of January. There are old personal quarrels in some of our churches which, if only half recognized, are a real hindrance to successful work. Until Christians love each other how can they prove that Christ loves the world? The spirit of forgiveness is the spirit of power. The gospel of peace needs to prove itself a means of reconciliation among disciples before it can commend itself to the world as a hopeful means of reconciling men to God. One instance of a long standing quarrel healed by mutual confession and self-sacrifice for Christ's sake, and for better witness of his honor among men, is worth a score of pulpit homilies. It is a time, therefore, for consideration and revision of our causes of dislike and alienation. It will be well to consider whether we would rather see the gospel triumph or cherish a grudge, whether our dislike toward our neighbor is so deep-seated that we cannot forget it in the enthusiasm of a common work for Christ, whether the trespass committed against us is so far beyond forgiveness that we are willing to jeopard both Christ's purpose and our own pardon. The first church members had forgotten jealousies and disagreements and were all with one accord in one place when the Holy Spirit came.

Mr. Herbert Spencer, in the recently issued and final volume of his monumental work, The Principles of Sociology, starting from his own point of view, reaches conclusions respecting the ideal relations of church and state which our Pilgrim Fathers adopted centuries ago and the molders of our national Constitution accepted when they set themselves to their momentous task. Separatism, Mr. Spencer holds, is the logical outcome of Protestantism, and far more in consonance with other present day conditions than its antipodal theory of church polity. Indeed he goes farther and shows that his ideal of a religious state is one of almost anarchic individualism. This being his position we now have the suggestive spectacle of our Dissenting brethren in Great Britain quoting Herbert Spencer as an authority on disestablishment. That Germany is not without those who plead for disestablishment there may be inferred from a recent speech of Dr. Stöcker, the well-known ex-court chaplain, in which he said:

> We must endeavor to bring about the independence of the church, which then would speedily deal with the unorthodox clergy. The state hinders the church in the fulfillment of its legitimate duties, and creates circumstances which divide it into warring sections.

In connection with the resolutions of the faculty of Auburn Theological Seminary relative to Dr. Quint that appear on page 1051, Professor Darling's recollection of a talk with Dr. Quint years ago is pertinent. The two were walking in Auburn, during Dr. Quint's sojourn there, and he was compelled to stop several times while traversing a short distance. He apologized by saying that his physician had told him years ago that the first time he got thoroughly excited he was liable to drop dead. "Well," rejoined Dr. Darling, "how do you manage to control yourself? You have been in some pretty hot debates." To which Dr. Quint laughingly responded, "I say to myself if this speech is worth finishing I will have to keep cool." A characteristic answer surely and one that reveals the man's self-mastery.

1896—THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

No distinct line can be shown dividing the religious from the secular history of the year. This is one of the most notable facts indicating the movement of the Christian Church. Its interest has become increasingly absorbed in present affairs, and its influence in these affairs is more potent than ever before in this century. The most striking proofs of this are at once recalled. The year opened with intense excitement over the President's message concerning the Venezuela boundary. Congress and the secular press were hot for war with England. Lord Salisbury threatened, and the first outburst of public sentiment in Europe encouraged him. But the pulpit in both countries was almost unanimous in its counsels for peace. So, also, was the religious press. Cablegrams between Christian bodies crossed and recrossed the ocean and Christian principle prevailed, with honor to both nations. The church has also been intensely interested in the condition of the Armenians in Turkey, and though it has been powerless to arrest the wholesale murders which have shocked the civilized world it has done something to relieve the sufferings of the survivors.

The church has spoken its convictions in our political campaign. In the main its utterance has been unequivocal in behalf of honesty and righteousness, and at the same time against injustice and oppression. Among its ministers are some of the leaders most trusted in public affairs, such as Dr. Parkhurst, Bishop Potter and Archbishop Ireland. It has led in the most conspicuous efforts to ameliorate the burdens of the people—in purifying municipal government, in maintaining social settlements, in tenement house reforms, in promoting temperance practical rather than ideal. The church has encouraged thorough study of social and political conditions with the purpose to uplift mankind, and if the movements it has advocated have not proved to be always wise, at least it has shown itself sincere. Some ardent reformers have rebuked the church with wide-open mouths for its selfishness and apathy, but with outstretched hands opened as wide to receive its gifts. In a word, the church has held the position it has claimed, to represent the conscience of the community. At the same time the observant eye cannot fail to note a decline in moral standards not yet arrested. The imperative need of the hour is a profound awakening of the people to the necessity of higher conceptions of God, of duty, of righteousness, of immortality.

In theology the developments of the year apparently have not been important, though movements are going forward of the greatest significance. Controversy has mainly centered around questions concerning the nature of God and his manifestations of himself and concerning the inspiration of the Bible. No attempts of consequence have been made to formulate or alter creeds. A few heresy trials have occurred, attracting only passing attention. In fact, a new conception of nature has been gained through scientific investigation. The present effort in theology is to gain a new conception of God in harmony with the scientific conception of nature, but the time is not ripe for its expression in creeds. So, also, the study of literature and of its laws of growth has begotten a new conception of the origin and growth of the sacred writings; but theories of inspiration suited to such a conception find slow acceptance. There appears to be at this time a growing conviction that present revelations of God are as real as those made to holy men of old, though the character and value of those revelations must be tested by long experience and the general verdict of the Christian Church.

The year has witnessed a continued tendency to multiply organizations within the church, till almost every conceivable religious work is represented by leagues, brotherhoods, societies of sons and of daughters, friendly alliances, clubs, associations, unions, orders, bands, fellowships, brigades, republics, settlements—the vocabulary is already nearly exhausted, but is being extended by dividing these organizations into Senior, Junior, etc. There have been, also, a greater number than ever before of summer and winter schools and of great conventions, conferences and congresses. Many of these are quadrennial, like the Methodist General Conference, the Pan-Presbyterian, and the Evangelical Alliance. They have let loose a vast amount of talk and indicated some progress.

The effort for organic church unity has apparently gained little during the year. The Pope has invited Eastern Catholic churches to unite with the Roman Catholics, but his invitation has been rather ungraciously rejected. Several denominations have reiterated anew the advantages which would follow if all the others would unite with them in one body, but without response. Meanwhile, the cause of co-operation among the churches has made substantial gains, as illustrated by federations of churches in New York city and Buffalo. Closer affiliation is taking place between Christians in England and America, promoted by visits of leading clergymen from one country to the other.

The same tendencies which have been noted at home are seen in the mission fields in other lands. Temporarily, at least, missionary efforts have experienced serious reverses, especially in Turkey, Japan, China, Madagascar. The labors of missionaries in these countries have been largely absorbed in giving temporal relief and improving social conditions. Heavy debts are being carried by nearly all the missionary societies, while receipts have steadily lessened. Yet in every nation there are now witnesses to the gospel of Christ, and he has more disciples than ever before.

Only a brief glance can be given to the record of some of the leading denominations. Congregationalists have wiped out the debt of the American Board and have made vigorous efforts to pay the outstanding obligations of their other societies. They have given generously to many of their colleges, stimulated by Dr. Pearsons's gifts. The Congregationalist's pilgrimage to England and Dr. Storrs's fiftieth anniversary have been notable events of the year; while several eminent leaders, such as Drs. N. G. Clark, Alden, Blaisdell and Quint, have passed away.

Presbyterians have been more amicable than for several years. They have ceased efforts to amend their creed, preferring to let it grow obsolescent. They have made no important efforts to discipline their theological seminaries. Dr. Briggs is still under ban, but it seems hardly possible that only four years ago he was solemnly tried by the New York Presbytery on charges that he had taught that Moses did not write the Pentateuch in its present form and that the book of Isaiah has more than one author. Baptists have in the main been harmonious, though the Southern body has been somewhat excited because one of its theological professors has ventured to state the fact that Baptists did not practice immersion before 1641. Methodists have not yet admitted women to their general conferences, but they probably will do so before long. Episcopalians have been treated to a sensation by the pope, who has declared to be invalid ordinations of the Episcopal clergy which he had before been supposed to regard only as irregular. A large portion of that denomination have been amused by the decision, some are deeply disappointed and angry, but the Pope has made no friends from either party and has gained no adherents.

The Roman Catholic Church has lost ground in Canada by its attempt to coerce votes on the Manitoba school question. In the United States the A. P. A., which was organized with much flourish to fight it, has mostly died out. The contest between the liberal and reactionary elements continues, with varying advantages.

The Church Army has found sanction in the Episcopal fold in this country. The Salvation Army has divided and Ballington Booth and his wife have started a new organization, the Volunteers. It has received much sympathy, but the ranks of the other army do not seem to have diminished, and both organizations are doing much good.

1896—THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

The year began with unrest and apprehension, and it ends thus. Look where you will, there are not many, if any, lands where material prosperity and a sense of political security are both to be found. If one is present the other usually is lacking.

The people of this country have sown and reaped bountiful harvests of cereals and fruits, for some of which higher prices have been received than during recent years, yet on the whole the vast quantity consumed at home or exported has not brought to its owners the money which they had hoped it would. Consequently their demand for manufactured goods has waned, and that, in turn, has not stimulated the demand for labor or contributed to its higher remuneration. The failure of the Fifty-fourth Congress to rise to a plane higher than partisanship or sectionalism, and its failure to provide adequate revenue for the nation and security and stability to its credit, contributed to business depression during the first half of the year, while the new and radical issues of the campaign, which lasted from July to November, naturally made anything more than a hand to mouth type of business impossible. The verdict at the recent national election and our unprecedented export trade creating a balance of trade in our favor have put an end, for a time, to the drain of gold from the Treasury, but we apparently shall close the next fiscal year with a deficit of over sixty-four million dollars, and a large increase of interest-bearing indebtedness.

The results of State and municipal elections early in the year plainly indicated a drift of the voters toward the Republican party. But few foresaw how momentous and stirring a contest for the presidency was impending, or how divisive the new issues would be and how thorough the process of disintegration and realignment. The outcome of the Republican national convention at St. Louis contributed toward bettering that party's record for courage and assisted in sharply defining the issue as between a gold or silver standard. The Democratic convention at Chicago rent that party, committed its dominant faction to silver, and introduced issues never before brought before or passed upon by our electors. After a campaign unparalleled in the intensity of feeling aroused, in the appeal made to the intelligence of the voter, in its exemption of the candidates from personal abuse and the curtailment of funds used for illegitimate purposes, the people elected the Republican candidates, their majority in the electoral college being 173 and their popular majority being a little over 600,000. If Mr. McKinley's vote is weighed as well as counted its real significance is more apparent. The people of our oldest, thriftiest, most intelligent and most reputable commonwealths have decided that they will abide by the gold standard if compelled to choose between it and silver monometallism, that they believe in Federal executive authority exerting itself adequately when Federal laws are defied by the lawless, that they will not subject the Federal judiciary to all the mutations of politics which mar our legislative and executive departments, Federal and State.

This verdict, rendered dispassionately by a jury of vast size and heterogeneous composition, has not failed to meet with the acquiescence of all sections and all parties, and it has done more to foster and sustain self respect at home and create respect abroad for Republican institutions than any event in our history since 1861–65.

Municipal reform has gained steadily. Much has been done to develop the conception of the non-partisan administration of city affairs. New York's reform administration on the whole has commended itself, and Tammany by its identification with the silver wing of the Democratic party has not fostered its chances of returning to power. The courts of Maryland have sustained the reform mayor of Baltimore in his effort to defeat the spoilsmen and give to that city so long misgoverned an honest administration, and as the year closes Minneapolis is sternly entering upon a thorough job of municipal house cleaning.

The judicial decisions of the year have not been as notable as those of 1895, but they indicate to a discriminating analyst the fact that our judges are more conservative than their British brethren, and inclined to put the rights of property above those of personality. Laws calculated to subject the great aggregations of capital to restraint are found to be imperfect, and too often on technicalities the state is thrown out of court, while laws calculated to aid organized and unorganized labor too often meet with the same fate. Thus a spirit of distrust and hostility to the judiciary has been created, which found expression in the Chicago platform in a radical plank which many astute critics of that platform considered to be its most pregnant and epoch-marking deliverance. That the decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax has contributed much to increase discontent and distrust it is useless to deny.

The world over it has been a comparatively quiet year among those enlisted in labor unions. With us the times have been such as to make strikes for higher wages most inopportune, and much of the energy and money of organized labor this year found vent in participation in the political contest. Mr. Bryan claims that most of the labor vote was polled for him. Most of the more radical and socialistic of the labor leaders in this country did support him, but they failed to lead the rank and file their way, or the result would have been different. In Great Britain the conservative trades-unionists have won control again in the Labor Congress, and there is also a decided reaction in the Liberal party against as much catering to the labor element in the future as prevailed a few years ago. Nevertheless, the British people are more and more adjusting their factory legislation, their methods of taxation and theories of society's function, so as to better the condition and environment of the wage-earner and lessen his burden of taxation. On the Continent dissensions among the Socialists are as rife as ever, but despite this they increase in number and power, thanks to the fatuity of the governing classes and the terrible burdens which the ever-growing military and naval expenditures fasten on the backs of the plain people.

The reform of the civil service, Federal and local, has steadily progressed without any substantial reverses. The decision of the Federal executive to include the consular service in the beneficent realm over which the law is operative has been especially gratifying.

Temperance reform has been wrought along lines less governmental and more personal than those in vogue a decade ago. From all States having prohibitory laws there come reports of relaxed interest in the enforcement of the law, and South Dakota has voted to do away with prohibition, but, thanks to a technicality, the law will stand for a time. The Raines Law in New York has proved to be both weak and strong, weak in its power to secure a diminution of the consumption of liquor and the amount of vice and crime, and strong in its exemption of local officials from temptation to be venal. The Liberal government of Canada has granted permission for a plebiscite on prohibition throughout the Dominion, and before 1898 dawns our neighbor may be trying the interesting experiment of federal prohibition.

Science, pure and applied, has made a notable advance. The discovery of the Roentgen rays by the eminent German physicist whose name they naturally bear, and the prompt utilization of the discovery to widen the area of man's knowledge, is by far the most notable event of the year in this realm. Nansen's return from his trip to Arctic polar regions has made him famous and rich. He has practically settled the problem, proved his thesis that the north pole is not land but water, and returned with data of incalculable value to scientists. Carriages propelled by electricity have demonstrated their likelihood of competing successfully with those drawn by horses, and the bicycle has enlarged much the area over which it reigns supreme because indispensable.

The sum total of pain and sorrow probably has been less than ever before, owing to the ameliorating influences of the gospel and applied science. But withal men the world over have been shocked at the atrocities in Turkey, the disaster which followed the Russian czar's coronation, the St. Louis tornado, the earthquakes and tidal waves which have swept the coasts of China and Japan, and the famine now rampant in India. Nor will our people soon forget the torridity of August and the mortality it caused.

In the domain of statecraft two great facts loom up. Russian supremacy in Europe and Asia; and an Anglo American understanding, first, as respects arbitration, and, second, the hegemony of the United States on the American continents. These facts alone would make the year notable and a landmark forever. Prince Lobanoff, the masterly Russian diplomat, has died, but the czar, Nicholas II.—enthroned with all the magnificent pageantry of the Greek Church at a cost estimated at $25,000,000—thus far has not diverted the course of Lobanoff's plans. The alliance with France has been formally acknowledged, Bulgaria has been won, Abyssinia has been secretly aided in its triumphant warfare with Italy, and a Russian foothold in Africa gained. Naught in the way of reform has been done at Constantinople, save that which first won the assent of Russia, nor will there be. In Persia, Korea and China Russian and French influences are now supreme, and Japan, Germany and Great Britain see much of their former influence, political or commercial, slipping away. For various, but sufficient, reasons this triumphal march has gone steadily on, and with it pari passu the prestige and power of the Triple Alliance has faded away. The two greatest Powers best representing the Teutonic stock and the Protestant faith, Germany and Great Britain, find themselves isolated from each other and the rest of Europe, apparently impotent to turn back the Greek Slav and his ally, the Roman Catholic Frank. To state the case is to describe its significance to one who knows history. And why or how Germany and Great Britain, in face of such facts, can be other than friends or allies is a sad mystery.

There is every reason to believe that Great Britain's consent has been won to a treaty with us, which tentatively and for a limited time will insure that all matters of controversy between us shall be settled by arbitration when diplomacy proves ineffectual, and once tested it is not likely that the treaty will fail to be renewed when it expires. If this prove to be a correct prophecy it will mean that when the new century opens in 1901 the world will have seen one of the most epoch-making events in history consummated. Peace will have won her most notable victory, fratricide among English-speaking peoples will have become forever impossible and much will have been done to save to the world a pure Christian faith and a just form of government.

Having granted the larger principle Great Britain naturally also has granted the lesser, and her assent to arbitration of the Venezuela dispute, carrying with it, as it does, consent to our assertion of the Monroe Doctrine, is the event of her foreign policy during the year which will ever be cherished with pride by her people. As much cannot be said for the course of events in South Africa, where British freebooters were repulsed by the sturdy Boers of the Transvaal, or of the outwitting of British diplomats at Constantinople and Peking.

Canada's rejection of the Conservative party after a long test, and the elevation to power of a Liberal ministry headed by a French Roman Catholic, may draw us nearer to that land in our trade relations. It already has brought a solution of the long pending and vexatious Manitoba school problem, by which the province concedes no principle and the Roman Catholics gain all that the more thoughtful of them deem essential.

Mexico's prosperity under President Diaz has increased, and peace within and without has reigned. A federation of three Central American States has been created, which bids fair to do much for them commercially and politically. In South America revolutions have been less frequent and serious, and progress toward higher standards has been made. Spain's efforts to subdue Cuba have failed, and she seems no nearer success than when the year opened. Weyler as a general has not been more victorious than De Campos. The Spanish debt is many millions larger, her male inhabitants thousands fewer in number and her relations with this country much more strained. Peace has reigned in Hawaii, but her most thoughtful citizens realize that the present status is anomalous and necessarily temporary, and if some form of annexation to this country is not granted soon her soil may be the arena of strife between Asiatic and American inhabitants and their respective ideals of civilization.

British internal affairs have been peculiar. Commercially Great Britain has prospered, but German competition has reached such proportions and vigor that men begin to talk of more technical education for the English youth and more legislation which will protect the producer. The Liberal defeat of the Tory ministry on the education question was a most notable one, but it did not increase Liberal esprit de corps, which has sadly waned since Lord Rosebery's prestige as a leader was lost, and justly, too. Lord Salisbury has been given a free hand by Parliament in dealing with foreign affairs, and when criticised it has been as a diplomat, not as a Tory. Dr. Jameson's prompt arrest, trial and conviction have done much to sustain Britain's good name at home and abroad, but the real test of her moral stamina will be in her dealings with Cecil Rhodes and the wealthy backers of the British South African Company, whose servant Dr. Jameson was.

France has been saved from grave scandals, though venality is rife in the domestic and foreign service. President Faure is proving a strong and popular executive. Like all her colonies Madagascar is proving far from profitable, and much more difficult to control than had been expected. Thanks to Russian influence diplomatic victories in Tunis, China and Tonquin have been won, and as a whole it has been a year chiefly given over to binding tighter the ties of Russian dominancy, the czar's visit to Paris and his reception giving the greatest opportunity for this. Voices are not wanting, however, which cry aloud that Russia is simply using France as a pawn with which to play her own game, and they ask for substantial proof of the gain which France is to derive from the dual alliance.

Germany's condition is by no means enviable. Isolated diplomatically to a degree which enrages Bismarck, who left her puissant; disintegrating internally through resentment of Prussian intolerance and pride and the maladroitness of Emperor William; burdened by loads which militarism imposes and yet spurred on to greater expenditure by fear or hatred of other Powers; losing year by year the blessing which comes from free speech in and out of halls of legislation, and passing more and more under the curse of bureaucracy, it is not strange that the more thoughtful Germans view with alarm the drift of the tide. Prospering in its trade relations because of its thoroughly trained and educated manufacturers and traders, and full of schemes for colonial expansion in Africa and South Africa, it thrives in a way. But it is not generating as great spiritual or intellectual leaders as it did formerly.

Italy, defeated woefully by the Abyssinians, conscious that for all her sacrifices to maintain her part in the Triple Alliance she has little to show save crushing debts, and aware of deplorable corruption among her public servants, is coquetting with France and Russia and now and then looking toward Great Britain, waiting to see which way it will best behoove her to walk. Spain's problem in Cuba we have already referred to. She also faces a formidable revolt in the Philippines and her credit in European money centers is about exhausted. Racial and natural antipathies increase rather than decrease in Austria, and all observers concede that after the death of the present emperor will come the deluge. Perhaps to no Power do Russia's ultimate designs in Turkey carry more of a menace.

Turkey has yet to feel a grip from Christian Europe stern enough to make her realize that misrule and massacre must cease, and religious and civil liberty be granted to all her subjects. Russia at last seems to have consented to act with the other powers, but the price to be paid is not yet revealed. The assassination of the Shah of Persia has put in power one who is likely to be as tolerant as his predecessor, and mission work there continues unimpeded. India not only is suffering from famine, but there is said to be a slight, gradual but grinding process of impoverishment of natives going on which is making the thoughtful Christian Englishmen question whether British statesmen have always legislated for India in the spirit of the Golden Rule.

China has not emerged from the chaotic condition that followed her defeat by Japan, and lacking men great enough or public-spirited enough to guide her she has fallen an easy prey to Russia. That country has demanded, as the price for her intervention and defeat of Japan's purposes, practical control of Manchuria and access to and occupation of Chinese harbors on the Pacific. Japan has passed through a year of reverses, industrial and diplomatic, has seen with chagrin the waning of its influence in Korea, found Formosa no easy province to subjugate and govern, and has put in power a ministry less conservative than that of Count Ito.

Great Britain's decision to penetrate and reconquer the Soudan, and her suppression of the Matabele revolt, have involved her in expense and some new complications respecting her future in Africa. Her prestige in South Africa is impaired, and most British investors in the great commercial companies formed to exploit Africa stand to lose before they gain on their investments. The Transvaal Republic and President Kruger emerge triumphant from the conflict with British exploiters and officials. Zanzibar, with a new sultan selected and enthroned by force by Great Britain, still tolerates slavery, and affairs in the Congo Free State have gone from bad to worse. From Uganda have come reports of rapid strides toward a firmly established, attractive state of Christian civilization.

We live in an era of travel and education through observation of varying types of men. This country in the future will certainly be better understood abroad, by some at least, for during the year we have welcomed as guests Li Hung Chang, Yamagata, the Japanese field marshal, Lord Russell, the chief justice of England, several of Europe's ablest journalists sent here to study our political campaign and social problems, and two of Britain's ablest authors, J. M. Barrie and John Watson, D. D.

Of statesmen and jurists Europe misses Prince Lobanoff, Tricoupis, ex premier of Greece, Jules Simon and Leon Say, and mourning is by no means confined to New England over the untimely deaths of Massachusetts's governor and ex-governor, F. T. Greenhalge and William E. Russell. By Lyman Trumbull's decease Illinois lost one of her truest men. Philanthropy will miss Baron Hirsch and Enoch Pratt. Scholars can no longer turn to Curtius or Prof. F. J. Child for light. Literature cannot be enriched by fresh contributions from William Morris, George Du Maurier, Edmond de Goncourt and Harriet Beecher Stowe, while from the ranks of artists Sir Frederick Leighton, Sir John Millais and William Hamilton Gibson are missing. Of publishers, Alexander Macmillan, John Wesley Harper and A. D. F. Randolph have passed on, and of exponents of the Christian faith and life men will never again hear spoken words from the Archbishop of Canterbury —Dr. Benson, Bishops Arthur Cleveland Coxe and Att'cus G. Haygood, and Rev. Messrs. Thomas Armitage, Talbot W. Chambers, Sanford Hunt and William H. Furness, all influential men in their respective sects of the Christian Church; while our own denomination will not soon forget the various gifts and loyal service of laymen like Charles Theodore Russell, Austin Abbott and Henry C. Bowen of The Independent.

SERIOUSLY STRAITENED.

The American Board has before it a most serious problem. The fact that at its last annual meeting it could report itself as out of debt has led many to suppose that its financial needs were fairly met. This is far from being the case. It should be remembered that the avoidance of a debt was secured in two ways—first, by large extra gifts, chiefly from individuals, and second, by the severest kind of retrenchment on the field. Similar extra gifts cannot be expected this year, neither can the retrenchments be continued without sacrificing the work to an extent which in many cases will be fatal. In an emergency a man can go without food for a certain number of days and yet recover from the strain, but there is a point beyond which he cannot recover. By various devices and economies the missions, though sorely pinched, were able to get through the past year, sustained by the hope that relief would come before long. But they cannot bear the strain much longer, and a collapse must come soon unless help is received.

The Prudential Committee made the appropriations for 1897, well aware that they were wholly inadequate to the needs of the work. It dared not make larger appropriations, great though the need was, until the churches indicated a purpose to supply the funds. It was hoped that early in the year there would be responses to the manifest calls of Providence for an advance. But, instead of an advance, the receipts at the present time show a serious falling off as compared with the same period last year. Meantime the distress and famine, both in Turkey and India, render the needs of missionaries and the native agents who are aided greater than ever. They cannot live on what they have heretofore received. Both they and their work are threatened with want, and at a time when this work gives promise of unusual fruitfulness could the supplies be granted. Fifty thousand dollars beyond the donations of last year are absolutely needed to maintain anything like efficiency in the missions. The seriousness of the problem before the Board is manifest. The solution rests with the churches. We trust that the contributions at the opening of the year will show that the churches are profoundly determined that there shall be no withdrawal from the work of giving the gospel to the unevangelized.

THE COUNCIL AT LOWELL.

The advantages of our Congregational polity have been demonstrated afresh by the council called by the First Church of Lowell to advise concerning the troubles which have disturbed it for more than a year past. The pastor, Rev. George F. Kenngott, tendered his resignation, to take effect Dec. 31, 1895. It was accepted both by the church and the society, and thus his official relations with the First Church came to an end. Afterward the church voted to rescind its action, and the pastor announced his withdrawal of his resignation, but the society, which had made the legal contract with the pastor, and had terminated that contract on his proposal, refused to reverse its action, and secured an injunction preventing him from officiating in the pulpit of the First Church. He and a portion of the church began worship in a hall, and, at a meeting held in the vestry of the First Church, they voted that the First Church should become incorporated under the name of the First Trinitarian Congregational Church in Lowell. Those worshiping in the hall, under the act of incorporation, assumed the new name and carried on the functions of a church, and both organizations have kept up regular services during the year. An attempt was made last spring by the adherents of Mr. Kenngott to compel the society of the First Church to admit into its membership any members of the church of twenty-one years or more who rented sittings for not less than six months. An act to this effect passed both houses of the State legislature, but was vetoed by Acting-Governor Wolcott.

Offers of fraternal counsel to reconcile the differences were made from time to time by neighboring ministers and churches, but none of them were acceptable to all the parties to the controversy. However, after time had been allowed for excited feelings to become calmer, the body worshiping in the meeting house called a council of churches of the vicinage, and the result of their deliberation is given on another page.

This result was reached after thorough and impartial examination into all the questions involved. The council continued its work for about a month. A committee of five spent a week in conferring with all parties to the controversy, and came to the unanimous conclusion that under present conditions no solution of the problem was possible without admitting the necessity of two churches, which, indeed, are already in active operation. Differences of opinion were emphatically expressed in the council, and even at the close of its third session little prospect of agreement appeared. But as the discussion went on the advocates for each party came to recognize that the other had more reasons for its contention than they had supposed, and thus the way was finally opened for a unanimous conclusion.

The result declares that the pastor's official relations with the First Church came to an end through the acceptance of his resignation by the church and society; that the meeting which voted for incorporation under the name of the First Trinitarian Congregational Church of Lowell was held in accordance with the law of the State providing for the incorporation of churches, but in disregard of the rules of the First Church, and that both bodies are and should be recognized as Congregational churches, pending the decision of the court. It is a natural inference that those voting according to the State law to become incorporated as a church, with a name adopted by themselves, but not according to the rules of the church to which they belonged, should constitute the body which has since regularly carried on services as the First Trinitarian Church. But as the body which continues to worship in the meeting house as the First Church has already appealed to the civil court to decide who are its members, the council thought it wise to leave this question wholly to the court and declined to make any attempt to determine the rolls of membership of the two churches. The council, however, has virtually decided that the First Church continues to exist as heretofore organized, and eventually the limits of its membership will probably have to be settled by some ecclesiastical decision.

The conclusions of the council are not, of course, of the nature of a legal decision. But they are the result of such careful and prayerful deliberation by wise friends of all parties most interested that they will no doubt commend themselves to the deliberate judgment of the members of both churches. The public, seeing that the questions at issue have been thoroughly investigated by those most desirous for justice to all and for the honor of our churches, will accept the result as in accordance with the facts. These two churches, we trust, will turn to their work courageously and hopefully, pending the decision of the court, and when that is given will so adjust their relations with one another as to promote kindly feeling and co-operation as neighbors. Whether or not they may find it wise at some time hereafter to reunite is a question which must be left to the future to decide. But we believe that all parties will feel assured that the advice which has been given is, as far as it goes, the best that is possible under existing conditions. In an exceedingly difficult and delicate case our polity has once more proved its value. From this result other churches which are involved in troubles may take encouragement that through patience and prayer, with the aid of their brethren, they may find and follow the guidance of the Holy Spirit to bring them in due season to peace and renewed prosperity.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

There is a growing feeling among our pastors and churches that the Week of Prayer may be better observed at some other time of the year, for instance, during the period of Lent. We incline to this opinion. Some diminution of former interest in the services of the week, as held in midwinter, is evident already. Nevertheless, most of our churches still continue to keep the midwinter season, and such a change as that proposed should be made, if at all, only by substantially general agreement, because spiritual unity and co-operation are most essential to the successful seeking of the divine blessing.

Among the various suggested lists of subjects for prayer one is almost embarrassed, so many themes appeal powerfully to the heart. But two or three certainly have claims which nothing should be allowed to override. Our first thought, of course, is to petition for directly spiritual gifts, forgiveness, faith, grace and the conversion of the world. But just at present the needs of missions, both domestic and foreign, are so great, and the immense value of mission work is so conspicuously evident, that prayer for missions should be more frequent and fervent than ever. If the divine interposition; whether directly, by means impossible to us, or indirectly, by quickening Christian hearts to greater endeavors and sacrifices, ever were necessary to the progress of his kingdom it seems to be needed now.

Moreover, prayer for our country should be more intense and heartfelt than ever. This subject too often is set aside as unimportant in comparison with missions, for instance. But if the spirit of folly and recklessnes which has gained such a large control over many of our public men, even in Congress, be not corrected soon we shall no longer prosper as a people sufficiently to send out missionaries, even if we could have the face to do so. And while we do our best for reform we cannot succeed without divine help. If the Week of Prayer this year were to be devoted chiefly to prayer for our own country, the result upon the rest of the world might not be less positive and helpful than if our prayers were to follow their usual channel.

CURRENT HISTORY.

Boston's Strike.

Two of the three parties most directly concerned with the brief tie-up of Boston's street car system last week emerge from the contest deserving censure by the third. The management, judged by their acts before and after the strike and tie-up, are seemingly bent upon denying the right of the employés to join trades unions and thus protect themselves and secure privileges which they cannot hope to receive dealing with the corporation as individuals. The men, judged by the acts before and since the strike and tie-up, lack wise leaders, loyalty to such as they have, and unity of purpose. The management, in some way, should be made to understand that their control of what is practically a natural monopoly makes it doubly imperative for them to act with public, as well as personal, interests in view, and that it is too late in this century for them or any other set of capitalists to deny the right of labor to organize, protect its interests, and receive recognition through officials delegated with authority. The employés in some way should be made to see that it is imperative for them to act in obedience to principle, not passion, to carefully weigh the merits of any proposed course, then select tried and trusted leaders and stand by them even if it involves seeming but only temporary reverses. The public, which suffers most, will endure much if a sharply defined contest between greed and manhood is to be fought out, but it will not be trifled with.

A Model Citizen.

When Hon. Henry L. Pierce of Boston died men of high repute were not wanting who, judging him by his private deeds and public acts while alive, described him as a model American citizen. The filing of his will in the Probate Court last week, and public comment upon its provisions, have called the attention of an even larger circle to the justness of the claims that were made for him as soon as he died. It is doubtful whether a more carefully considered and perfectly rounded document of its kind has ever been recorded in this or any other country. The city of Boston is made the residuary legatee of a tract of 400 acres of woodland, which will add greatly to the beauty and value of its already noble and beneficent public park system. The town of Stoughton, in which he was born, will receive $25,000 to add to its library fund. The best of the educational and philanthropic institutions in Boston and Cambridge will receive large bequests aggregating nearly half a million, while all the five sects of the Christian Church having organizations in the town where he made his fortune will receive $3,000 each. His kinsmen, naturally, get a large part of an estate estimated as worth not far from five million dollars. If this were all Mr. Pierce's will would perhaps not be so remarkable, for men of wealth in this country more than in any other have always realized their duties toward State, church, education and philanthropy. But Mr. Pierce had friends and loyal subordinates in business, and he deemed them worthy of generous recognition. It was a pleasure for him while living to give $5,000 to Charles Sumner when his future health and public service depended upon a sojourn in Europe. It was as natural for him to arrange that after his death one of our best poets, Mr. T. B. Aldrich, also his most intimate friend, should receive $300,000, while no less than $890,000 will be divided in sums ranging from $40,000 to $100,000, among thirteen of the most responsible employés of the manufacturing company of which Mr. Pierce was president. In addition, every servant of his will receive the sum of $100. Generous while living, he will prove beneficent though dead, and thousands yet unborn will be his debtor.

A Calmer Atmosphere.

The adjournment of Congress until Jan. 5 has prevented any increase of bellicose sentiment, and few now expect any resurrection of the Cameron resolutions when Congress meets again. Secretary Olney's manifesto and the public hostility to radical action account for the situation. Ex-diplomats like J. A. Kasson, E. J. Phelps and F. W. Seward all support the Executive in its assertion of authority, and Congress has much to do in earning respect for its capacity to exercise authority wisely before it will win public sympathy in any controversy which it may invite with the Executive. If it be true, as was generally reported in Washington on Monday, that Secretary Olney and the Spanish minister have reached an understanding, then the prospect brightens for a speedy cessation of hostilities. This understanding is said to involve the acceptance of the mediatorship of the United States.

The Greater Central American Republic.

The union of Salvador, Nicaragua and Honduras in the Greater Republic of Central America was formally recognized by the United States last week, when their envoy was presented to President Cleveland and heartily welcomed by him. This compact was consummated last June, and perhaps no better description of its character or import can be found than is at hand in President Cleveland's speech of welcome, in which he said:

> I discern in the articles of association from which the Diet derives its power a step toward a closer union of Central American States in the interest of their common defense and general welfare, and I welcome it as the precursor of other steps to be taken in the same direction, and which it is hoped may eventually result in the consolidation of all the States of Central America as one nation for all the purposes of their foreign relations and intercourse.

If one will but review the history of the Central American republics since they became such, he will readily see how much they have suffered from internal dissensions and foreign broils, and any action which indicates that they have begun to see that they cannot prosper save as they encourage stability and peace is most welcome to good men everywhere. But it is peculiarly gratifying to the citizens of this country, now that we seem to be entering on a new epoch of our history, in which our relations with the old world may more and more be shaped by our claims of supremacy in the new.

Is the Sultan at Bay?

M. Nelidoff, Russia's ambassador to Turkey, acting as the spokesman for the Powers, is said to have notified the sultan of certain reforms which they agree must be wrought in the administration of Turkish affairs, and which they are prepared to compel him to decree, using force if necessary. Finances are to be revised, revenue receipts hereafter are to be set apart for definite purposes and administered by representatives of the Powers, and all appointments of ministers by the sultan must be subject to the approval or veto of the signatory Powers. If the sultan assents to this scheme a new day has dawned for Turkey, and he, at a stroke, is stripped of much of his power for evil. He becomes a vassal. But if he dissents, as is said to be the case, if he stubbornly affirms "I may be the last of the Caliphs, but I will never become a second Khedive," then he either is madly rushing to his deserved fate or he has assurance from one or more of the Powers that they truly do not desire a reform while nominally pretending to. Rumor credits Germany with this act of duplicity, and her vigorous suppression of all expressions of public sympathy for Armenia and the interchange of courtesies between Emperor William and the sultan make the rumor credible. It is conceivable that Russia, also, might play such a double game. We shall wait for more conclusive evidence before daring to rejoice. Little can or will be done save that which suits Russia's purposes, and Russia once dominant in Turkey, newer, more subtle and permanent problems for non-Greek and non-Catholic Christians instantly rise up.

NOTES.

Japan and Peru have just signed a treaty calculated to increase commerce between those countries.

Some have suggested that failure to vote should be a punishable offense. The Supreme Court of Missouri declares such a provision in the Kansas City charter unconstitutional.

Stambuloff's assassins were put on trial last week. They urged his widow to attend the trial; she finally consented, and a most dramatic scene followed, when she arose and urged the Bulgarian court officials to cease prosecuting "tools" and turn their attention to the real culprits—men high in station.

Numerous bank failures in Illinois, Minnesota and elsewhere in the Northwest have not added to the sense of security in the business world, but they seem to have been due more to personal wrongdoing and misjudgment rather than to defects of the banking system or general insolvency of the section affected.

The cession to Russia by Abyssinia of a narrow strip of coast adjoining the French settlement of Obok on the Red Sea coast is King Menelek's way of recognizing Russia's service to him in his recent struggle with Italy; and it gives Russia a territorial interest in Africa and more right to speak concerning the future of the Suez Canal and Egypt.

On May 1, 1895, Massachusetts had 1,735,253 native born and 764,930 foreign born citizens, a marked gain in the foreign born over 1885, revealed in the statistics of the towns as well as the cities, for every county in the State shows the increase. Seven cities, Holyoke, Fall River, Lawrence, Lowell, Chicopee, New Bedford and Gloucester have more foreign born residents than native.

Missionary societies in Great Britain and this country, with representatives in India, are receiving letters from them giving the most harrowing details of the famine—its extent, the inadequacy of the relief and the rapacity of many of those who hold good supplies and plan to wax rich on the miseries of their fellowmen. There are those in India, so the cables say, who assert that the famine is now beyond control.

Fortunately there are some men in New York State who insist in believing that Mr. Joseph Choate is worthier of the honor of election to the United States Senate than Mr. T. C. Platt is, and they seem at last to have gained courage to say why they think so. Hence last week Mr. Platt was publicly charged with being a blackmailer of corporations and a venal party boss, and the charges were not made by a "fanatic" like Dr. Parkhurst, but by lawyers and corporation officials speaking whereof they do know.

Justice Pryor of the New York Supreme Court decides that a Hebrew society cannot be given articles of incorporation if they call for an annual business meeting to be held on Sunday afternoon. Justice Pryor holds that "the act intended is an aggression upon the Christian Sabbath. The law which scrupulously protects them (the Hebrews) in the observance of their ceremonial gives them no license, and I am sure they have no desire to affront the religious susceptibilities of others. . . . Because the holding of corporate meetings on Sunday is contrary to the public policy of the State, if not to the letter of the law, I decline to approve this certificate."

The celebration of Forefathers' Day in many cities has afforded excellent opportunity for wise men to utter patriotic sentiments, timely in most instances. Especially so were the words of Hon. E. J. Phelps of Vermont, who said at the New York dinner:

> If this Government is as Lincoln said it was, a Government of the people, for the people and by the people, then it is absolutely certain that it cannot be a Government of the politicians, by the politicians and for the politicians. Because no two systems of Government are more directly opposed than those. We want rest and peace. We want no foreign wars of our own seeking. However glorious it might be to become the bully of the world, we must postpone that gratification until we set our own house aright.

IN BRIEF.

Dr. Stimson's article on New Men and New Measures should be thoughtfully read by all who are interested in the missionary work of our denomination.

Whatever else you skip in this paper you will make a mistake if you do not read the editorials summarizing the progress of the world during this year of grace.

At a recent missionary meeting near Edinburgh an old lady was heard saying, "Jean, Jean, it's no a plate, it's a bag. Pit by ye're saxpence, a penny 'ill dae." There is a good deal of benevolence in the world of this canny Scotch type.

"One need never deny a fact, nor evade a fact, nor suppress a fact, with a view to the defense of revealed religion." So says Dr. C. C. Hall. If those who are defending revealed religion could only believe that, how much of controversy would be avoided!

There is no cause to fear lest the ranks of the ministry should be depleted. There are now in theological seminaries in this country 7,657 students. The various denominations of the Presbyterians have the largest number, but the Congregationalists have the most in proportion to the membership of the churches.

Of the seven ecumenical councils—those which represented the entire Christian Church—four were held in or in the immediate vicinity of Constantinople. It was the heart of the Christian world in the first seven centuries of our era. Would it be strange if it should become again the chief center of Christian interest for three continents?

The decision of a Massachusetts church, now in search of a pastor, to hear no one in its pulpit who is not willing to be considered a candidate, is based on the opinion that any other method of procedure would be a waste of time. It will be interesting to see how much time is ultimately saved by the employment of this rather outworn practice.

A. Conan Doyle has recently made an excellent suggestion that "it might be no bad thing for a man now and then to make a literary retreat, as pious men make a spiritual one—to forswear absolutely for a month in the year all ephemeral literature and bring an untarnished mind to the reading of the English classics." There must be many others who, in these days of amazing productivity, feel as the English novelist does.

Those who heard Ian Maclaren satirically describe the cheapness of the title "professor" in this country will not soon forget the feeling of shame that swept over them as they realized the justness of his criticism. In the Christian Patriot of Madras we find the impressions of an Indian graduate of Cambridge University who visited this country last summer, and he with equal justness animadverts upon the multiplicity and cheapness of the titles which he met with in this country.

The meeting under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions in Park Street Church, Boston, Tuesday, Jan. 5, at 1 30 P. M., will be notable for the addresses by Dr. Grace M. Kimball and Rev. W. A. Farnsworth, D. D., both of Turkey. An opportunity will then be afforded to hear, from two missionaries of long and unusual experience, of Dr. Kimball's remarkable relief work in Van and of the present situation in Turkey, both as respects public affairs and missions.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, in one of his sermons on The Bible as Literature, as reported in the Brooklyn Eagle, says that "in the early Mosaic code there are no requirements of sacrifice" and that Christ said nothing about sacrifices. "When men sinned and came to him burdened by their sin, he never sent them to a priest or a temple to offer a sacrifice for their sin." Mark says that when Jesus had cleansed a leper he said to him: "Go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing the things which Moses commanded." Which is right?

A Boston correspondent of The Living Church says that Unitarianism is dying in this city and owes its death to the Episcopal Church. He explains that the mission of the Broad Churchman is to take the honey out of the agnostic rock of Unitarianism, "as the mission of the ritualist is to suck the honey out of the papal beehive." He seems to smack his lips as he adds, "We are widening and filling ourselves with good things from all sides." If we admit that there is no gall in these statements, how sweet it must be to be an Episcopalian in Boston!

Some time ago the members of the Board of Visitors of Andover Seminary practically agreed on those whom they would wish to have as their successors in the event of their death. It is, we suppose, in fulfillment of such agreement that Rev. Arthur Little, D. D., of the Second Church, Dorchester, has been elected a member of that board in place of Dr. Quint. Dr. Little is duly qualified and we are confident that none will question the wisdom of the choice. The other two members are Dr. G. L. Walker of Hartford and Judge W. G. Bassett of Northampton.

The letters from railway managers in this country, Mexico and Canada, published in The Northwestern Christian Advocate, testify how general is the rule which forbids railway employés who drink intoxicants from long retaining employment, and how common is the intention to limit the Sunday labor of the same class of men. At a time when many forces formerly operative in securing temperance seem inoperative or at least ineffective, it is a welcome thought that the greatest transportation and industrial corporations in this country invariably stand for temperance.

The Standard (Baptist) of Chicago, commenting on the recent action of the Dubuque Association, points out the fact that Baptists as well as Congregationalists are liable to suffer from such violation of denominational fellowship, and adds: "The church that calls as its pastor, or the association that recognizes as a minister in good standing, a man who has been elsewhere suspended or expelled for cause, not only takes its own risk, it commits a grave wrong against the denomination. The only means of preventing such occurrences is to visit upon the offending parties the penalty of public condemnation."

From the distant State of Washington comes a loud call for books and magazines suitable for the State penitentiary in Walla Walla. While the prison officials look favorably upon moral efforts in behalf of their convicts, the State itself makes no provision for their mental and spiritual improvement. A night school is at present contemplated, but there is a dearth of books. Prof. Allen B. Dow of Whitman College has held religious services in the prison on Sunday mornings for a year past, and there have been several gratifying and remarkable conversions. He joins with President Penrose in the appeal for literature for these men. There must be in many homes throughout the country magazines and books that have been cast one side, but which would be warmly welcomed at Walla Walla, and would be put to good and immediate use.

A subscriber writes us that the liquor traffic works its stupendous evils in this country "by the permission of the so-called body of Christ (WHAT SACRILEGE)," because church members did not vote with the prohibition parties. We have allowed our correspondent to express his own opinion of the church, to which we suppose he belongs, by small caps. But inasmuch as both the candidates of the prohibition parties received only a little more than one per cent. of the nearly fourteen million votes cast at the late election, would it not be more charitable to assume that the church generally does not believe the cause of temperance would be advanced by voting with those parties? It must be uncomfortable for any one to profess to be a Christian, and yet to believe that more than nine-tenths of his fellow-Christians are either wholly vicious or wholly ignorant of their duties as citizens.

If Rev. Edward Brownjohn, who protested publicly last week against the confirmation of Dr. Frederick Temple as Archbishop of Canterbury, did so at a time when the ceremonial permitted such a filing of dissent from any suitably authorized participant then he deserves praise for his courage. But if he had no technical or legal standing as a Protestant and was simply obtruding, as the Archbishop of York's decision seems to imply, then his conduct is a very good text on which to hang a sermon on the bad manners and want of tact so often found among very intense and very well-intentioned people. As for the reason given by Mr. Brownjohn why Dr. Temple should not be made archbishop, the day has passed when a man's title to service or honor in the Christian Church is rendered invalid because he is a believer in evolution as a method by which God has wrought his will. It were interesting to speculate who would be in the church and who out of it were Mr. Brownjohn to have his way.

An incident at a meeting of the Woman's Suffrage League of New York, Dec. 22, deserves consideration. It was a dinner given in honor of the Pilgrim Mothers. The president of the league asserted that the women she represented did not honor the American flag. "It is not ours; we live here as foreigners, who have no right to the flag nor voice in the government." A representative of the Daughters of the American Revolution present, who had been asked to respond to a toast, forgot the toast when her turn came and burst forth thus:

When the president of the New York City Woman Suffrage League says that we women have no part in our own flag and live as strangers in our own country, then I must protest. The flag belongs to me and to every other woman in the United States. The blood of my ancestors made red every stripe in it, and the souls of the Pilgrim mothers were not more white than its stripes. Women's achievements may make the stars more brilliant, but nothing can displace them. It is my flag and I decline to be deprived of it.

Hurrah for this Daughter of the Revolution!

Mr. Moody's Boston meetings begin next Monday morning in Tremont Temple. Many are hoping that great blessings will flow through his campaign to the churches of this vicinity. As he presents the old gospel in its simplicity we are confident that Boston, proudly intellectual as it is presumed to be, will gladly hear it from lips that have spoken it with such effect upon two continents. We are glad to see the special preparation being made by the churches, some of which are planning to hold extra services. At Berkeley Temple next Sunday afternoon Francis Murphy, another honored and successful modern apostle, begins a series of gospel temperence meetings. Held during the week days following only in the evening they will not interfere with but rather supplement the Tremont Temple campaign, since the meetings there are to be held only afternoon and evening. Great pressure is being brought to bear upon Mr. Moody to hold evening meetings in outlying districts, but he believes that it is best for the present to confine his efforts to Tremont Temple.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST'S ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND.

It is a pleasure to be able to announce that the special Christmas gift of $10,000 over and above what had been previously given for the Armenian Orphans, which we sought from our constituency in our issue of Dec. 10, was forthcoming, with $500 to spare, and has been sent in two cable installments to the front. In view of the continued interest in this fund, far surpassing our expectation and evidenced by continued giving, contributions for this object, so long as they amount to an appreciable sum, will be cabled week by week to Constantinople, another friend of the fund having generously come forward to provide for that expense and thus saving a delay of a month in making the relief operative on the field.

We are still receiving interesting and touching letters from contributors to the fund. This week Monday another check came from Dr. Mackennal of England, written for $1,221—more than twice the sum forwarded by him three weeks ago. It is the gift of the Manchester Armenian Relief Fund. A pastor in one of the remote hill towns of New England writes as follows:

On Children's Sunday in June I gave out twenty-five five-cent pieces to as many children and adults to make what they could from it with the understanding that the five cents and what it had gained be given to some object outside of themselves. I called it in last Sunday. The amount reported was $33 56 and it was voted to send one-half to the Armenian Orphans' Fund. It has been a blessing to these dear ones who have worked for it.

Other evidences of special and extraordinary effort and sacrifice are still coming to hand and the fund becomes all the more sacred and beautiful as it is seen to represent the overflow of Christian love.

It will accommodate us in sending receipts if stamped and addressed envelopes accompany contributions.

Amount received during the week ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$ 3,043.61
Previously acknowledged	15,802 85
Total	$18,846.46

NATIONAL NON-PARTISAN W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

The seventh annual convention, held at Foundry Church, Washington, D.C., the past week, and closing on Monday, the 14th, was one of the most earnest and enthusiastic in the history of the organization. The deep interest manifest during the convention of the American Anti-Saloon League, which was one of the most important temperance meetings ever held in the United States, and which immediately preceded that of the Non-Partisan Convention, continued unabated to the close of the latter. The convention was welcomed by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster of Washington and Dr. Brown, pastor of Foundry Church. These exercises were followed by brief addresses by Mr. William F. Craft, Congressman Morse and the annual address of the president, Mrs. C. C. Alford of Bernardston, Mass.

At noon on the second day of the convention, by invitation of Congressman Morse, the delegation in a body visited the Capitol, and as they filed into the gallery of the House of Representatives at the hour of prayer these words from the invocation of the blind chaplain filled all hearts with gratitude: "We thank thee, O Lord, that the House is no longer responsible for the liquor traffic within the walls of the national Capitol. Grant, we pray thee, that the bill passed here yesterday will go through the regular channels and speedily become a law, never again to be repealed in the history of our nation."

The convention was later addressed by Senator Frye, Hon. Hiram Price, president of the American Anti-Saloon League, Rev. H. H. Russell of the Ohio Anti-Saloon League and others. Reports of the several departments show good work along the lines of education, industrial training, evangelistic and remedial work.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

The Bank Failure.

The one topic of conversation in Chicago has been the failure of the National Bank of Illinois, formerly one of the strongest and most conservative banks in the Northwest. It was founded by its present venerable president, George Schneider, with the assistance of the late William H. Bradley, so long prominent as a member of the New England Church and in Congregational circles everywhere. It was in part due to the great business ability of Mr. Bradley that the bank made such rapid strides as a financial institution. It is now reported that the wrecking of the bank has been caused by the reckless procedure of W. A. Hammond, second vice-president, who from a clerk had really become its controlling spirit. Loans are said to have been made by him in violation of the laws of the United States, and such reports of their nature made to the directors, who had daily sessions in order to pass upon them, as could not fail to deceive them. It is a matter of doubt if even the warning letter of Mr. Eckels, written a year ago and addressed to the president, was read to them in full.

It was not till a letter dated Dec. 14 came to the directors that they really understood the condition into which the methods of Mr. Hammond had brought them. Whatever may be their responsibility legally, no one can doubt the honesty or the carefulness of these directors. Loans for $100,000 were reported to them as for $10,000, and columns of figures were made to give a sum which close scrutiny would have shown to be erroneous. Mr. Hammond is the son of the late Rev. H. L. Hammond, long financial agent of the Chicago Theological Seminary, and a nephew of Col. C. G. Hammond, for many years superintendent of the C. B. & Q. Railway, and one of the best business men in the city and one of the most efficient and generous of Congregational laymen. The failure will be felt by many a widow and orphan whose stock has been wiped out in a night. Depositors will get their pay in full. Possibly something may be obtained from the assets for the stockholders. At present it looks as if the stock would be worthless, the surplus used up and assessments be required in addition.

The Preaching For the Times.

The Ministers' Meeting had the privilege of listening to an address on the preaching demanded by the times, from President C. J. Little of the Garrett Biblical Institute. The address was keen in its thrusts at the sensationalism of the day, sharp in its analysis, humorous, yet spiritually earnest and profoundly loyal to the Word of God and to Jesus Christ as the Saviour. President Little thought that the tendency of the pulpit was toward undue denunciation of evils. He would have a little more righteousness in the pulpit and a little less of unrighteousness. He thinks it better to preach beatitudes than denunciations. While the latter attract the multitude they do not edify.

The Meeting of the Club.

Forefathers' night was observed by the club at the Auditorium. Some three hundred ladies and gentlemen sat down together in the banquet hall and after partaking of an elegant supper and enjoying beautiful music listened with delight, as one always does, to an address on the Modern Puritan by Dr. Nehemiah Boynton of Detroit. He defended the old Puritan from many of the charges brought against him, and made it clear that in spite of some peculiarities he was a noble specimen of a man and a Christian.

A Noted Visitor.

Chicago has had a visit from the president-elect and yet has given him no reception nor even gone out of her way to do him honor. Some of her most distinguished citizens called upon him, a large number of high school pupils paid him their respects and shook his hand, but as he came here for rest the people thought his wishes should be respected, and that he could be honored in no way so truly as in permitting him to spend his time quietly with his relatives. He attended church Sunday, was of course an object of curiosity to a waiting crowd, but on the whole his days here were days of peace. Mr. Bryan has also been in the city consulting with his publishers. His book is not yet entirely written, but when it appears it is anticipated that it will have an unusually large sale. He is to lecture in Chicago some time in January.

Two Remarkable Meetings.

One of these meetings took on the nature of a banquet at the Auditorium Tuesday evening. There were nine speakers, each of whom was allowed twenty minutes. The subject was civil service reform, and especially reform in the government of our cities. The banquet was under the auspices of the Civic Federation. Many persons were present as guests outside of Chicago. Wednesday evening Music Hall was thronged with the better class of our business and professional men to protest against the threat of the machine to nominate and chose Alderman Madden as senator for Illinois. Mr. Madden has not borne the highest name as a politician, and it is rightly felt that it would be a shame if an inferior person should represent the State in the seat once occupied by a Trumbull, a Logan and a Palmer. The movement against the machine has not begun a moment too soon. We trust it will be successful and that the legislature will select from the abundant material at hand a senator who can do honor to the great position.

The Condition of the Nineteenth Ward.

This is the ward in which the Hull House is situated. It has always had a bad sanitary reputation. Since Miss Addams became inspector it has been reported in a better condition. But even Hull House inspectors cannot change the character of an entire ward in one year, or even in two years. The Health Commissioner now reports it one of the most unsanitary in the city. The death rate in it is higher than in any other ward. This is not because the population is decidedly vicious, but, according to the Hull House visitors, because it is overworked, underpaid, underfed and untrained in the simple conditions of healthy living. The land is low. Many of the houses, which are poor and unfit for occupation, are on the rear of the lot and are neglected by their owners; their tenants are filthy in their personal habits and are utterly indifferent to sanitary conditions. The diseases are chiefly zymotic in their character. The only way to stamp them out is by the application of law. Hence the commissioner asks the council for more authority and for an increase in the number of his inspectors. He has ten now and it would seem as if with this force the condition of things might be changed if every one of the number would do his duty as well as Miss Addams and her assistant have done theirs. If the ward is left to itself and permitted to follow its own inclination, conditions will become worse every year.

Chicago, Dec. 24. FRANKLIN.

FROM NEW YORK.

The Congregational Club.

The club did not exactly "land the Pilgrims" again on the evening of the 21st, but they talked them over, as usual. Dr. Daniel Merriman of Worcester told of the influence they had and had left upon the theology of the country. Though the original impartation was a very tough Calvinism it had developed into a great assortment, like New England's weather, and was somewhat variable, because New England always tried to be rational, logical and progressive —open-minded to truth from every source. He noticed three results of New England theological thought: (1) the change of the conception of God from sovereignty to fatherhood, (2) the change in the conception of Christ, in whose fullest acceptance of humanity his divinity has been newly discovered, (3) the modification of the theology of Redemption. The essence of the gospel, he said, forever remains, however its forms may change, and the reclothing of the eternal verities in the knowledge and thought of today is the inspiring charge that New England in these closing years of the century lays upon her sons.

Mayor Strong, who was to speak of New England's influence on business, told of his boyhood's experience with ministers who used to stop at his father's home while holding meetings in a near-by schoolhouse, and of his preference for the Methodist brother, whose prayers were shortest and who had the most good stories to tell. The bulk of his speech was given to urging ministers and churches to make their great influence more strongly felt for municipal reform, for which he had been steadily laboring since he became mayor.

Dr. Bradford, taking the place of President Eliot of Harvard, detained by domestic affliction, spoke of New England's influence on education—producing the church, the academy, the college, the common school and the library, features that were being copied all over the country. Our common schools and our form of government were due, not to Holland, but to the common sense and sturdy manliness of the Pilgrims. The great duty now upon us is the political education of the people. He closed with a beautiful reference to England's "Albert Memorial" with its rising tier on tier of statues and symbolical groups representing all quarters of the globe with science, art, poetry, engineering, history, etc., and over all the Cross, which must dominate our education, government, business and all the affairs of man.

The Clerical Union.

To keep squarely up with the times, the Clerical Union has heard two learned addresses from experts in "the new and higher criticism," one from Prof. Francis Brown of Union Seminary, the other from Prof. Henry Preserved Smith, whose theme was The New View of the Old Testament. The union greatly enjoyed an essay from Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall on The Principles of Christian Worship. Prof. George F. Wright comes next with The Present State of the Question of Man's Antiquity.

For Clean Politics.

The friends of order, law and decent politics here and in Brooklyn are trying to have elected to the United States Senate Mr. Joseph H. Choate, whom the State would honor itself in electing, and who would bring royal help to the new administration. Very little hope, however, to that effect is entertained, the State legislature being well understood to be completely in the hands of the Republican boss, whose personal ends Mr. Choate in that position would be far from serving.

Fortunately, however, positions in the coming President's Cabinet are not entirely at the boss's disposal, and a good degree of confidence is expressed that Mr. Cornelius N. Bliss, an honorable merchant and Christian gentleman, will have charge of one of the Cabinet portfolios.

Gotham's Christmas.

Christmas was celebrated here with the usual fervor of spirit. The gay, young, healthy lovers of sport found abundant ways of gratifying their tastes. Central and Prospect Parks were for once alive with sleigh-riders, the hard macadam pavements being made to do good service where the snow was wanting. The getting to and fro by heavily loaded sleighs through the principal streets, which had been partly cleaned, was not easy, but the jolly occupants of the brightly painted vehicles, drawn by spirited and gayly dressed horses, did not know the fact. Two artificial skating rinks uptown and one or more in Brooklyn were crowded with young people, who easily forgot that they were not skimming over the ponds frequented in their school days. The countless "shows" of all sorts of course were thronged, largely by toilers rejoicing in "a day off" and by visitors from the rural districts. The usual burdens came upon the managers and workers in the scores of missions, etc., sustained by churches, benevolent individuals or public charity. The amount of "goodies" eaten in hospitals, prisons, almshouses and the like can never be told, and who shall number the dolls and other toys rejoiced over by poor children whom faithful Christian friends never forget at the holidays? One good lady made a feast for eighty-five truant boys now in the hands of the law, only three of whom had ever before seen a Christmas tree; and a band of sympathizing women in Brooklyn's outskirts found a new outlet for their charitable impulses in an asylum for idiots, young and old, whom they liberally supplied with toys of all sorts, with which the eldest were brought back to the days of their childhood.

More Charities.

The Tribune's Fresh Air Fund has issued its report of the year's work and a summary of that of its twenty years now ended. Its expenditures for the year were $23,948, with which 1,040 were sent for two weeks into the country; 25,910 mothers and children were given a pleasuring in the Fund's grove on the Hudson, and the day excursions made up the number of beneficiaries for the season, 40,600. In the twenty years, with $371,778, it has helped 347,269 children and adults, of whom 151,324 were given the usual two weeks' summer outing.

For the use of its various missions, Saint Bartholomew's parish prints the Apostles' Creed in the English, Chinese, Turkish, Armenian, Swedish and Syrian languages. New York is cosmopolitan.

HUNTINGTON.

WANTED, NEW MEASURES AND NEW MEN.

BY REV. HENRY A. STIMSON, D. D.

That new men are needed is apparent to any one who has observed the platform of the American Board, or, indeed, that of any of our national societies of recent years. The older men are fast passing away and the younger laymen to take their place are not forthcoming.

I am coming to believe the measures have much to do with the men. We are living in a new world. In all directions new knowledge and new thought are recording themselves in new methods and new results. We are familiar with the new science, but there is also a new business. The latest discovery in the laboratory means a new process in the factory and a new product in the market. Our oldest colleges are almost revolutionary in the extent and rapidity of their changes; and our educational systems are being everywhere overhauled. Nowhere are changes of method more marked than in the offices and stores; it would be difficult to say which is more unlike its old time congener, the office of a great modern law firm or one of our big dry goods stores. An elderly man in either hardly knows himself.

Under these conditions the younger business man of today finds himself hard pressed. He has come to judge every organization by its efficiency. Things can be done and they should be done. Helplessness before difficulties is the mark of incompetency. Talk that issues in nothing is worse than a waste of time. He is impatient of discussion that does not go directly to the heart of matters, and has small respect for opinions that are not backed up by prompt decisions.

Whether these men are conscious of their training or not they are molded by it, and must be reckoned with from that standpoint. We cannot get along without them. The question is, How are they to be won? That they can be won, and that when they are won they work wonders, is abundantly proved by here one and there another, in the aggregate not a few, who, on the board of some college or hospital or public charity or in politics, are inaugurating a new era. What can be done to interest them in our denominational missionary societies?

We can show that these societies are the proper and necessary adjunct of our church life. Without them our churches stand alone; that individualism which is responsible for so large a part of our denominational weakness runs riot; selfishness finds its opportunity; and sectarianism takes on its worst forms. It is the self-sufficient denominationalism of the rich and successful church. But when the churches of a given denomination unite in a society for aggressive missionary enterprise, it is their formal acceptance of their duty of carrying the gospel to others; it is their pledge of brotherhood and their contribution to the common cause in spreading the kingdom of Christ. It is an entire misinterpretation, therefore, to look upon our home and foreign missionary societies as denominational propagandas. They are, and ought always to be recognized as, the bonds of a true brotherhood both among and outside our own churches.

It ought not to be difficult also to keep before our churches the fact that these societies are doing the work to which they are set. Ears are open today chiefly to the eloquence of facts. The tales told and the results exhibited by men from the front at the annual meetings stir all hearts. The stories of the Iowa Band and the Kansas Band and the Dakota Band and the Oregon Band at the last home missionary meeting in New Haven were unanswerable arguments and conclusive appeals. It is not enough that printed reports be put in the hands of those we wish to reach; heart answers only to heart; men are to be won by men.

But, beyond this, we are now under the necessity of showing that these results are the legitimate outcome of our labors, and that our methods and our machinery are what they should be today. Ours is the task of securing uniform results. We have called into being and have to sustain year by year agencies which extend throughout our own land and to distant mission fields. They involve institutions which are necessarily of slow growth, and laborers who have both to be trained and, at least for a time, supported in their work. Settled convictions and a steady interest on the part of the churches and a steadily increasing stream of contributions are indispensable. Just here is where doubt today arises. Our younger laymen know little of our methods, still less are they convinced of their efficiency and their modernness. A Yale professor said to me at New Haven, "If the Home Missionary Society would win the confidence of business men it must give more time to explaining and discussing its methods and less to the rousements."

We have gone through a melancholy, though perhaps unavoidable, decade of theological discussion at the annual meetings of the American Board, and have felt its influence everywhere. There can be no question that a time for expansion has come. It has come in theology, as elsewhere, and will never turn back. It is not to be wondered at altogether that some have attempted to force it. New views have been often proclaimed with brutal frankness or with distressing subtlety. We will not complain of throwing off swaddling clothes or getting rid of traditions.

But it is important now to recognize that progress can only come by construction, and the particular line in which all can contribute is mutual helpfulness. We must all get near together. The church is to be saved by her labors and her life. Time and again her great thinkers have thought wrong and her great councils have decreed error, but the multitude of plain Christians have been true to daily service, and the cause has gone forward. Our missionary societies are rising to new importance. We must ask, Can anything be done to broaden them and quicken interest in them? What are their methods; how are they being modified under existing pressure; just what is their efficiency and what is the waste; where do they get into ruts and how can they be lifted out?

No man, or group of men, has the wisdom of all; we want the wisdom of all directed to these agencies, and the trained hands of our business men applied to their administration. In every committee room there are difficult and vital questions, never more than today. Business paralysis is not to last forever. The future is for the Lord and the spread of his kingdom. We need to be ready for it. Discussion is not to be dreaded, it is needed. Let our societies be brought close to the churches and every question of their administration be laid on the churches. The responsibility will be accepted. The men, the measures and the money will not be wanting.

Missions, home and foreign, are not a thing of the past. The missionary motive may have lost something of its stress, as once stated, but that it has lost its place in the plan of the developing kingdom of God, still less in the deepest heart of men who are conscious of what they owe to the Lord Jesus Christ, who can question? That it will appeal as powerfully to the new generation of business men as to the old and secure as devoted and as generous service cannot be doubted. The Ezra Farnsworths and Alpheus Hardys and Amos Barstows and Austin Abbotts and Stephen Edgells and Colonel Hammonds of the past are not to be without their proper successors. But care must be taken that a generation does not lie between.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

The Watchman remarks: "We have been thinking almost entirely of what Europe thought of our restatement of the Monroe Doctrine. It is now time to consider what our South American beneficiaries think of our plan of settling their disputes by tribunals on which they have no representation."

The return of a congregation of Reformed Episcopalians in Detroit to the Protestant Episcopal fold is made the text of an interesting and significant declaration by the Church Standard (Protestant Episcopal): "Never in the history of Christianity has there been a more needless schism than that by which our Reformed Episcopalian brethren have been separated from us. . . . While we are not insensible of the growth and activity of our own church during the past quarter of a century, we have never been able to understand the glee of our dear and lamented friend, John Henry Hopkins, over 'the decline and fall of the Low Church party,' of which the secession of our Reformed Episcopal brethren was so significant a sign. . . . We put these questions: Is there now the same amount of earnest, dutiful, prayerful, personal religion among us that there used to be? And if not, why not? Again we would speak prudently and guardedly, but our own belief is that the secession of our Reformed Episcopal brethren did ten times as much to damp and discourage evangelical fervor within the church as they can possibly have done to promote it in their separate organization. If that be true, then their secession was a deep wound to their brethren."

ABROAD.

Times have changed when as prominent a leader of British Christianity as Rev. Hugh Price Hughes can say of Herbert Spencer, as he does in The Methodist Times: "We are all greatly indebted to Mr. Spencer for emancipating the English mind from the superficial utilitarianism and narrow mechanical theory of the universe that prevailed in many circles of thought when he began his deeper exposition of existence. In the volume before us he concludes that 'the conception to which he tends is much less that of a universe of dead matter than that of a universe everywhere alive'; and his final sentence on the subject of religion is even more impressive, 'But one truth must grow ever clearer—the truth that there is an Inscrutable Existence everywhere manifested, to which he can neither find nor conceive either beginning or end. Amid the mysteries which become the more mysterious the more they are thought about, there will remain the one absolute certainty, that he is ever in presence of an Infinite and Eternal energy, from which all things proceed.' The man who can write this is 'not far from the kingdom of God.'"

THE BOSTON CLUB'S FOREFATHERS' NIGHT.

It was the ornate and striking auditorium of Tremont Temple instead of, as heretofore, the rather plain and bare interior of Music Hall in which the Boston Club celebrated Forefathers' Night last week Wednesday evening. Our Baptist friends have lavished so much paint on their splendid new edifice that special ornamentation for passing purposes is hardly necessary, but there was a sufficient display of the national colors to accord with the patriotic character of the occasion and the usual supper proceeded with the usual accompaniment of good cheer and the exchange of friendly greetings. More than seven hundred men and women sat down to the feast and the brilliant company not only filled completely the floor of the hall but overflowed into the first balcony. Previous to the supper a reception was held in Lorimer Hall at which Mrs. S. B. Buckner, wife of General Buckner, was a conspicuous and welcome figure. The music was furnished by Mr. Howard E. Parkhurst, who presided at the organ, and the Philomela Octet, composed of eight young women in a variety of becoming silk waists, who were naturally warmly received.

The prayer opening the formal exercises was offered by Rev. H. H. French. President Arthur H. Wellman avoided the mistake of a lengthy address of welcome, but contented himself and pleased the audience by recapitulating in a brief and vivid fashion the series of events which the club had gathered to commemorate. It responded with vigorous applause to his eloquent peroration that this famous story never grows old, but will retain and increase its hold upon men so long as heroism and patriotism survive.

Forefathers' Night is usually an occasion when a representative of the State is brought forward to utter its congratulations. The governor is frequently brought into requisition for such service, but this year it fell to the attorney-general, Hon. Hosea M. Knowlton. His speech was not long, but earnest and weighty, delivered in a way that made his hearers feel that he was not speaking perfunctorily but out of genuine enthusiasm for the Pilgrim Fathers. The moral greatness of our ancestors was the point which Mr. Knowlton particularly emphasized. "Neither riches, honor or knowledge," said he, "fill the full measure of our living."

When the executive committee sought the presence of Hon. John S. Wise of Virginia it doubtless expected something of a departure from conventional Forefathers' Day speaking, but at the same time, judging from his reputation, anticipated a strong, suggestive and eloquent address. It was this in very truth. And few speeches on previous similar occasions can be said to have ranked as high in interest, originality and significance. Mr. Wise read from a manuscript, but that did not repress the exercise of his natural gifts as an orator. His wit broke forth ever and again and there were many passages of decided eloquence while the spirit of the address, so broad, conciliatory and earnest, was perhaps its greatest charm. Historical experts might take exceptions to certain of his statements but there would be little dissent from his main conclusions. His chief argument was that this country was made by no single type of men—that neither Puritan or Cavalier can claim a monopoly of original contributions to the structure and character of the government. All the European races were represented in the American blood. The Scotch-Irish in particular, Mr. Wise said, brought the forceful and aggressive element which guided the development of the country, especially in the West. Particulars were here given of the part this race has played in our national life and the list of presidents was cited to show that a large proportion of them belong to this stock. To the Netherlands this country owes the germs of the Declaration of Independence, while public education also came from Holland. Neither can the Puritan or the Cavalier claim that such achievements as the separation of church and state and the abolition of class distinctions and of primogeniture were due exclusively to them.

The speaker strove also to show that the distinction between Cavalier and Puritan has been overemphasized. In fact, there was at the time of the Rebellion as great differences between individual Southern States as between the North and South. Virginia, his own State, held to the Union until the very last moment. Many of the Southern leaders were of Puritan stock.

The practical lessons which Mr. Wise drew from this survey, so minute and thorough in many of its parts, was that we should recognize that we are a composite people, that we are not antagonistic races, but that all the citizens of the republic, subordinating differences of race, class and creed, should seek to forward the peace, honor and glory of the whole country. He concluded by quoting Washington's farewell address, which he felt was prophetic of the times in which we live, and whose deprecation of sectional and political prejudice he felt was never more needed than today.

As the audience was on the point of dispersing Dr. Arthur Little asked for a moment in which Congressman Morse could present a resolution indorsing his bill forbidding the sale of liquor in the Capitol building. This was cheerfully granted and the resolution enthusiastically passed.

A MODERN NEED SUPPLIED.

We are glad to encourage new practical ideas, especially such as promote more thorough searching of the Scriptures. A helpful plan is in use at Bethany Church, Quincy, Mass. It is an attempt to increase and unify Bible knowledge as the equipment for personal work. Here, as elsewhere, trained workers were found to be too scarce to meet enlarging opportunities. The lack of a clear perception of Bible truths and their application had prevented otherwise willing workers from special endeavors to aid the unconverted. An organized system was laid out which embraced a board of managers representing nearly all the departments of the church, to study and meet the needs of each organization and reach the greatest number of individuals.

The sessions of the "school" are weekly, lasting one hour and a half, about one-third of the time being devoted to a specific lesson, the remainder to a lecture or a discussion. A fee of fifty cents for the course is necessary for the expenses, and an inexpensive manual is the only additional outlay. The program is arranged in advance, and includes this year such topics as: The Literature of the Bible, Biblical Geography, The Beginnings, Periods of the Nations, Modern Young People's Societies, Church Work for Men, Denominationalism and others equally suggestive. Outside talent is introduced every week, thus providing continued variety and a broad view. This season among the speakers are: Rev. M. C. Ayers of the Boston Advertiser, Dr. J. M. Gray, Dr. G. M. Boynton, Dr. William Gallagher and Dr. W. E. Barton.

The pastor, Rev. E. N. Hardy, is satisfied of the benefits of such a drill in his own church, and other pastors who feel the need of such work among their people will hear with interest that during the sessions thus far this season the average attendance has been 160.

A similar type of effort is represented by an organization in the First Church, Evanston, Ill. It is the Young Men's Class, now three years old. It studies Bible truth in the light of the conduct of everyday life, and a few of the subjects of the present term illustrate the breadth of its considerations: Does the Mind Need the Gospel? Whittier's Religion, Early Christianity, Mansfield House, London, The Crisis in Turkey, Shall We Give to Beggars? The Christian as Musician. An appointed leader conducts the informal discussions, and those present are free to participate or not. The class has had instruction from some eminent speakers, and as a complement to such teaching the members have contributed large support to Chicago Commons. A session is held every Sunday noon in the pastor's study.

CHANGES IN SAN FRANCISCO.

A General Bereavement.

The sudden death of Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, an earnest and skillful worker in religious and educational lines, is deeply felt, not only in her local church and city, but throughout the State and coast. Among her valuable services was the inauguration of the kindergarten movement in this region, she being the first and only president of the Golden Gate Association, now including over 100 schools. In these, at one time or another, 18,000 boys and girls have studied, many of whom are now grown and filling responsible positions. Her funeral in the First Church was largely attended, no other woman in the history of San Francisco having in death called together so many people—weeping women and grief-stricken men. Fully 2,000 pressed for admittance, while hundreds more joined the long procession viewing for the last time the sweet, strong face. Her new pastor said little, leaving to Dr. J. K. McLean, out of his long and intimate acquaintance, the portrayal of her noble character.

A Great Gain.

In the same place, before a council of the vicinage, Dr. George C. Adams, a son of Maine, coming to us by way of Missouri, read a most interesting statement of experience and belief. So satisfactory was it that even alert theological professors propounded no questions, and by unanimous vote the installation followed. Aside from the intellectual stimulus, the fellowship manifested and the spiritual uplift, a feature worthy of especial mention was the salutations from the home missionary churches—for many years beneficiaries of the First Church—which were felicitously voiced by Supt. J. K. Harrison.

The Pacific.

"The oldest religious newspaper on the coast," published since 1851, once at eight dollars per annum, is about changing hands. Deacon S. S. Smith and Rev. Jonathan Kimball, who for nearly a score of years have given faithful service, are laying the burden on younger shoulders. Rev. J. A. Cruzan of Olivet Church, San Francisco, is soon to assume control. Slightly modifying its form and increasing the number of pages, he hopes by arrangements with other denominational organs issued here so to minimize the expense as to afford greater resources for remunerating able contributors. Prof. George Mooar, long the versatile editorial writer, will also sever his official connection with this paper. It is hoped that new denominational headquarters, long needed, will result from this new arrangement. No less than five of our boards have regularly appointed representatives here, with offices somewhat scattered, to say nothing of the official heads of the woman's home and foreign work. Thus far efforts to centralize have failed, but now that the Pacific's new management may seek new editorial rooms pressure will be brought to bear to select them sufficiently large to accommodate all the secretaries, as well as to furnish a rallying center for the Monday Club and other similar assemblies. OCCIDENT.

In most Congregational churches in this country unfermented grape juice is used as a substitute for wine at the Lord's Supper. This custom is gaining ground in the Nonconformist churches of Great Britain. In many churches where opinions are divided both kinds are used, the total abstainers sitting by themselves and receiving the unfermented wine in a cup tied with blue ribbon.

The Home

GOOD-NIGHT.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Good-night, sweet year, that brought to me
  Dear friends to love, rare wealth to hold,
That gave me flowers for memory
  More precious far than fleeting gold.
Good-night, sweet year, wherein I read
  Full many a page with rare delight;
Thy latest hour will soon have fled
  O, pleasant year, sweet year, good-night!

Good-night, sad year, that reft away
  Some hopes I cherished; gave the pain
Of disillusion; dimmed the day
  With wrecks of labor wrought in vain.
Good-night, sad year, that sometime knew
  My pillow wet with bitter tears,
Good-night, sad year, that drifteth too
  Far hence on Time's black sea of years.

Good-night, blithe year, that to the home
  Came smiling with so gay a face,
Bade roses bloom in hall and room,
  Sent small feet pattering through the place
That woke such bells of melody
  As touch the eternal chords that ring
Where evermore the ransomed be
  And saints for aye behold the King.

Good-night, brave year, that gave me strength,
  And helped my will to overcome
In struggles, where the foe, at length
  Baffled and beaten, left me dumb,
Yet thrilling with victorious song!
  Good-night, brave year! I fain would keep Thy secret still to right the wrong,
  But thou art weary. Rest and sleep.

Good-night, O year, most sorrowful
  Seen from the earth side, ache and loss
And clouded dawns, and dear ones gone,
  Have deeply stamped thee with the cross.
Good-night, O sorrowful, sweet year,
  Sweet with the promise of the day,
Where heaven's own morning shall appear
  And all the shadows flee away.

By no means a novel but a natural way for aiding good causes has recently come to our notice, the bare mention of which may bring helpful suggestion to some true souls who long to give but cannot command the means. The members of a certain family are accustomed, when unexpectedly and, as it would seem, providentially, blessed, as by the collection of a debt, the obtaining of work or the receipt of good news of temporal or spiritual sort from dear friends, to drop into a box a coin, larger or smaller as circumstances favor, by way of expressing sincere gratitude to God, who has thus provided for them. Then if an unexpected call comes in behalf of a needy neighbor, a poor student in pecuniary straits, the children of Christian martyrs in Armenia, the "thank-box" is drawn upon, and the money which has been gladly given to God is gladly spent for him by his faithful stewards.

In these days, when so many are suffering from financial losses, depression in business or the result of others' dishonesty, it is refreshing to see faith rise to such occasions no less than to the deeper experience of bereavement by death. Because a single example of genuine trust under the circumstances mentioned is a stimulus to less heroic souls, we take the liberty to quote a few sentences from a personal letter concerning the loss, by theft, of valuable possessions, rendered priceless by reason of precious associations. The writer says: "My predominant feeling is one of pity for the fellow-being who has been reduced by sin, or heredity, or straits, to this predatory way of obtaining a livelihood. Poor man, or woman, or boy! The police thought it might have been a boy and that nearly broke my heart. Personally I never waste time in grief over the loss of mere things. These are the accidents of time. The eternities abide and grow more tremendous every day." Would that we all might enter upon the new year, so close at hand, imbued with the sentiment of that last sentence!

In the attempt to account for the recent suicide of a man who was in good health, who had sufficient income, who had no business troubles and no habits of dissipation, the opinion was reached that "he killed himself because he was without an object to live for." And yet all around him were people who needed friendship, sympathy, help. If he had shown himself friendly to them, he would have had friends in abundance, he would have had a grand and constantly satisfying object to live for. Suicide, except when occasioned by insanity, is a cowardly, selfish death. In such a case as this it would be the end of a selfish life. In suggestive contrast to such a useless, cheerless life is the complacent content of ripened age which found its expression in the same city, at almost the same time, on the occasion of a reception given to an honored public servant to mark his seventieth birthday: "To an old man who counts his threescore years and ten the chief satisfaction of life is not wealth or power or fame or office; it is friendship." Senator Hoar was too modest to refer to the manner of life which had given this affluence of friendship to his elder years, but the secret is an open one. He had had an object to live for!

COURTSHIP AND MARRIAGE.

BY MRS. CREIGHTON, WIFE OF THE BISHOP OF LONDON.

It is easy to see the harm that comes from girls thinking and talking too much about marriage, but we must remember that it is also bad to talk and think too little; to treat it as a kind of forbidden subject, a question which a sensible girl will put aside. There is no harm in wishing to be married; thus only is a complete life possible, thus only can we develop and use all our faculties; yet, seeing that many must remain single, those who do not marry need not think that everything is lost in consequence. The single life has its great opportunities also, and if such be your lot take it as from God and make the most of it.

But I do not intend to speak here of the blessings of the single life. Before my girl readers life lies full of endless possibilities, and the question for each is how to meet them and how to make the most of them. Live in the present, but do not live as if the present were all, just because you do not know what the future may bring. Live so as to have a life of your own worth living, whatever may happen. Everything which helps you to live a worthy life, to develop all your powers, will be a useful preparation for marriage, and will, moreover, not be wasted if you do not marry. Even definite professional training as nurse or doctor or factory inspector will not be wasted, though the profession may be laid aside with marriage. For marriage is not an end in itself, it is a great opportunity. Anything you have learnt before, above all, any regular habits of work, any power of concentration, any capacity for using your time to the best advantage, will help you to lead a useful married life, and at the same time it will help you to make a wise choice in marriage.

Literature too often gives us low views of marriage, and yet in literature we find also some of the noblest teaching about it. Both our great modern poets, Tennyson and Browning, teach us noble views of women, and of the sanctity of marriage. No one has given us a more perfect view of the union of two kindred souls than Browning, who could write as he does because he wrote from the fullness of his own experience; we cannot go beyond his description of what married life might be, put into the lips of one who could never know it himself:

To live, and see her learn, and learn by her
Out of the low, obscure and petty world;
Or only see one purpose and one will
Evolve themselves i' the world, change wrong to right;
To have to do with nothing but the true,
The good, the eternal, and these not alone
In the main current of the general life,
But small experience of every day,
Concerns of the particular hearth and home;
To learn not only by a comet's rush,
But a rose's birth—not by the grandeur, God—
But the comfort, Christ.

If anything like this ideal of married life is to be reached, in accepting a man as husband, a girl must consider whether he is one with whom she can live a worthy life, whose companionship will help her to make the best of herself. People often talk as if falling in love were to settle the whole question. To begin with, What is falling in love? Many passing fancies are dignified by this name. Two young people meet at a ball or staying in a country house. They happen both to be in a rather susceptible condition. One leads the other on. The girl is flattered by admiration, the man by a sense of his power over another, and, if circumstances are favorable, the most important step that either can make in life is hastily taken. Or it may be that only on one side is the fancy stirred, and then follow mortification, vain desires, misery, and perhaps all for a mere mistaken fancy. I do not mean for a moment to depreciate real falling in love. It does happen in truth, as well as in fiction, that a man and woman meet and, almost at the first interview, each discovers in the other a kindred soul, and feels almost as if by inspiration that this is one with whom a real life can be lived. Neither do I mean to suggest that it is well to marry without falling in love. The close intimacy of married life brings many little difficulties which would not easily be borne if love, whom the poets teach us to consider blind, did not smooth the path, and cover with its bright halo many little defects and failings. All I wish to say is, that falling in love is not everything, and it is by no means necessary to marry a man because you have fallen in love with him, even should he happen to wish it. Reason has her part to play, too, in your choice, and if reason tells you that the man to whom you are attracted is unworthy, you must listen to her voice.

Believe in the goodness of men; demand, expect goodness in them, and you will help them to be good. You must know, if you think about it seriously, that you could not be happy with a man whom you did not respect as well as love; and if your religion has taught you to look upon life as an opportunity of serving God, how could you venture to go through life in close companionship with one who has no care for God? There is no need that husband and wife should agree in everything for a marriage to be happy, but on a matter of first-rate importance—such as religion—there should be agreement.

Silly talk about men, silly liking to be noticed, often begins at school. Most of you will know quite well what I mean; if you have not indulged in it yourselves, you have heard it from others, and your own consciences have told you how mischievous it is. The habit begun at school is too often carried on after school days. Here girls can help one another much; shun and avoid such talk, show how distasteful and how unworthy you feel it, and do not make friends of the girls who insist upon indulging in it. Some girls boast of the proposals they receive and are proud if they can tell of a number. But a right-minded girl should be grieved at receiving a proposal which she cannot accept. She can generally see what is likely to come and can prevent matters coming to a point and the man being humiliated by a refusal. But if, when she has done her best to make him understand the hopelessness of his suit, he still insists upon hearing his fate from her lips, let her remember that a man's love is deserving of respect, and treat him kindly if she has to treat him firmly. He offers her a great deal; it is not a light matter to be made a joke of. He offers her the best he can, himself, and if she cannot take it, at least let her respect the offer.

If you can love and respect a man do not be afraid of the future, do not be afraid of a little poverty or of restricted means. In these days we have such exaggerated ideas of comfort, and girls and young men alike are so fond of pleasure and ease, that they are often afraid to face marriage without a large income. Men look with alarm upon many girls, judging them far too expensive articles for them to be able to keep, whilst they themselves are not prepared to give up the little comforts and luxuries of bachelor life. But if two people love one another, ought these outward things to be reckoned of so much importance? If your love is worth anything you will not be afraid to begin life in rather restricted circumstances, and self-denial shared together will be easy. I am not advocating rash marriages; young people should understand what they are about, and know something about the value of money; and if they have poor health and no prospect of their condition improving, they should feel that it cannot be right to make themselves a burden on others by marrying on an insufficient income. But many a girl with health and capacity would be far happier married to a man of her choice, even on a small income, than if she had to spend long years of listless idleness in waiting for better days; only she must be determined to be a sensible and capable wife, and to do her share of work in the home.

I have just alluded to the question of health—a point not always sufficiently considered in marriage. I do not want to enlarge upon it, but I should just like to say this much, that there are cases where hereditary disease of mind or body has so clearly shown itself that the call of duty is plain and, at any sacrifice of personal happiness, should be listened to. For what can be more selfish than to hand on disease and misery? Again, it is not always easy for a girl to realize that when she trifles with her health she is perhaps doing what may damage the health of the children who may be born to her in the future. In all things we must remember that we cannot live to ourselves alone, and that our health, our capacities, our opportunities are to be looked upon as given us to be used for God and for our fellow-creatures, and do not belong to ourselves alone.

With this feeling of the responsibility that attaches to all you do, take the most important step that man or woman is called to take in life. When you choose your husband, remember that the choice has to be made for life. Life is just your chance of serving God, and you and the man you choose must either help or hinder one another. Do not say that all marriage is a lottery. Some disappointments are inevitable, but if we knew the full history of unhappy marriages we should know how little chance has to do with the unhappiness. The way in which you make your choice, as well as the way in which you will afterward live your married life, are expressions of your character, of what you have made yourself, of the purpose running through your life. You can desire nothing better than the opportunity of leading a happy married life, so will you most easily make the best of yourself and find a sphere for all your gifts and all your powers. This opportunity may not come to you, and then you will have to learn to make the best of whatever other opportunities life may bring you; but should you be called to lead a married life, see that nothing in yourself—no habit of selfishness, no love of mere pleasure, no desire for self-gratification—keep you from missing its full blessing. The kind of daughter, sister, friend you are now is helping to determine the kind of wife you may be in the future. Waste no time in vain dreams, but do the work that lies to your hand today; do it unto the Lord and he will provide for the future.

FAMILIAR GAMES FOR FAMILY GATHERINGS.

Children never tire of games, and children nowadays include boys and girls anywhere from seven to seventy. Not only in holiday times, but at the little family or neighborhood gatherings which for an hour or an evening make the home or the neighborhood happy there is often the call for a game—not necessarily novel, certainly not elaborate, and always the better if in addition to the mental stimulus it gives it sets all the children aforesaid into a hearty laugh. The following hints from recent gatherings may help to answer the call.

The first game might be called Character Sketches—perhaps it is not. The initials of the names of the members of the company are taken down on slips of paper by each, and then expanded into words supposed to describe the characteristics of the persons. When finished, the slips are exchanged and read aloud. These may serve as examples:

A. B. C. A Brave Character.
A. H. B. Amiable, Hilarious Bachelor.
F. D. J. Friendly, Delightful, Judicious.
F. R. P. First Rate Preacher.

Another exercise, simple to understand, although not always very easy to execute satisfactorily to one's self, is Telegrams. Ten letters are proposed at random and written on slips of paper. These are to begin the ten words of a telegram, the subject of which is given. At one gathering it was the supposed reply of "Ian Maclaren" to an editor's request that he would furnish a serial novel to his journal. The letters were G, L, O, B, A, C, T, R, S, D. He "wired" many different answers, among them the following:

Got lots of bids already; cannot take; reservoir stories dry.

Go 'long, old Boston; a' canna talk romance save Drumtochty.

At another gathering on the evening of Thanksgiving Day the telegrams were to be an invitation to the festival, the letters being C, S, A, G, L, U, O, T, I, B.

Come sure, all; grandmother loves us; old turkey is baking.

Can Sarah Ann give lonely Uncle Obed Thanksgiving in Boston?

A "Wellesley girl" who was present referred to the preparation of humorous dispatches at a similar sociable, advising friends of an accident, for example:

Robert Z: Orianna attacked by three severe epidemics; come at once.

Charades are much in vogue in certain quarters, but may be illustrated for the benefit of any unfamiliar with the game. Our Thanksgiving company was divided into two sections. One set retired to another room for consultation and returned to act out their parts. In the first scene they expressed thanks to one another, with touching suavity, for all sorts of favors. In the next the Wellesley representative called upon her friends and urged their giving for Armenian sufferers. Finally, they all sat down at a table as to a feast—that was Thanksgiving. When this was "guessed," the other section had its turn. They chose a three-syllabled word and illustrated it, first, by one man trying to shout into the deaf ears of another; second, by an oculist's learned examination of a little boy's eye; third, by a lady who knit vigorously with a couple of pencils; the "whole" being declared by the attempt of a housewife to tell another how she made Thanksgiving cake—repeatedly insisting that she could not give it definite.

A family gathering in Cambridge on the same evening improvised other pleasant examples of Charades. Act I.: An amateur burglar appears with his accomplice; behind some chairs, as though away down in the ground, the cry of a boy is heard, then he is hauled up with a string, and sold for a few nickels to a band of travelers; two boys get themselves into a posture showing the Arabic figure for eight; in conclusion, a girl tells a story, curiously emphasizing the word pal-pit ate! Act II.: A tramp; the girls of a cooking school making a batch of bread; the singing of the old nursery lullaby—

Trot, trot to Boston, trot, trot to Lynn;
Trot, trot to Salem, and then "hum agin";

the final scene being a concert by a man-do (ugh)-lin club! The little boys tried their hand at it too, producing this: they appear ostentatiously smoking sticks, pooh-ing out their puffs of imaginary smoke; one of them is a slow and stupid scholar; the final scene discloses the poo-dle dog!

Jenkins is a favorite game and can be made an exciting one. The two divisions of the company sit on opposite sides of a long table, each having its captain. A penny, or other coin, is passed from one to another on a given side, all hands being under the table. When the opposite captain suddenly gives the signal—Up Jenkins!—the closed hands of the moneyed side are to be immediately held up and at another signal—Down Jenkins!—to be placed on the table, palm down, the coin being of course under some hand. The point of the game is for the other side to guess where it is—for the noise of the simultaneous "down" leaves that very uncertain—and then to leave the suspected hand uncalled for. Any other hand may be called up at the pleasure of the opposing captain and his assistants; every hand thus raised without the coin narrows the choice. If the hand covering the coin is by mistake called up before the end of the game, that side continues in possession, but if it can be kept in hiding until the last, the opposite side wins it, and starts it in circulation again under their part of the mahogany.

These are, of course, only specimens of many other games which have the advantage of being simple to play, and of combining a pleasant intellectual stimulus with abundant amusement, while without the unwholesome fascination of cards or the objectionable accompaniments of many of the old style games. These sports, and others like them, are adapted to a mixed company of young and old, and attain their greatest usefulness when all ages are represented. The only real essential is that all shall be willing to join heartily in laughing at the proper times, although it would not under normal conditions be a disadvantage at a given signal for the children, young and old—by that time there will not be much distinction between them—to file into the dining-room and get a cup of chocolate or lemonade and a bit of cake, or handful of walnuts or butternuts from the trees on the old farm! AFIELD WITH YOUNG NATURALISTS.

EVERGREENS.

BY MRS. S. J. BUCKLIN.

Get your hats, young naturalists, let us see what we can find in the woods in December. How much do you know about pine trees? There is a young tree just within reach; it is a seedling and has been growing perhaps two or three years. Break a branch and examine the leaves. They are clustered in thick bunches like plumes and each group of leaves seems to stand in a tiny socket of leaf scales. There are five leaves in each socket. Therefore the tree is a white pine. Now break a branch of that pine standing near it. The leaves are much coarser and darker green. They are stiff and sharp and you will notice that the cones are short and somewhat egg-shaped; the scales are thick and tipped with a spine or point. The bark, too, is shaggy and rough. The whole tree shows a coarser character than the white pine.

At your feet is a long loose cone, its scales somewhat coated with pitch. This belongs to the tall white pine under which we stand. The second tree is a pitch pine and a third variety called the red pine grows in certain parts of New England. The pitch pine has three leaves in a socket, the red pine has two. An eminent botanist, De Candolle, describes 281 species of the pine, twenty-seven of which are found in North America. The leaves of the red pine are larger and longer than the pitch pine, and its cones are free from the stiff, sharp scales. In Maine or New Hampshire forests its tall, smooth red trunk is said to tower eighty feet without branches and ascends in nearly uniform size forty or fifty feet more.

The pine dwells on mountain sides as well as in valleys and its narrow, needle-shaped leaves are admirably adapted to resist the force of the wind in lofty situations. Whether it shelters a mother eagle in her eyrie or shades a cotter's dooryard, it sings a soft, sweet lullaby when a gentle breeze soughs through its branches or remonstrates in mighty tones when torn and tossed by a winter tempest. Its ever green foliage cheers and beautifies a winter landscape and robed in "nature's armor" of ice or snow glistens resplendent with prismatic colors. Its thick branches shelter many a shivering bird, mice and squirrels nibble its cones for food, it stretches protecting arms over the hardy mosses and plants that cluster about its feet. The value of the white pine for lumber and fuel is beyond estimate and its abundant resinous sap yields pitch, tar, turpentine, resin and lampblack. The Georgia or Southern pine is extensively used for building purposes.

I told you last month of some of the ways by which seeds are scattered and sown. If you place a pine cone in a warm place the thick scales will open and a thin, papery bordered seed will drop out. The light seeds have small wings, but they can fly well and possess remarkable vitality. They will remain years in the ground protected by the cool, damp leaves and forest shade. When the warm sun rests on them they start to grow. If they are planted they must not be covered more than one-eighth of an inch deep in the soil.

Now let us look for the small evergreen plants that cluster about the roots of the pine. The "ground pine" and club mosses, popularly known as "running" and "bush" evergreen, are used in large quantities for Christmas decoration. The partridge berry twines its slender stem through velvety green moss on which its bright red berries gleam like rubies. If you push away the pine needles, snugly buried from snow and cold you may find the buds of the trailing arbutus waiting for the coming of May. The spicy Gaultheria, or "checkerberry," and the narrow, shining leaves of the pipsissewa both belong to the list of evergreens which we may mingle with the scarlet berries of the black alder and the bright pips of the wild rose in our winter bouquets.

STUDY TO BE QUIET.

The positively ill effect induced by fret and worry, both upon the individual and those with whom he or she may come in close contact, is illustrated in this incident narrated in The Science of Health:

A lady, who was never strong, found her household labors much augmented by the presence of one for whom it seemed to her that it was not her duty to care. Knowing that her former work was all, and perhaps more, than she was able to do, the injustice of this extra demand upon her strength irritated her, and she worked for many long months in a state of rebellion, not only to the ruling power in her household, but to the Ruler of all the earth.

Had this poor overworked creature "cast her care upon him" the result would not have been what it was. Induced more, I believe, by her state of mind than the extra labor, a severe heart trouble was brought on, from which it is not at all likely she will ever wholly recover. Later years have brought a partial amelioration of her labors, but if time should bring her entire exemption from toil, it can never bring her ease, for pain is a terrible taskmaster. She is satisfied that all this might have been avoided, and often says she has herself to thank for it.

But what was the effect upon her family? Just what might have been expected. One in this state of mind could hardly be supposed to be a fit person to have the care of children at the most susceptible period of their lives. Is it strange that they imbibed her spirit, and became irritable and rebellious too? However sincere her repentance may be, however trustful and quiet her after life may become, plants grown from the seed sown at that time in their young hearts will have many years of growth before they will be fully eradicated.

Study to be quiet. This means that you shall be quiet inwardly, so at peace with God and his creatures that no derangement of domestic affairs shall be able to surprise you out of your self-possession, for therein lies your power as queen of the household.

Closet and Altar

Begin each day by tarrying before God and letting him touch you. Take time to meet God.

As you take down the old calendars and hang up the new, settle all old accounts with God and man, and begin duty afresh, "steps up to heaven."—C. L. Goodell.

The greatest blessing that can possibly be bestowed upon a human being is the clear, serene and sovereign sense of God; and that supreme beatitude is open to men through Jesus Christ alone. Therefore the philosophical apostle says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."—G. A. Gordon.

Calmly we look behind us, on joys and sorrows past,
We know that all is mercy now, and shall be well at last.
Calmly we look before us, we fear no future ill.
Enough for safety and for peace if thou art with us still.

—Jane Borthwick.

Interpose no barrier to God's mighty life-giving power, working in you all the good pleasure of his will. Yield yourself up utterly to his sweet control. Put your growing into his hands as completely as you have put all other affairs. Suffer him to manage it as he will. Do not concern yourself about it nor even think of it. Trust him absolutely and always.—H. W. S.

Can we find any room for regret in the year which has gone away from us into the vast accumulations of the past if it has been filled with new and bitter experiences? Who can say that the ministry of suffering was not infinitely greater than the ministry of joy? The blight as well as the blossom works God's will and all that is his plan is best for us even if we could not realize it at the time. Looking backward over the year we commit it to him with its sins, its failures, its joys, its sorrows, to be taken into his tender keeping, garnered into the harvest of the years that are past.—M. E. P.

Almighty God, we come to thee at the close of the year and bless thee for all thy tender mercies, thy loving kindness, thy patience, and all the care of thy fatherly providence. We have nothing that we have not received from thee. The marks of thy finger are upon every gift that we enjoy, upon all the year's history, its deliverances, its triumphs, its sanctified afflictions. Bless thy servants to whom the year has been a time of affliction and loss and grievous discipline. Remember those who have this year dug their first grave, who have for the first time seen death face to face. Regard those to whom heaven has become enriched by happy deaths, by triumphant farewells to earth, and to whom the heavens will now be a perpetual attraction because of the loved ones who are there. Bless those to whom the year will be a perpetual memory of difficulty and struggle, continuous endeavor to be honorable and occasional failure in the high pursuit. And grant, O most merciful Father, that during the coming days our lives may be more closely linked with thine, for the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE FOX AND THE HEN.

[See Conversation Corner.]

A white old hen with yellow legs,
Who'd laid her master many eggs,
Which, from her nest, the boys had taken
To put in cake, or fry with bacon,
Was roosting in an outer hovel,
Where barrel, bird-cage, riddle, shovel,
Tub, piggin, corn-bag, all together,
Were put, to keep them from the weather.
When an old fox stole in, one night,
As the full moon was shining bright,
Hoping—if he his nose might stick in—
That he might carry off a chicken;
Or, from a window-ledge or shelf,
Might jump and reach the old hen herself.
Her roost, however, was so high
He saw it was in vain to try,
By all his jumping, to get at her;—
"So then," says he, "I think I'll flatter
The old fool's vanity,—for, look,
Have her I must, by hook or crook;
In fact I've thought so much about her,
I shall fare very ill without her.—
Thus then spoke Renard,* smooth and sly
And thus dame Partlet† made reply.

Renard. Good evening, madam; how dy'e do?
Partlet. I'm ne'er the better, sir, for you.
R. "Better!" you need not, cannot be,
You're always well enough for me.
P. Well, if I am then, as you own,
Pray, sir, let "well enough" alone.
R. Dear madam, if you only knew
But half the love I feel for you—
P. "But half!"—Nay, be it great or small, sir,
I rather think I know it all, sir.
R. Indeed!—Well, madam, that has taught me
To care for you; and that has brought me
Thus late to call—perhaps it's rude,
But, ma'am, I hope I don't intrude.
P. "Intrude!"—indeed, sir, but you do.
R. It grieves me to hear that from you;
I'll therefore say no more at present,
Than just to hint, that, as it's pleasant—
(In truth, you know not, shut up here,
How pleasant 'tis abroad, my dear)—
And I delight to hear you talk,
I've called, to invite you to a walk.
P. "A walk!"—The like who ever heard!
A quadruped to woo a bird!
I'm sick, and early went to bed,
And scarcely can hold up my head.—
R. "Sick!" my dear lady! What can ail?
Indeed you do look very pale.
I'm sure your illness can arise
But from the want of exercise:
Too much confinement fades the fair.—
A pleasant walk, in open air,
With pleasant company, at night,
When the moon shines, will set all right.
And should you tire, I'll call a hack,
Or, better, take you on my back.
I'm sure, though I don't mean to flatter,
That one of us would be the fatter
For such a walk:—nay, never fear
The jealousy of chanticleer.
He shall not harm a single feather
Of your fair neck, when we're together.
Your neck!—ay, now I think upon it,
With your white shawl and scarlet bonnet,
You'll be, by all, both far and near,
Mistaken for a cherub,—dear.—
P. Well, Mr. Renard,—have you done?—
If so, I think you'd better run.
My master's coming to the hovel,—
You see that broomstick, and that shovel—
You see the door that you came in at,—
If you're not off, in half a minute,
Instead of fowls, or ev'n a chicken,
You'll get, as you deserve, a kicking.

The wily flatterer dropped his chin,
And out he sneaked, as he sneaked in.

Moral. The cunning seldom gain their ends:
The wise are never without friends.

* The Fox.

The years are angels that bring down from heaven
Gifts of the gods. What has the angel given
Who last night vanished up the heavenly wall?
He gave a friend—the gods' best gift of all.

Sons like Jesus will be possible only so long as we have mothers like Mary. And therefore it is that I for one, though I am no pessimist, view with eyes full of alarm some of the tendencies in our life today. I am not a political economist but this I say unhesitatingly, that any system that makes of home only a place to eat and sleep in, that forces the mother to the mill or the factory that the little ones may have bread to eat, stands self-condemned. The nation that barters the wealth of its motherhood for silver and gold is letting out its own life-blood. Leave its men, and women who are not mothers, to make money; we need our mothers to make men.—Rev. George Jackson.

The Conversation Corner.

DEAR CORNERERS: The first thing in order is to report your contributions to the Armenian Fund. I have just sent to our publisher another twenty dollars, so that we now have in Turkey four children saved from starvation and kept in a comfortable Christian home for five months, on our account. I have a strong feeling that some of you have not yet sent in the little gifts which you intend as your part in this blessed charity. When I heard Emily Wheeler from Harpoot a few days ago tell the story of the massacres and of the heroic Christian conduct of those who suffered and those who escaped, I was glad that we could do something for the children of the martyrs. These extracts show the spirit in which the gifts are made.

I inclose —— for the help of the Armenian orphans, a part of which was intended for a little Christmas present, but at the request of the friend who was to receive it, it is used for this purpose.

Ten cents of this is from a dear old lady ninety-four years old, gladly given from her small means.

I have read the Corner to the children and they send —— to you to be used for the Armenian orphans. It is their birthday present to the Christ.

. . . Put it down from Frank, Ralph, Harriet, Elizabeth; they are going without giving Christmas presents and make this instead; the boys earned every cent of their part; grandma gives her part instead of giving them presents.

I wonder if Mr. J. W. P., away down "on the Penobscot," who inquired in the Corner of Oct. 29 about an old school-book piece he used to read beginning thinks that nobody else in the world remembers it, because he has received no answer. As a matter of fact, it almost seems that the contrary is true, and that everybody remembers it! Two well-known ministers—one of them a doctor of divinity—have told me about it at the Congregational House; one eminent teacher, whom I met at a reception, spoke of it; a lady who was a stranger to me accosted me on the street one dark night, inquiring if I had learned about that old hen; and one of D. F.'s compositors deftly handed me a copy of the little reader which contained the piece one day when I was up in the office, and the Despot was looking the other way. And as for letters—well, old white hens with yellow legs have flown in upon me from all over the land, until my library seemed likely to become a veritable hen-roost! I showed to a baby boy who called upon me today the original picture in the reader, and he immediately responded, "Cut, cut, cut," and if I possessed the imagination of Poe I should surely hear that refrain repeated from above my door, from the mantel, from the top shelf of the Cabinet!

> A white old hen with yellow legs

To show how many of our Cornerers remember back to the time of the "Young Reader" sixty years ago, and cherish an affectionate memory of its contents, I will read you extracts from a few of the letters I have received. Is it because there were fewer books to read in those days, or because children's memories were better then, or because they were accustomed to commit pieces to memory, that so many of my correspondents are able, though without the book, to copy the whole poem in their letters? (Just at this point, a lady from a neighboring town has called—bringing a copy of "The Fox and the Hen"!)

FITCHVILLE, O.

Dear Sir: Frequently I find in the Conversation Corner a very interesting item. J. W. P. inquires for the "Young Reader." Well, I have it and I read in it sixty years ago. The little book is complete except the fox in the picture has lost his head. Good enough for him; he'd no business to have stolen into the "outer hovel" "that he might carry off a chicken"! I wonder if J. W. P. remembers the stories of Harry. Peter and Billy, or "How to Make the Best of it," or "How Pleasant is Saturday Night," or "Honesty is the Best Policy." I find a pleasure I seldom know in looking over these pieces tonight. Should J. W. P. wish to learn more about school matters I will answer inquiries with pleasure. My family moved here from Vermont as farmers over forty years ago. A. C. H.

. . . I have the story of the white old hen in my head. I learned it more than sixty years ago and my grandchildren have often asked me for it. S. C. B.

KINGSTON, MASS.

. . . The Young Reader was one of the reading books when I was in school although I never used it. I probably learned some of the pieces from hearing them read by the younger children. Lest "Seven times Eleven" [see Corner, Sept. 24] should take the trouble to search the "attic treasures of her memory" again, I send you the inclosed which is, I think, a correct copy of The Old White Hen. But that same week the lady referred to sent me the following:

NORDHOFF, CAL.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . I saw in the last Congregationalist another demand on "attic treasures," so I have brought forth the article called for, "The White Old Hen," and send it. Possibly a line or two have been lost in the "attic." "7 x 11."

DENVER, COL.

Mr. Martin: I saw in the Conversation Corner two lines of a poem that I remember as being in a reading book used in the district school wherein I was inducted into the mysteries of the three R's some sixty-five years ago. On reading them most of the poem came back to me and I send it. P. W. B.

DEDHAM, MASS.

. . . I cannot repeat the lines perfectly, but send most of it from memory. . . . How pleased I am that Mr. Martin has the English Reader. I think if he will look it over he will find a piece commencing, "Obidah, the son of Abesina, left the caravansera early in the morning, and pursued his journey through the plains of Indostan. He was fresh and vigorous with rest; he was animated with hope; he was incited with desire; he walked swiftly forward"—this is all I can recall of his journey! . . . When I get to writing for the Corner, or reading it, I never know where to stop. I turn to that page as soon as the paper comes to the house. MRS W.

NEW YORK CITY.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . I saw in the Children's Corner a request for this old piece about the hen. Papa used to study the same Young Reader, and I recited the same "poem" once when in the Peabody High School, to the great amusement of the principal. M. T. N.

DANVERS, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: As soon as I saw the question about the "white old hen with yellow legs" I knew I had her on my "top shelf," and here she is. . . . The book I copied this from was a kind of mystery in our house for a good many years. It was known as the famous book, kept safely hidden away in the hands of the mythical "Justice" of our home, brought out on great occasions for my father to read to us from, and never, never allowed to be so much as touched by our childish fingers! Even now I handle it with awe, and if there is any ink-spot on the yellow pages I look to you, Mr. Martin, to appease the wrath of "Justice"! My father says it is almost the best collection of readings for children that was ever arranged in this world. But the poem is so long that I don't believe you can print it all, unless you make special terms with D. F.—what trials you do undergo with poor D. F.! N. L. R.

But it is to be printed notwithstanding! The Editor of the Home and I have decided on that, and it will be set up by the loaner of the book, under D. F.'s own eye, and you will find it on page 1031 of this paper, so you can all read it for yourselves.

"The Young Reader," which has called out all this correspondence—and very much more beside—is a little, leather-backed, green-sided book, six inches by four, published in Boston first in 1830, with many subsequent editions. The compiler was Rev. John Pierpont, a prominent Boston minister of that day, a poet and reformer, but not always popular because of his advocacy of temperance and anti-slavery. He died in 1866. His series of school books comprised The Little Learner, Young Reader, Introduction to National Reader, National Reader and American First Class Book. There are "nearly one hundred wood-cuts" (besides the cut of the "cut, cut, cut"), one of which shows Robinson Crusoe with his kid, cat and monkey, all dancing among the rocks. I have been touched by the story of The Good-natured Boy (whose name was James), who fed a starving dog and a starving horse, got a blind man out of the pond and gave the rest of his victuals to a crippled soldier, but who was himself lost and then rescued by the dog, the horse, and the blind man carrying the crippled soldier on his back! There are other remarkable pieces in this little book, but none perhaps so worthy of the fond recollections of our correspondents who once stood up before the "master" in the frontispiece above as "Lesson LXVI.," about "a white old hen with yellow legs."

LESSON FOR JAN. 10. Acts 2: 1-31.

THE HOLY SPIRIT GIVEN.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

This second chapter of Acts is an account of the giving of the Holy Spirit and the results in the beginning of the Christian Church. It includes:

I. Signs of the Holy Spirit's presence. It was fifty days since the Lord had lain in the tomb beside Calvary—ten days since the cloud had received him out of the sight of his disciples. They were waiting in Jerusalem, as he had commanded, for the fulfillment of the promise he had made to them. There were about 120 of them, praying and expectant. Would he come again? In quick succession came these signs of the new gift of power:

1. "A sound . . . as of the rushing of a mighty wind." It filled the room. It absorbed their sense of hearing. The name for "spirit" is "breath:" The sound like rushing wind suggested the breath of the Almighty One, the effect of his presence on men's minds and hearts.

2. "Tongues parting asunder . . . like as of fire." The face of Moses had shone as he came from the Mount of God with the divine law in his hands. The glory beaming from the Holy of Holies between the cherubim had filled the temple when it was dedicated. In another crisis, the greatest in history, God was now revealing himself, and the halo, parting from a luminous center, sat on the head of each disciple, showing that each had a commission from God. The seal of power was not given to the apostles alone, but to all the disciples, men and women.

3. Speaking "with other tongues . . . as the Spirit gave them utterance." They did not preach in other tongues. They spoke the mighty works of God, and devout men from every nation recognized in their own language their utterances of praise. When the audience had assembled and their attention was secured Peter began to preach the gospel of Christ, probably in the Syriac language.

II. Gifts of the Holy Spirit. They are various now. They were still more diverse in the early church [1 Cor. 12: 8-11]. But they all have the same source and are distributed to each believer with divine wisdom. The Holy Spirit, who filled the first disciples, gave them utterance in unknown languages. But, better than that, he gave them power to say effectively most precious truth in the language which they knew. That gift, which God is now ready to bestow in rich measure on believers, is not eloquence, nor logic, nor rhetoric. But it is a gift which makes use of all these things, of all that is in one who opens his mind and heart to receive the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit gave the disciples confidence in place of timidity. He gave them power to apprehend the truth which Christ had revealed to them. He led them to perceive the grandeur and spirituality of their mission and to comprehend their own mission in it. He united them in belief, in counsels, in prayers, in sufferings and in triumphs in the name of Christ. From that hour at Pentecost the truths they proclaimed exercised increasing power over men and nations.

III. The uses of the gift of the Holy Spirit. He dwells in believers to perpetuate the presence of Christ with them. Their work is to present to men what Jesus did and taught. It is to show what he is. "The spirit of truth," Christ said, "shall bear witness of me." The source of the believer's power in witnessing to Christ is living knowledge of the Word of God. There is an irresistible element of authority and winsomeness in those who utter what they know to be God's truth. He speaks through them. God's thoughts come from the divine mind into the human mind. For the complete revelation of himself it was necessary that the Word should be made flesh and dwell among men. The word must be incarnated in order that it may be communicated. The spirit of Christ must live again in us in order that his truth may be communicated with power. It must be revitalized in our own lives. Only those who do God's will know what his word means. But those who have appropriated its meaning through experience may so utter it that it will be felt as God's word. They speak not only to the intellect, but to the soul, and the things that take hold of men's souls are the things that come out of men's souls. He who knows the truth through the gift of the Holy Spirit will so live it and speak it as to move others. Out of his inmost self will flow rivers of living water.

The gift of the Spirit quickens earnestness in prayer [Rom. 8: 26]. The disciples received the gift while they continued in prayer. He who would experience the full indwelling of the Holy Spirit must be often alone with God. The tenderness toward men in need of help from above, the glow of earnestness, the sense of power, which show the presence of the Holy Spirit, come as the fruit of secret, stated, unhurried communion with God.

This gift is not the fruit of disputes nor of imputations of evil motives to brethren who differ from us. But so far as each disciple receives the real fruits of the Spirit—joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance—so far the spirit of power is invoked.

The supreme need of the church is to receive this gift which God is ever ready to bestow, with no other condition than that by surrender of ourselves to holy uses we should be fitted for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, so that our faith shall not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. Whatever wastes this power brings fearful loss on the church. We know what wastes it. It is not merely the open breaking of God's commandments, but the fact that Christians dissipate in selfish pursuits and pleasures the abilities given to them by God to save their fellowmen from death. Whatever dries the heart and destroys its susceptibility to the Spirit's influence disqualifies us for conveying to others the most spiritual elements of the gospel. A minister crossing the Atlantic noticed that a fellow-passenger who sat near him at table always wore gloves. It occasioned much comment. The minister finally ventured to ask him the reason for it. He replied that he was by profession a sleight of hand performer. For his work he needed great suppleness of hand and fingers. Exposure to the air injured their effectiveness, and he was willing to appear singular in order to win greater success in his profession. Do we need anything so much as the baptism of fire for spiritual life, and the tongue of fire to tell of that life to the world? Power lies not in knowledge only of the truth. A profound reverence for that truth, a mighty love for Christ, an intense desire to bring men to be like him—these things give zest to eloquence, make pathos persuasive, give to the Christian a nameless charm which makes the truth radiant, beautiful, commanding. Would not one be willing to appear singular to some in order to possess this gift in the highest degree?

Do any criticise the want of power and zeal and success of Christians? This gift is offered to the unconverted also. "Repent ye," said Peter to the wondering audience, "and be baptized every one of you . . . unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the Holy Spirit." You need not criticise Christians. You may, if you will, lead them to greater triumphs in the name of Christ.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

AFRICAN INTELLIGENCE.

Methodist Missions on a New Basis. We noted recently the fact that the Methodist Episcopal Church has adopted the Taylor self-supporting missions in Africa. It is thus for the first time officially behind its missionary enterprises in the Dark Continent. In an interview with a reporter of the New York Sun, Bishop Hartzell paid an appreciative tribute to his predecessor, and plainly pointed out the weak points in the conduct of the missions which have led to a change of policy. "William Taylor was a man of truly apostolic power and he accomplished a wonderful work in Africa. It grew, in fact, beyond him and therein lay the trouble, for it got away from his administrative grip. The stations are far apart; those in the Congo are 2,000 miles from those in Liberia, and Bishop Taylor was growing old." To inspect and reorganize the old work and to survey other African fields with a view to opening new stations will be the task of Bishop Hartzell. He is already en route for Liberia, where he expects to arrive in time to open the Liberian annual conference early in February. Prof. A. P. Campher, a thoroughly educated American Negro, accompanies him and will take charge of the Monrovia Seminary. One of the first advance steps in Liberia is to be the establishment of a well-equipped hospital at the capital. After March 1 Bishop Hartzell will visit the Congo stations which he regards as promising. Next fall he intends to go to South Africa, and will gradually work his way up the east coast, finally crossing the continent to Liberia in time for the conference of 1898. The new bishop heartily believes in the establishment of industrial schools and the development of local resources. Referring to the enormous mineral wealth in South Africa, he says: "I believe in going in there and making our missions self-supporting as quickly as possible. Make them use the marvelous resources of this wonderful country in the services of the Christian civilization. Make them not only self-supporting but self-propagating. That is what the Methodist Episcopal Church means to do."

A Million Freed Slaves. French occupation of Madagascar has brought about, at least, one great humane reform in the abolition of slavery. Heavy fines and imprisonment are to be inflicted on those who violate this law. Freed slaves are to keep all the goods which they have bought out of their own earnings. The emancipation proclamation was characterized by startling suddenness. One Sunday morning the last of September the whole country was astounded by the official publication of a decree of immediate and universal emancipation. A private letter from one of the L. M. S. missionaries gives a graphic picture of the way in which it was received: "The news spread like wildfire. Some slaves were claiming their freedom before their owners had heard of the new law. It was a strange day for the people. Some were rejoicing and some, of course, were full of disappointment and discontent. . . . In many families all the slaves have remained. In some, on the other hand, not a slave is left. I am astonished at the numbers who have left for distant parts of the country to go back to their own friends. Some few, we hear, behaved very badly, grossly insulting their mistresses. Still, the prevailing feeling among us is surprise that the great event has passed off so quietly. We used to plan in our minds various ways of bringing about gradual emancipation, and here, by a stroke of the pen, the thing is done and the fetters are struck from about a million slaves."

Jesuit Tactics in Madagascar. The latest intelligence concerning the condition of affairs in the great African island is given by Secretary R. Wardlaw Thompson in a recent communication to The Christian World. He looks forward to the restoration of peace and order in the near future, asserts the willingness of the British missionaries to adjust themselves as far as possible to the French educational policy and writes reassuringly of the strength and faithfulness of the Malagasy church, which has again been purified by persecution. He believes that the heads of the French Government are anxious to do what is just and right. The proclamation of liberty of worship has been repeated and emphasized by General Gallieni and he has made it plain that he means what he says. But in spite of all this Roman Catholic tactics make it apparent that our "mission is entering upon a period of very serious difficulty in consequence of the pronounced, the daring, the unscrupulous determination of the Roman Catholic Mission to annex Madagascar to the Romish Church, as well as to the French republic." Attempts are being made on every side to terrorize the people into profession of Roman Catholicism. Dr. Thompson says that already several chapels built by the Malagasy Christians and used by them hitherto exclusively for evangelical worship have been seized by the priests under the pretext that the buildings were constructed by the Commune and given to them by the head men of the district. Evidently a large number of the subordinate officers are either zealous Catholics or are actuated by fear of Jesuit influence on public opinion in France. It is only fair to say that the central authorities have not sanctioned these proceedings and in more than one case, where evidence was clear and strong, the chapel has been handed back to the Protestant congregation. It will be easily understood, however, that the French Government will be continually pressed by the strong priestly party and British missionaries have need of exceptional wisdom, tact and patience if they are to keep out of serious difficulty.

PEN AND SCISSORS.

It is reported that the Chinese Government has issued instructions to the viceroys and governors throughout the empire to establish schools for teaching the English language and Western sciences in all the principal cities.

The Japan Evangelist announces with satisfaction that two graduates of mission schools not long ago successfully passed the necessary examinations and have been licensed as teachers of English in schools of the higher grade.

One of the most interesting developments of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union is the plan of some English college women to form a Missionary Settlement of University Women at Bombay. It is to be something like a deaconess institution for evangelistic, educational and medical work. Those who have projected the scheme are going themselves, mostly at their own charges. Two are already in Bombay, and four are ready to sail soon.

The annual meeting of the McAll Mission in Edinburgh has left a hopeful impression. Last year by means of severe retrenchment the debt was reduced by about one-half. A Scotch-American, a perfect stranger from San Francisco, came forward and offered to give $4 000 provided friends of the mission will raise an equal sum by March 28. This would cancel the debt. Instead of proving disastrous the retrenchment has brought about blessed results by stimulating energy and self-denial on the part of the French churches. The gospel is preached as widely as ever, but a part of the expenses has been assumed by the churches. There are still 107 halls connected with the mission. The mission boat is now the most satisfactory agent for reaching the class of people who most need help, and a second boat is being called for.

It is the firmly intrenched, much beloved and respected President Northrup of the divinity school of Chicago University, one of the ablest and most conservative of American Baptists, who, at a recent convocation, says: "The dogmas of unconditional reprobation, of infant damnation, will ere long be well-nigh forgotten. The atonement will be seen not to be an expression of God's anger with Christ. To say that Christ bore the punishment of men's sin is to speak an absurdity, for punishment is not transferable. What the deepest meaning of the atonement may be is a mystery. After forty years of reading and meditation I am convinced that there is no philosophy of the atonement. There is very little pure retribution in this world. It is a world of mercy. The belief that the heathen have enough light to render their condemnation just, but not enough to render their salvation possible, will give place to the belief that God's dispensation is a dispensation of mercy. The notion that God will confine the wicked forever in hell to vindicate his own justice will be superseded by the belief that the wicked are in hell because they choose to be there, because they have lost the capacity for righteousness."

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Jan. 10–16. Spiritual Power, Whence It Comes and How to Get It. Phil. 4: 4–13.

The muscle of the athlete, whence comes it? You see him on the race track or on the football field performing feats. He seems to do them so easily, so exultingly, that the casual observer might think that he was simply following out his natural bent. But if we went back over the last few months we would find that long hours had been devoted to gymnasium practice, that he had denied himself many of the pleasures which his fellows enjoyed, and that patiently, perseveringly, he had brought himself to the pitch of development which makes him the champion runner of the class and the pride of the college. It is not otherwise with spiritual power. No man possesses it who has not struggled hard and perseveringly for it. Paul understood the matter when he compares the Christian life to a race. To be sure, it may apparently be easier for some persons to be religious than for others. They have a bent in that direction, just as the man with a fine physique and sound lungs inherited from sturdy ancestors starts with an advantage when he begins an athletic course. It does not, however, follow that a man of large frame and attractive appearance is necessarily a man of physical power. A disposition toward religion, careful nurture in childhood do not of themselves bring any man spiritual power. His own religious life will be limp and fruitless unless he realizes that it is daily striving which secures for him the prize of Christian manhood.

Spiritual power rests in the primary virtues of character. We are sometimes a little suspicious of men who possess what is called unction, who talk so glibly of divine things, who have great gifts of exhortation. We fear that they may not be honest and faithful and pure in daily life. Without being unfriendly toward such exhibitions of enthusiasm, we may, nevertheless, lay down this principle, that any man who wants to have spiritual power must look first of all to the moral side of his life and see to it that he is clean and true and manly when judged by the highest ethical standards.

But we should stop far short of the deepest truth if we failed to emphasize the fact that spiritual power is not self-generated. God is the source of soul life. "He that eateth Me," said Jesus, "shall live by Me." The world drains a man of his faith and hope and love. God reinvigorates him. Do you want to live in the higher regions of thought and feeling? Do you want to be able to win your friends and comrades to Christ? Do you want to be possessors of this spiritual power? Maintain a constant connection with God. The more constant and intimate your fellowship with him the greater your power.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE CURE OF SOULS.

This is the title of the Yale University lectures of Rev. John Watson, D. D., Ian Maclaren, on Preaching, in the Lyman Beecher course. It is dedicated to Prof. George P. Fisher. When so many courses of lectures as those which have been given at Yale on this foundation have been delivered upon a single subject, however inspiring, by so many distinguished thinkers it seems nearly impossible to discuss the theme freshly. Yet Dr. Watson's pages are unhackneyed from the first to the last. The familiar material is handled from a new point of view, and the writer's originality pervades his work. Vigor, rather than elegance, is his characteristic, yet his style does not noticeably lack finish, and frequently there is a sparkling vivacity which is at once refreshing and effective. There is a great deal of genuine fun in his pages, but it is never offensive.

The Genesis of a Sermon, the Technique, Problems of Preaching, Theology the Theory of Religion, the New Dogma, the Machinery of the Congregation, the Work of a Pastor, Public Worship and the Minister's Care of Himself are the titles of the successive lectures, but they give no adequate suggestion of the wealth of strong sense, shrewd pertinence, living sympathy and earnest spirituality of the author. The volume certainly is worthy of the admirable series to which it is the latest addition. From first to last it is notably the utterance of a Christian man, and of one who is a man first and a minister secondly and the more of a minister because so much of a man. It will be an inspiration to his professional brethren and to all young men who look toward their exalted calling. A few slips of the proof-reader might be corrected in the next edition. For example, after six canons have been announced as belonging to the art of public speech seven are enumerated. It is a blemish that so much matter is printed in brackets. These portions either should have been omitted, or, much better, included as the result of legitimate revision of the original reports. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.]

RELIGIOUS.

The Kings [Macmillan & Co. 50 cents], is another number of the Modern Reader's Bible, edited by Prof. R. G. Moulton, Ph. D. We have so often expressed our high opinion of the scholarly qualities exhibited in this series, as well as of the publisher's success in putting it before the public, that we hardly need add anything now. The text of the revised version is followed. The editor's intent to bring out distinguishingly the literary value of the Bible is most successfully accomplished. The distinction between literary study and the method of approach of the historical critic is marked, and it is well that effort in the former line should be illustrated, and so ably.——A volume of Annotations on the Gospel According to St. Luke [Christian Literature Co. $2.00], by Prof. H. L. Baugher, D. D., forms the fourth volume of the Lutheran Commentary. The author was formerly editor of the Augsburg Sunday School Teacher. His work is adapted to and probably intended for the average Sunday school scholar rather than for advanced Biblical students. It simplifies needlessly. Certainly the feeblest mind cannot fail to comprehend what is meant after reading such explanations as "There—in that place." "Shall be—future state." The book might have been condensed largely without omitting anything of value, but it does contain much serviceable material and the publishers have issued it handsomely.

Bible Characters: Adam to Achan [F. H. Revell Co. $1.25], by Rev. Alexander Whyte, D. D., contains a series of short addresses about Old Testament characters. The author's long experience of life and his ministerial service have enabled him to draw fresh and pungent lessons from the familiar histories of his subjects and to apply them with good sense, sympathy and lasting effectiveness. Out of some of even the more obscure characters he manages to draw choice suggestions, and his book is one which readers of all classes will be benefited by reading.——Yea, Sweeter than Honey [Bible Literature Pub. Co. 35 cents], by E. A. Long, is termed by its compiler a directory of the Bible. Its purpose is to set forth in systematic order the more helpful, interesting and beautiful portions of the Bible, largely for the benefit of the young. The plan of grouping texts commonly associated with certain subjects is followed, the subjects themselves being arranged in a certain order. The compiler's idea is to stimulate affectionate interest in the divine word and to promote facility of acquaintance with it. It is printed neatly and is one of the books which many find serviceable in their Biblical study.——The Ideal Prayermeeting [Revell Co. 50 cents] is by W. H. Groat. It is one of those practical manuals, now becoming abundant, which embody much wisdom, largely the fruit of experience, for practical ends. And, although it contains little which has not been said before, it is a serviceable volume, which laymen especially will find helpful when preparing to conduct services, or even to the enjoyment of the prayer meeting. A list of suggested topics is a conspicuous feature.

A book for young people troubled by spiritual doubts is Faith Building [Pres. Board of Pub. & S. S. Work. 50 cents], by Rev. W. P. Merrill. It is wholesome and inspiring.——Two little books by Amy E. Blanchard embody in small compass much Christian common sense. One is As Others See Us, the other Life's Little Actions [G. W. Jacobs & Co. Each 35 cents]. In a pleasant manner they touch several different sides of life.——When the Worst Comes to the Worst [Dodd, Mead & Co. 50 cents], by Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll, is a small work which contains comfort and cheer for the despairing. It sets forth with wise intelligence and tender sympathy the value of the Christian faith and cannot fail to accomplish its intended mission.——From the same publishers comes another little book, The Child, the Wise Man and the Devil [50 cents], by Coulson Kernahan. It imagines the general acceptance of the conviction that Christ was only a man, and not truly divine, and the consequences of the prevalence of that belief. A most striking and impressive picture is drawn of human misfortune and grief inevitably resulting, and it is written with intense, although controlled, fervor. The reader receives a deep and lasting impression.——From the F. H. Revell Company comes The Arch of Titus and the Spoils of the Temple [$1.00], by the late Rev. William Knight, a volume of the series entitled Bypaths of Bible Knowledge. It is a reprint of the author's work published thirty years ago, and although brief and condensed it contains a great deal of information and is to be commended for its scholarship and its interest. It is illustrated.

Japan, Its People and Missions [F. H. Revell Co. 75 cents] by Jesse Page, deals in detail with missions in this most interesting nation. It is not confined wholly to missionary work but contains pictures of Japanese life and character of decided interest, yet they are made to bear upon the story of missions in that country. It is illustrated abundantly and well and will be an enlightening and popular Sunday school book.——The "Thumb" edition of the Pilgrim's Progress [Henry Frowde. 75 cents] is a tiny volume perhaps two inches square, which is beautifully printed and bound. It contains The Pilgrim's Progress complete and an illustration or two, one of them a portrait of Bunyan. The type is surprisingly clear and readable and the book is a pretty little publication.——Bible Lesson Pictures for the First Quarter, 1897 [Harris Jones & Co. $1.00] consists of a map of Palestine illustrating early apostolic history and a series of large and brightly colored pictures illustrative of Biblical occurrences and appropriate to be hung on the walls of Sunday school rooms. The picture illustrating the descent of the Holy Spirit in the form of horns is unfortunate and will give the younger children impressions of which some of them never will be able to get rid. The other pictures are good and well suited to their purpose.

A book of Lines for Endeavorers to Learn and to Teach [Author's Publishing Association. 30 cents], by Emma H. Hunting, contains passages of Scripture, mostly very short, and extracts from hymns and other religious poetry, also chiefly brief. The book is one which Christian Endeavorers or other young Christians will find helpful, although we notice no striking features.——The Endeavorer's Daily Companion [United Society of Christian Endeavor. 10 cents], by Prof. A. R. Wells, is a handbook for Christian Endeavorers. It contains all sorts of information, statistics, etc., about the society and of great practical importance to all connected therewith.——Bible Selections for Daily Devotion [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00], by Rev. Sylvanus Stall, D. D., contains a Bible selection for every day in the year, adapted for family worship. There also are selections for special occasions. The compiler's purpose has been to select such passages as are best suited for devotional use and to bring out the unity and the mutual relation of different portions of the Scriptures, not in any forced or professional spirit but in order to render the self-consistency and beauty of the Bible more obvious. The work has been done with care and will commend itself to those who think that such compilations are superior to the Bible itself.

The late Mrs. Minnie E. Paull has left a pleasant collection of prose extracts bearing upon the training of children which is entitled Seed Thoughts for Mothers [T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75 cents] and which is essentially religious throughout and often avowedly so. It is a good piece of work, illustrating excellent literary discrimination and a wise perception of the needs of those to whom it is addressed. It is handsomely issued.——Before the Lost Arts and Other Lectures [Reform Bureau. 50 cents] by Rev. W. F. Crafts, Ph. D., embodies four short lectures dealing with nature and religion so as to show their mutual relations from a somewhat fresh point of view and inculcating important moral reforms. The book is popular in style and illustrated.——Armenia's Ordeal, by A. P. Vartooguian [Published by the author. $1.00], contains a sketch of the chief features of Armenian history and also some account of American missionaries among Armenians and their work. The chief interest of the book centers in the second part. It is pervaded by a critical spirit although it does not fail to give some credit to the missionaries. Its utterances should not be believed seriously without being compared with the other side. Its citations need to be read in their connection.

STORIES.

Marm Lisa [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00] is one of Kate Douglas Wiggin's best pieces of work. We will not spoil the reader's pleasure by describing it in detail, but will content ourselves by saying that it pictures tellingly the power of sympathy, patience and love to awaken and ennoble a dormant nature. It also is full of fun and of keen hits at a certain class of would-be reformers. Everybody will like it.——A Puritan Bohemia [Macmillan Co. 75 cents] is by Margaret Sherwood. It is a pleasant story of life among artists in New York city. One or two romances are interwoven in the plot and it affords a good idea of art life in the city as led by some who, without being painfully conventional, are controlled by a certain wholesome sympathy with what commonly are called Puritan ideas. It is not a specially striking story but possesses genuine interest.——Constantinople is the scene of Tomalyn's Quest [Harper & Bros. $1.25], by G. H. Burgin, and the loves and adventures of a young English military private secretary form the body of the book. It is a story of plotting and counterplotting and the local color appears to be faithful. It is amusing and in some respects exhibits decided ability.——Another story by Mr. Burgin is Gascoigne's Ghost [Harper & Bros. $1.10]. The somewhat unpromising material and uninteresting beginning of this story develop into decidedly agreeable results. The author has given evidence of creditable power and his characters, although drawn strongly rather than delicately, illustrate some fine traits, and the happy consummation leaves the reader in a pleasant frame of mind.

A Fearless Investigator [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25] is a sort of extravaganza based upon the frequent absurdities of phrenologists, spiritualists and people of that ilk, which turns out to have been chiefly a dream and which is as absurd as much of it must be conceded to be amusing. With a more sensible plot to work out the author should succeed in turning out very creditable literary work.——T. J. Haines is the author of Captain Gore's Courtship [J. B. Lippincott Co. 75 cents], which is a sensational story of the sea, like so many of Clark Russell's. It is lively reading and will serve to amuse a leisure half-hour.——Somewhat similar, inasmuch as they both deal with the unsuccessful revolts of convicts in process of transportation across the ocean, is The Romance of a Transport [Cassell Co. 50 cents], by W. Clark Russell himself. It is a daring and vigorous story in the familiar vein of this popular writer and many of the descriptions are fine specimens of successful work.——From the same publishers comes The Third Volume [50 cents], by Fergus Hume, which, on the whole, is the most carefully elaborated detective story which we remember, and which is entertaining enough to warrant being recommended.

In Penhallow Tales [Copeland & Day. $1.25], by Edith Robinson, are seven short stories which illustrate more than ordinary ability and possess exceptional interest, although sometimes they are a little creepy. The character drawing is fine and the literary quality of the work throughout is high. The author possesses the gifts of the successful narrator, and her short stories reveal her skill in performing work of that sort.——Ruth McEnery Stuart has made Sonny [Century Co. $1.00] familiar to readers of The Century, and this volume, which describes his school life and his courting and many of his incidental performances, has been printed before and will be welcomed again. The spirit of the book is excellent and the spoiled child described seems likely to turn out very well in the end and the pictures of Southwestern life are amusing.——Another book by the same author is Solomon Crow's Christmas Pockets and Other Tales [Harper & Bros. $1.25]. The author knows the Louisiana Negro well and most of these stories are portrayals of colored characters and life. They are very spirited and entertaining and the book is illustrated.——Stephen Crane in The Little Regiment and Other Episodes of the American Civil War [D. Appleton & Co. $1.00] has published six short stories of army life which seem to possess an unusual degree of really thrilling fidelity. We should think the veteran soldiers would read it with intense interest, but any reader will find these pictures of war scenes graphic and interesting and enlivened not infrequently by genuine humor. The book is certain of a considerable popularity.

Dolly French's Household [A. J. Rowland. $1.25] is by Jennie M. Drinkwater. A religious motive and spirit dominate it so prominently that a large class of readers will be likely to turn from it. It is a question whether such a book reaches as many who need it as it would if its missionary intent were carried out more indirectly. It is a good example of the author's power of graphic and entertaining narration, but we confess to increasing doubt whether such a story is likely to win the irreligious. It may quicken those who already are Christians, and of course this object alone is abundantly sufficient, yet it is possible to aim for both at once in a somewhat different manner from that here followed.——The author of Probable Sons, which we noticed the other day, also has written Dwell Deep, or Hilda Thorne's Life Story [F. H. Revell Co. 75 cents]. It is partly a novel and partly a Sunday school book, and somewhat too much of each to be the other. The author's evident purpose is to inculcate Christian consistency, which we heartily approve. But the book needs revising, or it may inculcate a sentimental rather than a judicious type of religion.——The Young Artists [Curts & Jennings. $1.00], by Mary E. Ireland, is from the German of Ernestine Helm. It is a pleasant story of artistic life in Germany and Italy, in which some elements of romance are introduced.

JUVENILE.

Too late for Christmas notice we have received several juvenile books quite equal in quality to those noticed during recent weeks. One is Mr. G. M. Fenn's In Honor's Cause [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50], a tale of the days of George the First. It may prove a little confusing to some readers, so far as the question of honor is concerned, for the traitor certainly is caused to win as much of the sympathy of the reader as any other character, and the distressing perplexity of his son between loyalty and filial love is trying to all concerned. But in other respects the story does the author much credit, and the boys, especially, will prize it very highly.——From D. Appleton & Co. comes The Windfall [$1.50], by W. O. Stoddard. It is a thrilling picture of life in the Pennsylvania mining regions, and it describes explosions and floods in a manner which will stretch the eyelids of the boys and girls who read, while the spirit of the book is sound and wholesome throughout.

The Wampum Belt [$1.50], by Hezekiah Butterworth, comes from the same publishers. It is based to a considerable extent upon facts and the belt itself is still visible in Philadelphia. The book is one of the author's most successful attempts to teach American history by the aid of the imagination, and the story is that of the great treaty between William Penn and the Indians and of the subsequent efforts of both Quakers and red men to maintain a policy of peace. The narrative is animated, and the young people will find this a book both entertaining and valuable.——Another publication by the Appletons is Christine's Career [$1.50], by Pauline King. This is a brisk and pleasant story for girls, the scene of which is partly in France, partly in America. The fun of the book is an attractive feature, but it is by no means without serious merits. It is illustrated.——Fairy Starlight and the Dolls [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00] is the work of Elizabeth S. Blakeley. It is a fascinating and capitally written story for the children who like to be read to, and they will follow the fortunes of its young heroine with keen interest. The illustrations by Lucy S. Perkins are as good as the text.——Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton is the author of In Childhood's Country [Copeland & Day. $2.00] and Ethel Reed has supplied the pictures. Mrs. Moulton's poems are thoughtful rather than amusing, yet we believe them sure of a welcome from the young, none the less. The pictures certainly are striking and almost unique in their character. We are not quite so sure about their being beautiful.

ESSAYS.

One finds everything rewarding that comes from the pen of Prof. Woodrow Wilson, and the papers which compose his new volume, Mere Literature and Other Essays [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50], which contains eight chapters—seven of which have appeared already in the Atlantic, The Century or The Forum—are excellent specimens of strong and suggestive thinking effectively phrased. The new essay has for its subject Edmund Burke. The literary spirit saturates the pages of the book, although several of the essays are largely political. The author is a sagacious critic and an accomplished essayist, and more stimulating than many of his fellows.

The Real and Ideal in Literature [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25] embodies papers by F. P. Stearns. Some are prose essays, others are poems and one is a biographical sketch and characterization of the author's friend, the late Frederick Wadsworth Loring, to whom the book is dedicated and whose striking portrait serves as its frontispiece. It is a somewhat miscellaneous book, exhibiting genuine critical ability and containing many exceedingly interesting portions. It is hardly popular in quality and must appeal to an audience fit, though few, but it will be appreciated most favorably by those whose appreciation is most to be desired.

Popular ignorance and a profound pity for it have prompted Florence P. Holden to write her little book, Audiences [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25], in which she offers suggestions to help people to become good listeners and seers. She has been much impressed by the lack among even those persons who have had special advantages of true knowledge of art, and by the ignorance of many artists of departments of art other than their own. And in these chapters she endeavors to interpret art and instruct her readers so that they may be henceforth appreciative and to some extent critical in the highest sense. The book is stirring and will go far toward accomplishing its purpose. It has good illustrations.

EDUCATIONAL.

A serviceable book for all students of painting on porcelain is A Manual for China Painters [Lee & Shepard. $1.25], by Mrs. N. Di R. Monachesi. It is intended for amateurs and inexperienced workers and is offered, not in order to promote any particular theory or to advocate any special form of art, but to put the important facts bearing upon the subject in a clear, concise and trustworthy form before the student. The author knows well both how to explain what should be done and how to warn against errors, and the conciseness of her language does not diminish its plain and widely pertinent application. Certainly such a book fills an important field and is much to be commended.——A text-book of The History of Sculpture [Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50], by Professors Allan Marquand and A. L. Frothingham, Jr., is intended for students in schools and colleges. It is, therefore, less inclusive than some other books of its class. For example, the histories of Saracenic, Indian, Chinese and Japanese sculpture, as well as prehistoric sculpture in general, are not discussed, although, of course, there is no thought of denying that they have helped to shape the course of modern European art. The aim throughout has been to omit everything unessential to the young student who seeks an intelligent, practical knowledge of the subject of the book. Of course it is illustrated freely and it is in all respects a superior treatise for its purpose.

Science Sketches [A. C. McClurg. $1.50], by D. S. Jordan, came out first nine years ago, and is now reprinted with certain changes and additions. Most of its contents, if not all, have appeared in one or another publication already. It is largely scientific in character, but many of the papers are also eminently popular.——Dr. S. S. Curry, in Imagination and Dramatic Instinct [Boston School of Expression. $1.50], offers to students a volume of simple and practical suggestions. It is intended for those who mean to study and train the imagination and the dramatic instinct, and is the outgrowth of long observation and experience as an instructor. It will take high rank in the literature of its theme.——Pictures in Language Work [C. W. Bardeen. 50 cents], by E. W. Weaver, has reached its second edition. It is intended to aid the work of instruction by the use of pictures of common life and experience. There is considerable difference in the pictures and we are inclined to question the good taste of some of them, but the book as a whole is well adapted to its purpose and will interest and profit the young.——Mr. A. J. George has compiled the Select Poems of Robert Burns [D. C. Heath & Co. 90 cents], which he has arranged in chronological order with notes and a glossary. There are also a few pictures. It will serve well for use in schools, and to interest children generally in that favorite poet.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The fifth volume of Mr. Henry Craik's edition of English Prose Selections [Macmillan Co. $1.10] relates to the nineteenth century. The selections from each author are prefaced by an introductory note by a competent critic, and the contents of the book, which have been selected with good judgment, form a choice and serviceable illustration of the literary work of the century and affords a birds-eye view of its development which could not easily be surpassed. The value of such a series is obvious and this volume is worthy of its predecessors.——Shakespeare's Sonnets [Macmillan Co. 45 cents] are issued with a preface, glossary, etc., by Israel Gollancz, in the admirable and striking Temple edition. A copy of Mr. G. F. Watts's Love Triumphant serves as a frontispiece. It was a fortunate thought which prompted the issuing of this beautiful edition of the poet's works.

Mr. C. F. Palmer, in his Inebriety, Its Source, Prevention and Cure [Fleming H. Revell Co. 50 cents], emphasizes the necessity of developing the moral nature and the building up of moral manhood. This, in connection with a certain sanitary regimen, seems to be the only cure for inebriety which can be depended upon absolutely, and of course its slowness renders it unsatisfactory to eager minds, and there undoubtedly are cases in which the victim is so far gone as to render this cure impracticable. But it is probable that no other will ever justify itself by experience as being trustworthy unless in exceptional instances. The book is thoughtful and practical, and should have a wide circulation among the multitude interested in its sad theme.——Men Who Win and Women Who Win [T. Nelson & Sons. Each $1.25], by Rev. W. M. Thayer, describe respectively the careers of a number of men or women who in one or another way have become eminent by the skillful use of their opportunities in life. Some were self-made, others had many advantages from birth, but one and all have attained conceded distinction, and in some way have contributed to the advancement of the human race. The author's spirited style imparts interest to his pages, and the books deserve a good place among volumes of their class.

NOTES.

—— Mr. Israel Zangwill, the English author, has been lecturing this autumn with great success.

—— Mr. G. W. Cable is said to be intending to go to England next autumn and to give readings there from his works.

—— Eugene Field's poems for children are very popular here, but somehow do not take in England, which is surprising.

—— A new edition of The Mighty Atom, by Marie Corelli, is being made ready and is to include the enormous number of 83,000 copies.

—— Dr. Nansen, the Arctic explorer, is to have $50,000 for his book about his last trip to the North. The Messrs. Constable will publish it in England.

—— "David Lyall" is asserted by the London Chronicle to be Annie S. Swan, whose married name is Mrs. Burnett Smith. Readers of the British Weekly know her work.

—— Mr. J. M. Barrie's Sentimental Tommy is to have a sequel. By the way, Dr. W. R. Nicoll says that up to the publication of Sentimental Tommy Mr. Barrie had received only $250 from America on his writings.

—— Yale University has returned the library of the late Prof. Rudolph von Gneist, of the University of Berlin, to the Leipsic bookseller from whom it was obtained. Only about one-half of its 10,000 volumes proved to have belonged to Professor von Gneist and an offer which the university made for these was refused.

The Spiritual Life of the Modern City.*

By President William J. Tucker.

The modern city, though founded in industrialism, or built upon commerce, and set toward every form of material development, has its spiritual life, otherwise its history were quickly told in figures and statistics. We must not allow ourselves to be deceived by appearances. The modern, by contrast with the ancient or mediæval, city seems to be non-religious and secular. The contrast which gives this result is superficial. Religion, of its own motion and for its own ends, never built a city. The religious spirit has moved men to great secular tasks, including discovery, colonization and conquest, but it has not directed their energies to the making of cities. The instinct of worship, however expressed, cannot explain that strange mingling of diverse peoples and races and religions which is the characteristic of the great municipality, ancient or modern. And even when the people have been of one race and of one religion the chief motive for massing the population at a given center has not been the spiritual motive. The site of the most religious city of the world, "whither the tribes went up, the tribes of the Lord to the testimony of Israel," was chosen for defense. And when war ceased to be the determining reason for the location and development of cities, then commerce and trade came in as the determining cause, just as now it is industrialism.

But while it is not the genius of religion to build cities, nor indeed to bring men together in the mass in any permanent form, the great concern of religion, perhaps for this very reason, is with the city. The voice of the Lord is always crying to it. Whatever the "world" meant to the prophet of the old order, as something to be overcome, whatever the "world" meant to the apostle of the new order, as something to be redeemed, that the city now means to Christianity, as something at once to be feared and loved, to be served and mastered. The supreme question which confronts Christianity as a religion, and which confronts it equally as a civilization, is the question of the moral and spiritual outcome of the cities of Christendom.

DEFINITION OF THE CITY.

What is a city, in the modern sense and under modern conditions? A city is a self-centered community, of various if not of diverse population, thoroughly organized, having resources within itself sufficient for increase, secure in the safeguards of order and justice, equipped with the means not only of material but of social and spiritual advancement, and great enough in itself in numbers, in resources and in character to effect, if not to dominate the life of the individual citizen.

Incorporation does not make a city, neither do numbers, neither does wealth. A city is that combination of forces which really makes a new unit of power. It is in fact the most powerful unit which is today at work upon the individual life, more powerful than the home, or the state in the larger meaning, or the church. It is so powerful that it creates a kind of provincialism. The greater the city the more difficult it is for the average citizen to escape from his environment. The city educates and enlarges him to a certain point, makes him, as we say, more cosmopolitan, and then defines, restricts and controls him. He reads the world through the columns of the local press; he measures the outer movement of industry and trade by the effect upon the prevailing business; he judges people at large by the social standard with which he has become familiar. Such is the modern city in its influence over the average life which forms a part of it. We are just beginning to understand and feel its power.

We must widen our definitions if we are to hold them. If we are to keep the ancient terms we must make them broad and free. Civilization seemed to be a term of inherited breadth, but how grandly its meaning was enlarged in the recent address of Lord Chief Justice Russell:

"Civilization," he said, "is not dominion, wealth, material luxury, nay, not even a great literature and education widespread—good though those things be. Its true signs are thought for the poor and suffering, chivalrous regard and respect for woman, the frank recognition of human brotherhood irrespective of race or color or nation or religion, the narrowing of mere force as a governing factor in the world, the love of ordered freedom, abhorrence of what is mean, and cruel and vile, ceaseless devotion to the claims of justice."

That sentence could not have been penned in its entirety a century ago. Civilization means more today, religion also means more; and to make sure that I get its wider meaning I prefer to speak of it in the terms of the spiritual life. I want to affirm the presence, the reality, and the increasing power of the spiritual life of the modern city; I want to unfold, so far as I may be able, the working of that life under the action of Christianity upon the city, and of the city upon Christianity.

As I have already intimated, the modern city, if judged by appearances, stands for materialism. Who sees the things of the spirit as he enters its gates? Here and there a church or some institution of beneficence may come under his notice, but how still and powerless they are in the rush and tumult of the street. The people whom he meets are for the most part busy in the production of wealth, or in the search after it, some in the display of it, no one appears to be indifferent to it. The whole life of the city seems to be absorbed in one pursuit. You may give it what name you will. You may call it business, you may call it industry, the one impression of it all upon the mind of a stranger is that of the supremacy of the material over the spiritual.

SIGNS OF SPIRITUALITY.

Where are the things of the Spirit? What are the signs of its presence? The true inquirer will not look first among the things which are evident. He will not wait till Sunday to begin his search. If the spiritual has any real power it will be able to live in the midst of the material, working in and through it all and directing it to higher ends. The inquirer, therefore, into the spiritual life of a community will go down at once into the work of the people. He will seek to know the local standards of the professions, the business, the industries of the town, the relation between employers and employed, the spirit in which the daily task is wrought; and then he will want to know equally what becomes of the gains of work, whether expressed in income or earnings, how much of it is spent in mere luxury or debasing pleasures, how much in an honest and generous livelihood or a noble charity. He will follow men to their homes that he may assure himself of their purity and peace. He will go into the alleys and outskirts of the city to see whom he may find there on errands of mercy, who are watching by the sick, who are relieving the suffering. He will mingle with children in their studies and sports and note their manners, temper and training. He will go into the courts of justice and follow out the administration of law, to determine how far it is firm, even-handed and consistent, a steady and sure restraint upon vice. He will take part in the recreations and amusements of the people to see if they are natural, open, clean and fresh. And when he has made these studies he will have reached some pretty definite conclusions in his own mind about "the state of religion" before he visits the churches. And yet when he visits these he will not forget that there is a life of faith as well as of works, a life born out of penitence and forgiveness, a life of profound and vital beliefs, of personal consecration to a personal Master and Redeemer, of devout and thankful acknowledgment of the one living and true God.

Such an inquiry as is thus suggested would bring out, I am convinced, in unexpected proportions the spiritual life of our own and of the average modern city. It would raise some doubts, it would leave some unanswered questions, it would create not a little disappointment, it would cause some dark and painful experiences, but it would give a fine lesson in social perspective. I do not mean that we are to estimate righteousness in the bulk or by the majority. An unrighteous, corrupt, vile minority, however small, is a disgrace and a shame to a Christian city. But it is one way of supporting and increasing that minority to allow it to show for more than it is.

GOODNESS UNOBTRUSIVE.

If the goodness of a city could be written out as vividly as its badness, if the ninety and nine within the social fold could be made as interesting as the one who has gone astray, if the story of a virtuous and happy home had the same kind of fascination as the tale of scandal, if it would cause as much of a sensation to find one upright, courageous, wide-hearted, God-fearing man as to find a betrayer or a hypocrite, then virtue would have the same publicity which now accompanies vice. I would not be guilty of minimizing the evil of a city, nor of making light of its materializing tendencies, but I would declare the things unpublished, unnoted, and therefore unmeasured, which stand for its spiritual life—the prevailing integrity, fidelity to the common duties, the self-denying affection of the true home, the charity which suffereth long and is kind, the courage which on occasions doubles the power of justice, the sincerity of the honest servant of his Master and worshiper of his God.

You may have read the "picture," as he terms it, which Edward Everett Hale has drawn in his own inimitable way under the title, If Jesus Came to Boston. It is the story of a Syrian stranger, as he appears to be, who comes to the city searching for a lost brother. The search is not unnaturally long, but it is long enough to show the variety of agencies and helpers and friends at work for the recovery of the lost. The sentence in which the stranger returns his thanks when the search is over, throws off the guise in which he had appeared and answers the half-implied question of the title, "What you have been doing to the least of these my brethren and sisters, you have done it unto me."

The spiritual life of a city, as expressed in charity, stands revealed at the touch of every kind of want or suffering. It is the very complexity of that life which hides it. A single charity, one philanthropist, would be conspicuous. John Eliot preaching to the Indians at the falls of Amoskeag seems the embodiment of the gospel. He was, just as John Stark at Bennington was the embodiment of the spirit of the Revolution. But the gospel which Eliot proclaimed has since gone out into all the world, and the spirit which Stark illustrated has since made a race free.

I have been speaking thus far in general terms. What now shall we say is the actual working of the spiritual life of the city under the action of Christianity upon the city and of the city upon Christianity? It is impossible that two such forces should act upon one another without producing some peculiar and distinct result. Christianity cannot use precisely the same means, or do precisely the same work, or mean precisely the same thing, apart from its central truth, within the city and without. The modern city creates conditions to which Christianity must conform if it would save or even help the city.

*An address given at a mass meeting of the churches of Manchester, N. H., on the occasion of the semi-centennial of the city, Sept. 6.

A WORK OF RECOVERY.

There are several aspects in which the actual working of Christianity in the spiritual life of the city comes before us. One aspect—it is, perhaps, the most evident and the most striking—is the amount of energy which must be directed to the work of recovery. The city wastes. It is prodigal of life. It is actively wasteful. It exhausts, it wears out, in some cases it devitalizes and destroys. No corporation which uses machinery is obliged to maintain such extensive repair shops as the modern city. These are its reformatories, its hospitals, and, for that matter, its churches.

Consider in this connection the peculiar function of the pulpit of the modern city—how much of its effort must be directed to the restoration of spiritual force or the reinvigoration of faith. The same men and women appear before the preacher Sunday by Sunday, upon whose lives every day of the week has made its serious draft. There is scarcely one among them who has not passed through some experience which has tended to reduce the love to man or faith in God. It is one great office of the preacher to recover the lost faith or love, to heal the hurt of the world. The message which he brings may take on such language as it may please him to give it, but it must be full of spiritual health, it must be charged with spiritual life. The gospel which he utters may or may not be shaped in philosophical thought, it may or may not be touched with emotion, it must have power to invigorate. If I were asked to name the one distinctive thing for which the pulpit of the modern city must stand, I should say at once, inspiration.

See, too, in like manner, how much of the Christianized charity of the city is directed to the recovery of spiritual as well as physical losses. The poverty of the city is of its own type. There is nothing quite like it to be found elsewhere. The poverty of the country, or of the frontier, is by contrast little more than hardship, the absence of comfort, the endurance at times of want. It was the poverty of Lincoln and Garfield. How different from the poverty of the city, the old Roman poverty, the poverty of enfeeblement, or of profligacy, the decay, as we say, of fortune or of family. The ministry to the poor of the city is for the most part a ministry to the weak and worn. Its object is not to restore their fortune—they may never have had any—it is to recover them. In many cases this is impossible. Nothing remains but to fulfill the apostolic injunction, "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." Herein lies the patience of the true Christian charity of the city.

A WORK ALSO OF RESCUE.

Or think yet again how surely the work of recovery passes over into that of rescue. This means infinitely more than relief; it means deliverance, sometimes from associations and surroundings, more often from habits which have become another self. Nothing shows so clearly how necessary this work is, how essential it is to the Christianity of the city, as the fact that whenever it is neglected, whenever the existing orders of Christianity rise above it, instantly a new order is established which makes this work its special business. The latest order of Christians which has set itself to this task is the Salvation Army, which, according to the generous testimony of Cardinal Manning, justifies its existence by its "passion for sinners." It is only the passion for sinners which can overcome in them the passion for sin. And the existence always, in some form, of some body of Christians, charged with this passion, shows the constant draft which the city makes upon Christianity in the work of recovery. It may be impossible to locate the responsibility for this demand. It is enough to state the fact.

ORGANIZED RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Another aspect of the direct working of Christianity in the spiritual life of the city appears in the form of collective or organized righteousness. When Abraham arrested his mighty pleadings before the Lord in behalf of the doomed city of his kinsman, with the final petition, "Peradventure there be ten righteous men? Wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of ten?" he anticipated the absolute conditions of moral and spiritual reform. For the mere use of example one righteous man would be as good as twenty. His solitary, unshared righteousness would be awfully impressive. So, as I can conceive, Abraham himself would have towered aloft in Sodom. But if example fail in the midst of evil then righteousness, single handed and alone, is powerless.

It has been said that if men were to come together today in any great numbers without a religion they would be obliged, at least, to evolve the Ten Commandments. Society would be impossible without these. But grant the Ten Commandments, who will enforce them? This, of course, is the question in every city, for the city, in an indirect way, organizes evil. Evil, that is, becomes a part of the trade and traffic of the city. If it were merely a question of dealing with human passions as they exist in the individual, if these passions were not utilized in the interest of gain, if they were not commercialized, society might rely chiefly upon moral means for their restraint, or conversion into moral power. It is the trade in them which demands another treatment. It is the men for the most part who in themselves stand at a remove from these passions, cold-blooded, sordid, self-controlled and relentless, who defy the Commandments and, through them, society. Against such a class of men, to be found in every great city, if not the product of it, there is no sufficient opposing force save that of organized righteousness.

Organization without righteousness is futile, and righteousness unorganized is equally futile. An historian, writing of a certain period in English history, says: "These were hard times for bad men to live in, good men were so terribly and formidably active." It is the activity of goodness, if weighed with judgment and made firm through organization, which insures the ends of civic righteousness.

That the increasing task of the city lies in this direction no one can doubt. To so organize public sentiment, with such breadth of view and yet with such definiteness of aim, with such inclusiveness that no right-minded and really earnest citizen shall be left out, and with such constancy of purpose that enthusiasm and effort will survive a given campaign, this is becoming a recognized part of the business of Christian citizenship.

A COSTLY LUXURY.

I call your special attention to the bearing of this aspect of the Christianity of the city upon the question of religious unity. I have said that the city is acting upon Christianity just as Christianity is acting upon the city. This action is in some respects restrictive. The city is at least defining the work of Christianity, if not modifying its types of character. But in this matter of religious unity the influence of the city is broad and constructive. The city can afford a multiplicity of denominations better than the country, but it cannot afford the denominational spirit. That is too costly a luxury for religion anywhere. So long as Christian believers and worshipers differ in the emphasis which they wish to place upon particular forms of belief or of service there are manifest advantages from such liberty, provided it does not prevent the higher unity. The city enters the protest of its own great spiritual life the moment a practical working unity is forbidden in the name of authority or in the name of liberty. It lifts its moral necessities before the separated and divided forces of righteousness and asks if this condition must needs be. Who creates it? Who justifies it? It passes no judgment upon questions of polity or questions of faith; it respects the sacredness of inspiration and the sacredness of institutions, but it asserts through all its pleading necessities the supremacy of righteousness.

The city in its action upon Christianity is thus becoming one of the great unifying forces in religion. A result is being achieved under its demands for which other agencies have proved insufficient. I do not overestimate the effect of its influence. It does not accomplish, or even forecast, ecclesiastical unity. That must come, if at all, from within. It must have an inward, not an outward, compulsion. But moral and religious unity, co-operation for work, alliance for conflict—this is one contribution of the modern city to Christianity.

Among so many illustrations of this fact, I hesitate to give an example. But there is one near enough at hand, and so pertinent, that I refer to it. For several years the city of Cambridge, Mass., has been able to maintain a firm, consistent and effective position on the practical issues of temperance. This result has been brought about by the union of all the forces which make up the higher life of the city. The voice of labor, of business, of the university and of the church has been one and the same. The union among the churches has been especially noticeable, because natural, sustained and complete. It has represented all politics and all faiths. Catholics and Protestants spoke from the same platform, and worked together at the polls. And when recently one of the bravest and most earnest champions of the cause, the minister of a certain denomination, was called to a Western city, the clergy of every faith and the citizens of every party came together to bid him Godspeed. Such here and there is the present fact. Such is the growing hope for the influence of the city upon Christianity. Organized righteousness is one step, it is a long step toward religious unity.

There is another aspect in which the actual working of Christianity in the spiritual life of the city is becoming distinctive—namely, the production of unusual types of character. We have been accustomed to look to the country for individuality. We have said that the city makes men conventional, molds them to its own type and so makes them alike. I believe that this distinction is still true in large degree. We have also been accustomed to look elsewhere than to the city for the more devout forms of religious life. Paul indeed addressed the Christians of Corinth as called to be saints, but the response was not such as to create a precedent in favor of the saintliness of the city.

THE CITY THE HOME OF REFORMS.

In one respect the balance of religious power as between localities has changed. The prophet no longer comes from the desert. The message which he bears is not only to the city and from within, but from the city to the country at large. The great prophetic denunciations of wrong, the curse of slavery and the crime of corruption have come from the pulpit and from the press of the city. The city is becoming the home, the moral birthplace of the reformer. The types of character, however, which I have in mind as I speak are more strictly personal. They are represented by men as individuals or in groups.

The Christianity of the city is developing a type of character strong in the power of resistance. The city is a repository of trusts. Its citizens are becoming in large degree trust bearers. As such they are exposed to extraordinary temptations. Some fall before them but the proportion is small, and out of those who stand, there are constant examples of those who stand grandly, with a magnificent resolution and tenacity. Every one who knows such men knows that they are worthy of the title borne by one of the heroes of the war—"The rock of Chickamauga." The tides of financial battle roll against them in vain. When the battle is over they have held their ground. They are at their post.

Let us not underestimate the negative virtues, the virtues of the Old Testament, the virtues of men trained under the ceaseless iteration of the command, Thou shalt not. They give security to our institutions. They are the safeguard of the national honor. There are times when the country rests upon the conservatism of the cities. There are national issues which the cities as such are apt to ignore or neglect, or upon which they act unintelligently. The political judgment of a city is not always up to the standard of the country at large. But when issues are at stake affecting the stability of institutions, the rights of inheritance and possession, the credit of individuals and of the government, the city is not reckless. And to the charge of self-interest which may be urged, the reply is sufficient, that at such a time whoever saves himself and defends his own thereby defends every other more and saves the state.

A NEW TYPE.

And closely akin to this type, which is characterized by the power of resistance, another and perhaps finer type is gradually forming. It is that of character under self-restraint, reaching at times to self denial and sacrifice. When the old Roman emperor and saint wrote the words,

Even in a palace life may be led well, he was thinking of the temptations of the courts. These same temptations today confront young men of fortune of the city. They have the choice of self-restraint or profligacy. Some choose profligacy. They are the most serious menace we have to the stability of democratic institutions. The mere display of wealth is aggravating to a democracy, especially if the wealth displayed can show no equivalent in some form of the public good. But the flaunting of wealth in the eyes of men, the sign of the shame of its owner, is not only beastly, it has a political significance; it is destructive of every principle on which the republic is based.

But on the other hand suppose that the man who has this open choice does not choose to be a profligate. Suppose he holds himself in restraint, and listens to higher ambition, and gives himself and his fortune to noble ends, shall no credit be given to him commensurate with the shame which attaches to his brother? But such choices are being made constantly. The city is to be credited with the good as well as the bad choices. If it allures with its vices, it appeals through its wide and far-reaching opportunities. And when the appeal is heard and obeyed a type of character is developed which is unique. It cuts across the self-seeking type which is using the city for gain or advantage. It represents what the young ruler might have represented if he had given his possessions to the poor and followed Christ. The man of today obeys that injunction of the Master, not by parting company with his possessions, but by giving himself in and through them to the public good. Such types of character as these are peculiar to the city. They can hardly be developed elsewhere. They are the outcome of its temptations and opportunities.

THE POWER OF NUMBERS.

The final aspect of the working of Christianity in and through the spiritual life of the city, to which I would refer as being peculiar and distinctive, appears from time to time in the moral and religious enthusiams of the men in the mass. The city alone can reveal in its just proportions the enthusiasms of humanity.

The great Bishop of North Africa, wearied with the distractions of the cities and sick at heart of their conventionalities, took his appeal on one occasion straight to the individual soul. "I summon thee, O soul, not as thou art in the groves and academies, not as thou art in the market place, but as thou art at the cross roads, unlettered and unlearned, naked and alone."

He had his authority for such an appeal in the very constitution of the human soul. It was made to stand by itself before God. "So then, every one of them must give account of himself to God."

But there is an instinct in every one which craves a place in the great human brotherhood. At times we all long to lose ourselves in it. We want to be caught up into the higher moods and swayed by the wider passions, which are the property not of men as individuals but of humanity. The properties of water are the same in all places. The ocean alone feels the tides. Men in their individual and associated lives have movement and current. The tides are in humanity, and we catch something of their ebb and flow as the local mass of which we are a part begins to be moved by a common impulse. The moral uprising of a city has in it the heave and swell of the sea.

I have heard once and again, in the graphic and eloquent words of Dr. Fenn, the story of the uprising of Manchester at the fall of Sumter, when men were lifted by one common movement on the full swell of patriotism. That one event changed in a moment the moral tone and temper of the city. Men walked these streets with another bearing, they wrought their daily tasks with a more serious purpose, they talked one with another in a language which had a meaning, they prayed face to face with God. Whether they went to the field or stayed at their work, they fought the battles of the republic in their own souls. Every city of the North was swayed by the same emotion. It was as if the foundations were broken up and deep was calling unto deep.

The spiritual life of a city may show a yet deeper and more spiritual possession. I appeal to any man who has seen and felt the spirit of God descending upon a city and resting upon it. A whole city feeling at its heart the peace of God—the strife of tongues still, enmities and jealousies and hate subdued, the love of neighbor for the time as natural as the love of self, the things of the spirit as plain as the things of sense, the heart of the dull made quick to the truth, the doubts and fears and unbeliefs of men lost in the reality of faith and the joy of forgiveness—what was all this but the earthly realization, though for the time, of the city of God, a vision of the New Jerusalem come down from God out of heaven?

THE PULPIT AND THE PEW.

This somewhat familiar theme received fresh and vigorous handling last Monday morning at the Boston Ministers' Meeting. The speaker was Col. H. A. Thomas of the governor's staff, himself an earnest and useful factor in one of our Weymouth Congregational churches. This address was conservative rather than keenly critical and kindly in spirit. He admitted that the modern demands upon the minister make his work arduous and contrasted the church-going habits of a former time with the influences prevalent today, like the Sunday newspaper, the bicycle and long summer vacations that interfere with church attendance.

Colonel Thomas made a strong plea for individuality and intellectual and spiritual strength in the pulpit. Above all the congregation must get the impression that the minister believes what he says. The speaker believed in revival effort of the right sort but objected to merely spasmodic and sensational endeavors. What is needed most of all is a revival of the old New England spirit.

Hearts are linked to hearts by God. The friend on whose fidelity you can count, whose success in life flushes your cheek with honest satisfaction, whose triumphant career you have traced and read with a heart throbbing almost as if it were a thing alive, for whose honor you would answer as for your own—that friend given you by circumstances over which you have no control—was God's own gift.—Robertson.

Gleanings From Our Mail Bag.

Questions, Criticism, Comment, Suggestion.

BOOKS ON THE BIBLE.

In your article on The Bible and Its Interpreters you say the results of recent Biblical criticism are now published in popular form. I have sought for such publications and failed to get them. You can favor me much by reporting those publications I am sure others would also be glad to know them. What are they and where can they be found?

INQUIRER.

The literature issued within the last dozen years setting forth results of Biblical criticism would make a large library. For popular use, to understand the methods and principles employed in studying the Bible as literature, nothing better has been published than Dr. Zenos's The Elements of the Higher Criticism [Revell & Co.]. Dr. Gladden's Who Wrote the Bible? [Houghton, Mifflin & Co.] is conservative and popular. The Bible as Literature [T. Y. Crowell & Co.], just published, contains a series of essays by well-known Biblical students. We mention further Fisher's Nature and Method of Revelation and Ladd's What Is the Bible? [Scribners], and Talbot's Our Bible; How It Has Come to Us [T. Whittaker]. The Modern Reader's Bible [Macmillan & Co.], edited by Prof. R. G. Moulton, nine volumes of which have already appeared, is admirable.

On the Old Testament read Robertson Smith's Old Testament in the Jewish Church [D. Appleton & Co.], Ryle's The Canon of the Old Testament [Macmillan & Co.] and Driver's Sermons on the Old Testament [Scribners] On the first chapters of the Bible read Ryle's The Early Narratives of Genesis [Macmillan & Co.]. The Cambridge Bible for Schools [Macmillan & Co.] treats popularly yet in a scholarly way the separate books of the Bible. On the prophetic books of the Old Testament read Cornill's The Prophets of Israel [Open Court Publishing Co.] and Blake's How to Read the Prophets [Scribners]. On Job the best volume is Genung's The Epic of the Inner Life [Houghton, Mifflin & Co.]. The helps bound up with recent editions of Bibles for teachers, such as the International and the Cambridge, also contain much information which "Inquirer" seeks. It is amusing to notice that some of the religious newspapers which vigorously denounce the higher criticism offer these Bibles as premiums for new subscribers. Very interesting, also, are such books as Sayce's Patriarchal Palestine, Conder's Explorations in Palestine, McCurdy's History, Prophecy and the Monuments and Hilprecht's Recent Researches in Bible Lands. These books are all suitable for popular reading and might well find a place in every Sunday school library. Those who wish fuller lists of treatises on this subject will find them in Dr. Zenos's book, the first one mentioned above.

AS TO IAN MACLAREN.

Will you kindly inform us whether Dr. Watson's name is "John Maclaren Watson," or simply "John Watson." When his name first began to appear in American papers it was printed as first above, and his pen name was said to be derived from the first two names with the simple change of "John" to the Scotch "Ian." But latterly he appears as "Rev. John Watson," or "Ian Maclaren," as he is better known.

Again, how comes it that in a recent interview he says, "I am not a Scotchman, but a Highlander"? I had always supposed that all "Highlanders" were Scotchmen, although, as we all know, Scotchmen are "Highlanders" and "Lowlanders" as well. C. R. B.

We referred this query to Mr. James MacArthur, one of the editors of The Bookman, and his reply follows:

Dr. Watson's name is simply John Watson. When he adopted a nom de guerre he did so by converting John into the Gaelic, Ian, and taking his mother's maiden name, Maclaren. Certain papers had taken it for granted that Maclaren was a middle name, but this is a mistake.

As to his statement, "I am not a Scotchman, but a Highlander," he is perfectly correct. A Highlander belongs to the Celtic race, and between the Celt and the Scot there is a wide difference in temperament and disposition. The other day in New York Dr. Watson remarked that it was curious that no one had noticed how strange it was that he should be writing of a people to whom he did not belong by birth and breeding. In several places in his stories the observant reader will note this where he speaks of the character of Donald Menzies and Lachlan Campbell, who always speak with a different accent. The Highlander speaks pure English with very little dialect. As to their nature: The Celt is fiery, impulsive, hot-headed and eloquent. The Scot is inarticulate, undemonstrative and is slow to catch fire, but when the Scot is excited or provoked he is fierce in love or hate, the fierceness which Burns speaks of as never far from tenderness. No better examples of the difference between the Celt and the Scot could be cited than the two men we have had with us during the autumn. Dr. Watson, the Highlander, genial and a born raconteur, full of poetry and fire, hospitable and open-hearted, and Mr. Barrie, locked up within himself, undemonstrative, but with a whole world of imagination and affection shut up within himself.

THE PLEA FOR THE OLD BIBLE.

Some months ago we published an article by Prof. Irving F. Wood of Smith College entitled The New Bible. More recently we printed a criticism of the article by Rev. C. W. Greene under the heading given above. A member of Professor Wood's Bible class thus answers Mr. Greene:

The good old Bible of Spurgeon and Meyer, Cook and Moody is our text-book, and under the keen, scholarly, reverent touch of Professor Wood suffers no loss. Said a saintly soul to us as we came from the class today, "The Bible was never so precious, so full of meaning, as since I've studied it with our teacher, Professor Wood." His method is admirable. Profound questions are freely discussed with no clashing of opinions, for all seek the truth, and teacher and students alike are made to feel as never before the true value of the Book of books. The meetings at the club are anticipated from Sabbath to Sabbath, and no one goes out from the hour's study without greater zeal and deeper love for the divine Author. No "skeptical rot" is found in the teachings of this professor, however it may be with others who enter into the fields of "higher criticism." "Had I in my younger days had such a teacher it would save me days of doubt and distress," said the lady before quoted. S. E. B.

A Connecticut pastor takes exception to another statement of Mr. Greene, that "the hundreds of men without pastorates have no gospel for the heathen and no gospel for the small, weak churches at home. They have a gospel for revenue only." This correspondent says:

I am not without a pastorate, but I respectfully protest against the publication of such a slander. I know of more than one pulpitless minister who, in true, heartfelt devotion to his Master, Christ, is ready to preach his gospel in its greatest purity. Who shall rise up and say that they have no gospel to preach? If hundreds of ministers who have pulpits would not apply for a hearing in every eligible, vacant pulpit, it may be that some of their more unfortunate brethren would have an opportunity to preach to at least some "small, weak church." NEBRASKA AFTER THE BATTLE.

While the recent election was disappointing in its results in Nebraska, Eastern friends should not consider the case hopeless. In 1890 three parties contended for the governorship, and it was practically impossible to determine the choice without an official count, each candidate having received in the vicinity of 70,000 votes. This year the parties opposing Republicans were fused absolutely, and their combined strength secured only a few thousand majority. So it may still be said that nearly one-half of the Nebraska people are in favor of honest money. While there was an evident desire on the part of many to pay obligations in cheap money, there are still a large number who maintain their integrity and are entitled to further consideration. Though the Populists control the legislature the influence of a powerful minority of conservative members will be thrown against extreme or offensive measures. Discredited for the present, the State will soon resume its former position. There is yet strong loyalty to State, nation and church among this people, and with patience and sympathy business and religious stability are assured. W. Q. B.

THE DIFFERENCE PLAINLY STATED.

The question was lately asked in our columns why the Presbyterians at their great meeting in Carnegie Music Hall, New York, raised only $6,000 for missions, while the Christian Alliance, in the same building, raised $112,000. A Presbyterian undertakes to answer the question as follows:

The Presbyterians advertised as attractions two men who are the farthest removed of all men, who are equally famous, probably, from devoted zeal in missionary work. The business of one is politics and of the other sensational preaching—neither of them necessarily kin to the mission business. The Presbyterians were dealing with a side issue. They are not devoted, body and soul, to the work of evangelization. They believe in it and work for it and are sincere, but they are not deeply in earnest. On the other hand, what do the Christian Alliance people advertise as attractions? Nothing whatever. What do they do? They spend hours in earnest, urgent prayer before they make the money effort. They hold conventions wherein every word and look points in one sole direction—missions. They simply follow out the old-time ideas of prayer based on faith. If they did such droning at the throne of grace as our average Wednesday evening prayer meeting people do, they would doubtless get the same results, or lack of result, but they don't. They mean what they say and are willing to back it up with their last dollar. We—you and I—don't. You would not give your last dollar for missions and thrust yourself right out on the faith plank any sooner than you would try to fly; and, as for me, I would be afraid to utter a good live prayer in the Wednesday evening meeting for fear of disturbing the conventionalities; and we are no worse than the majority. I only mention us because we are handy illustrations.

Dr. Simpson delights in giving every cent he can scrape up into the missionary box. He has associated with him people who live for missions. We don't. We live for ourselves and our families and other respectable motives. Yours in the faith—such as it is—

E. G. S.

OUR DUTY TO THE DISTANT.

While memories of blessed experiences at Christmas still linger with us, why should we not continue to prove, each for himself, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive?" Perhaps never before were the lonely and the destitute so generously and beautifully remembered as this year. That was truly "beginning at Jerusalem." Why should we not continue to manifest our thankfulness by reaching out "to the uttermost parts of the earth?" One united, resolute effort would bring up the resources of the American Board to the amount asked by the missions, and prevent the threatened reduction. That would be a world-wide Christmas gift to our Master, which would bless not only the missionaries and their co-laborers from among the native brethren in every land, but also countless souls who have not yet come to the light. The amount is only $65,000. Are we thankful for our lot in this land? Let us show it by doing this now for those less blessed than we are. E. M. S.

FAIRMOUNT COLLEGE AGAIN.

Referring to my article in The Congregationalist Oct. 22, entitled A Question of Comity and More, and to Rev. Frank L. Ferguson's rejoinder of date Nov. 12, I thank you for the permission to say that I have been, from the time it was first proposed in April, 1893, opposed to the planting of more than one Congregational college in Kansas, or the calling on the Congregational Education Society to indorse and aid such a college.

R. M. TUNNELL.

EDUCATION.

—— Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott is to give the Levering lectures at Johns Hopkins University this year. The theme will be The Bible as Literature.

—— Columbia University, New York city, has just established a separate department of history and elected a graduate of Columbia, Prof. W. M. Sloane, now of Princeton, to become head of the department. Professor Sloane accepts the call.

—— Doane College, Nebraska, will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary next year. It is proposed to raise $25,000 in the State as a quarter-centennial endowment fund. Subscriptions of $1 and upwards, to be sent monthly, are called for. Doane College has done a noble work for Nebraska. It has laid solid foundations, has substantial buildings and an excellent equipment so far as it goes. It is more than ever entitled to help from Eastern friends, for further investment counts more than ever now that the institution is so well established. We believe fully that one college in a Western State is as many as Congregationalists ought to be called on to support. For Nebraska there can be no question that Doane is the one college entitled to such support.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. C. T. WEITZEL.

Mr. Weitzel, assistant pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, died Dec. 20, after a short illness. He was born in Germany about 48 years ago. He graduated from Yale in 1869, and was especially successful as an organizer. He accepted the assistant pastorate of Plymouth Church in 1894, coming to the work from Santa Barbara, Cal., where he was in charge of a church, having previously been pastor of the church in Norwich, Ct.

REV. GEORGE W. WAINWRIGHT, D. D.

Dr. Wainwright died at his home in Blair, Neb., Dec. 18. Born in Nottingham, Eng., his early life was spent in western New York. He graduated at Chicago Seminary in 1862, and held pastorates in Dundee, Ill., Cheboygan Falls, Wis., and Blair, Neb. During the war he was chaplain of the Fifty-second Illinois Infantry. He leaves a widow and three daughters, the eldest the widow of the late Rev. G. T. Hall and the youngest, Miss Nellie, of the Japan Mission.

Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

What could be more fitting than that union Forefathers' Day service almost in sight of Plymouth Rock? Whether the forefathers would have extended the liberal fellowship which marked this occasion might be questioned, but that all degrees of liberality were represented in the gathering which met in recognition of the Pilgrim faith is a forceful indication of the respectful regard which the views of that faith command today.

Should the observance of Forefathers' Day by individual churches become general, as appearances seem to indicate, the numerous toastings of the Pilgrims are likely to give them a warmer time than their virtuous lives would seem to justify. The large increase of these celebrations augurs well for strengthening denominational unity.

The beneficial reflex effect, even upon an unbeliever, of interesting himself heartily in Christian work is illustrated in our California news this week.

No one will question the value of a certain Connecticut C. E. Society to its church. Efficiency is known more truly by deeds than words.

"We are happy!"—an expression from a country church of which, consequently, it does not need to be said that it is at work.

What is believed to be the largest chorus of its kind in the country is arousing interest and commendation in Wisconsin.

A suggestion for increasing the interest of prayer meetings comes from the far Northwest.

THE LOWELL COUNCIL.

The council to consider the controversies in the First Church held its fourth and final day's sessions Dec. 23, and unanimously adopted the following result:

In view of the present state of the difficulty between the two parties in controversy and the fact that the final decision as to the identity of the First Congregational Church must come from the civil courts where the matter is now pending, the council finds:

1. That the pastorate of Rev. G. F. Kenngott terminated Dec. 31, 1895.

2. That the meeting of June 19, 1896, held in the vestry of the First Congregational meeting house, at which it was voted "that the First Congregational Church in Lowell, in the County of Middlesex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, be incorporated under the provisions of law by the name of the First Trinitarian Congregational Church in Lowell," was held in disregard of the standing rules of the First Congregational Church but in conformity with the statutes of the State.

3. That both bodies claiming to be the original First Congregational Church are de facto Congregational churches, and the council recommends that until the aforesaid judicial decision is given both churches be recognized under the names which they respectively claim.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

N. D.—Wahpeton Conference met at Hankinson, Dec. 12, Rev. William Edwards preaching the sermon. Addresses were also made on Total Abstinence, Prohibition, and How May We Prepare the Way of the Lord. Supt. H. C. Simmons and Rev. William Edwards presented a resolution in favor of a self-denial offering for the C. H. M. S. at this critical time. The meeting was helpful, though a snow blockade prevented many from attending. The claims of Christian Endeavor, the Christian college and home missions were discussed, and an offering was made for the C. H. M. S.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Yale.

The Fogg scholarship prizes offered to the Junior Class for high standing in all studies have been awarded for the first term to Messrs. Amy, Evans, Hanna, Jusup, Lyman, McAllister, Mapes, Moor, Reed and York.

Oberlin.

Prof. A. H. Currier has been granted leave of absence from April 1 for a summer in Europe. His courses in homiletics and practical theology will thus be compressed into a shorter period.——Preaching exercises will be held weekly next term, instead of fortnightly as heretofore.——Prof. E. I. Bosworth is spending the holidays at Elgin, Ill.—— Rev. C. A. Clark will give before the seminary a series of four mission studies the first of next term.

CLUBS.

MASS.—The Old Colony Club held a largely attended meeting in Brockton, Dec. 21, at which an interesting and instructive address was given by the distinguished Pilgrim historian, Hon. W. T. Davis of Plymouth, on The Origin, Career and True Character of the Pilgrims. Excellent musical selections were rendered by the quartet of the South Church of Brockton.

N. H.—Forefathers' Day was appropriately celebrated by the Ascutney Club at West Lebanon, Dec. 21, with a thoughtful address by Prof. M. W. Jacobus of Hartford Seminary on the topic Christ and the Bible with the Puritan, and the Bible with the Puritan Descendants of Today, and a paper by Rev. Dr. S. P. Leeds on The Burial Hill Declaration.

The Pascataqua Club held its Forefathers' meeting with the North Church, Portsmouth, Dec. 22. Addresses in harmony with the day were given by Rev. C. E. Jefferson of Chelsea, Mass., on Puritan Political Problems and Ours, and Pres. W. D. Hyde of Bowdoin on The Spiritual Opportunity of the Public School. The social features and dinner were enjoyable as usual.

VT.—The Passumpsic Club met in St. Johnsbury, Dec. 21. The banquet was in the North Chapel. After-dinner speeches were made by ex-Governor Farnham on Good Citizenship and by Mrs. W. P. Smith on Our Pilgrim Mothers. The address of the evening was by Rev. E. L. Clark, D. D., of Boston, on The Pilgrims, showing especially their sweet charity, hospitality, rugged honesty and simplicity.

D. C.—The Washington Club met Dec. 22 with First Church. A bountiful dinner was furnished by the Ladies' Aid Society. Excellent addresses were made by Hon. S. A. Northway, M. C., Hon. M. Brosius, M. C., and Rev. C. H. Richards, D. D. The exercises were varied by appropriate music, a pleasant feature of which was singing by a chorus of Puritan maidens.

OHIO.—Forefathers' Day was celebrated by the Cleveland Club, Dec. 21. The theme was The Pilgrim, and toasts were responded to on The Pilgrim Soldier, Rev. James Brand, D. D.; The Pilgrim Scholar, Prof. E. I. Bosworth; The Pilgrim Woman, Miss E. M. Perkins; The Pilgrim Doctor, Dr. A. G. Hart; The Pilgrim Merchant, Prof. H. E. Bourne; The Pilgrim Politician, Rev. P. F. Sutphen, D. D.

ILL.—The Central Illinois Club celebrated Forefathers' Day with its usual banquet in the parlors of First Church, Peoria. After the collation Dr. F. A. Noble of Chicago gave a powerful address on The Pilgrims of Scrooby and Leyden. This is the second meeting of the club for the year.

MICH.—The Eastern Club observed Forefathers' Day at Detroit. A banquet was given at the Russell House. The guest and principal speaker of the evening was Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., of Boston. He was enthusiastically received, and spoke on Haunts of the Pilgrims in England and Holland.

MINN.—The Minnesota Club held its Forefathers' meeting at Park Church, St. Paul, Dec. 21, with an attendance of over 200. Rev. M. S. Hughes made the leading address on Ultimate America, after which the following toasts were responded to: The Pilgrim Fathers—How Best Honor Their Memories? The Education of the Pilgrim, The Pilgrim and the Ultimate American, The Pilgrim in Lighter Vein, The Legacy of the Foremothers, National Prosperity as the Outgrowth of the Character of the Forefathers. This meeting marked the high water line thus far in the history of the club.

WN.—Puget Sound Club kept Forefathers' Night in the parlors of First Church, Tacoma, Dec. 16. The topic was The Puritan Idea. Pres. S. B. L. Penrose of Whitman College was the guest of the club and made the leading address, defining the Puritan idea as a conception of life and character according with the highest law. Several persons participated in the discussion, and all the addresses were of a high order.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

The choir of Shawmut Church sang Gounod's St. Cecilia last Sunday morning, and Dr. W. E. Barton preached a Christmas sermon.——Rev. I. J. Lansing told the Park Street congregation of the evil consequences of suppressing truths prejudicial to the characters of prominent persons.——The Sunday school at Berkeley Temple held its annual graduating exercises at the morning service, with reports, addresses and promotions of pupils from lower to higher grades.——Rev. A. A. Berle was welcomed back to his pulpit at Brighton after a six weeks' absence in Europe.——In the Village Church, Dorchester, a special memorial service was held for the late Hon. Henry L. Pierce, long a prominent member of the parish. Rev. G. W. Brooks preached an appropriate sermon reviewing the life of Mr. Pierce.——The Old South held a musical service in memory of Dr. Joseph Barnby with a large attendance. The music was selected wholly from the late composer's works. The special choir of 16 voices included the best local talent. The offering will be contributed to the fund for the bereaved family.

Massachusetts.

NEWTON.—Eliot. A pioneer Christmas service on Christmas morning was so largely attended and developed so much enthusiasm as to warrant the hope that this habit of Christian fellowship might become chronic in this Puritan meeting house.

MEDFIELD.—In parting with their pastor, Rev. N. T. Dyer, who is to become pastor of the First Church, Ashburnham, his people reminded him anew of their regard by presenting him with a gold watch, while his family were the recipients of valuable tokens of esteem and affection.

SWAMPSCOTT.—First observed Dec. 29 as a special day of prayer for a quickening of the spiritual life of the church. A pastoral letter called the attention of the members to the needs of the church and their duties and privileges. Rev. G. A. Jackson is pastor.

WINCHESTER has granted the pastor, Rev. D. A. Newton, leave of absence till his health is restored, and will provide for the supply of the pulpit. The church is fortunate in having several ministers among its members. One of them is Rev. S. W. Adriance, who has lived here for some years during his slow recovery from nervous prostration, and is greatly beloved by the people. He will preach next Sunday and will lead the prayer meetings till the pastor returns. An elaborate and interesting Sunday school Christmas exercise last Sunday afternoon was conducted by Supt. E. L. Barnard, with an address by Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth.

DIGHTON.—Brick recently lost by death one of its most highly esteemed and valuable members, Deacon Nathan Walker, aged 87. For over a year the pulpit has been supplied by Rev. Granville Yager of Hingham. The benevolences and charities of the church the past year have amounted to more than $10 each from resident members. Unanimity and genuine spiritual interest exist.

LOWELL.—French held a well-attended service Christmas Day. Rev. J. M. Greene, D. D., and Rev. G. H. Johnson assisted the pastor, Rev. T. G. A. Coté. The exercises were in both French and English and consisted of a sermon by Dr. Greene, the reception of eight new members and the communion, with a collection for the Massachusetts H. M S., of which this church is a beneficiary. Much pleasure in the present success of the church was expressed by visitors.

PLYMOUTH.— Pilgrimage arranged a special unique service for Forefathers' Day, inviting the churches of the town generally to participate. Eight or nine churches were represented in a large congregation which filled the house. Special music appropriate to the service was sung by a chorus of 30. The pastor, Rev. E. W. Shurtleff, read a long historical poem on The Voyage of the Mayflower, and the other clergymen had parts in the service.

WORCESTER.—Pilgrim. Rev. Alexander Lewis recently sent to the members a pastoral letter and accompanying blank, requesting each to indicate his present activity in attendance upon the preaching services, devotional meetings, philanthropic, educational or other work, also what additional work each would undertake.——Hope. Of $318 for benevolences last year $143 were for the A. B. C. F. M. During the five years of the present pastor, Rev. E. W. Phillips, the church has built a new house of worship, increased its membership from 87 to 174, its Sunday school from 167 to 340 and benevolences from $38 to $318.——Plymouth. The Men's Club observed Forefathers' Day, Dec. 21, with appropriate addresses. Ladies and representatives of other men's organizations in the city were guests.——The paper before the ministers Dec. 21 was by Rev. Alexander Lewis on The Focalization of the Forces of the Church and Ministry for the Best Spiritual Results.

WEST BROOKFIELD has sustained a great loss in the recent death of Deacon S. N. White, Dec. 23, at the advanced age of 81. He held the office of deacon for many years and was highly respected. Nearly all his life was spent on the old homestead where he died. He was greatly interested in the welfare of his native town, and he will be greatly missed in the community.

CHARLTON.—The parsonage has been furnished with a furnace, and the pastor, Rev. G. O. Jenness, is giving a course of stereopticon lectures, the proceeds of which are to pay for it. Although the pastor has been here but a short time, the attendance has increased and a branch Sunday school is held at one of the out-districts.

WARE.—East reports for the year 16 accessions and $3,500 benevolences. The special feature of the work has been the Men's Sunday Evening League. The attendance has been doubled by its efforts, reaching an average of 375, including many former non-church-goers. Rev. A. B. Bassett is pastor.

BARRE.—Evangelist E. A. Whittier conducted a series of successful revival meetings with the Congregational and Methodist churches, Dec. 6-20. Rev. J. F. Gaylord is pastor.

SPRINGFIELD.—North, which mourned the loss of Deacon E. G. Norton, Dec. 3, was called on two weeks later to lose another of its official board, Samuel K. Foster, who had served as deacon for 22 years. His ancestors for three generations were represented in the ministry. He was left an orphan at six years of age, without near friends to care for him. But he led a noble life. He was for a long time the S. S. superintendent at Monson, and for 26 years has been a prominent Christian worker.

The churches of Berkshire County have now the necessary funds in hand for a county missionary and are looking around for the man.——Rev. C. S Rich, Stockbridge, the newly settled pastor, is taking a short vacation.——Deacon H. A. Barton, Dalton, has been elected president of the Mass. S. S. Association.

Maine.

PHILLIPS reports forward movements. Repairs are being made, the Ladies' Social Union contributing to the expense. New singing-books and a new organ have been obtained for the Sunday school. The Young Men's Club, recently formed, has awakened interest.

LEWISTON.—Pine Street, Rev. G. M. Howe, pastor, reports 17 additions the past year, 267 during the present pastor's term of office and 1,068 since its formation. The changes are rapid owing to the manufacturing element of the city.

YARMOUTH.—First. The congregation signalized a recent day by raising pledges of much more than enough money to pay off the church debt. Rev. M. S. Hartwell has just accepted a call to the pastorate.

SKOWHEGAN.—The estimated result of the Gale meetings is the conversion of about 300 persons. Evangelist Gale and his helpers are now at work in Houlton.

Old South, Farmington, receives from a Boston woman, Mrs. G. F. Blake, $50 for screens to protect the memorial windows. The ladies lately netted $123 by a fair.——Jonesport has raised $30 for the Armenian orphans.——The women of Mechanic Falls secured $40 reported at an experience meeting.

New Hampshire.

CONCORD.—First. There were recently found the constitution, records and roll of membership of a society formed by the women of this church in 1825, called "The Ladies' Association of Concord, Auxiliary to the American Board of Missions." In 1826 there were 100 members. This must have been among the earliest, if not the first, of the Woman's Board societies. There was also organized a "Juvenile Female Association." These societies were organized by Mrs. McFarland, the wife of the pastor.

BARTLETT.—The two Sunday preaching services attract full houses, especially the evening service, which aims to emphasize the simple gospel. With a total church membership of only 34, the regular attendance on the week day prayer meeting averages nearly 60 and the Sunday school about 100. The external finish on the new edifice is nearly completed.

MARLBORO.—Rev. J. S. Colby will preach eight evangelistic sermons for Sunday evenings of the next two months. They are designed specially for the young and will be on Searching Biblical Questions. The Y. P. S. C. E. has made the church a Christmas present of a range for the chapel kitchen.

CLAREMONT.—The pastor, Rev. J. B. Lawrence, has arranged to give a series of Sunday evening discourses on the general topic, Nineteenth Century Proofs of God's Coming Kingdom. By vote a monthly missionary concert will hereafter be held.

The King's Daughters in Hollis have increased in six years from 10 to more than 50. At their annual sale they netted nearly $80.——The Juniors of West Lebanon by a recent fair netted $95 for the church.

Vermont.

ST. JOHNSBURY.—North, finding itself in debt at the close of the year, raised $1,200 in a few minutes at the Sunday morning service, thus clearing the burden.

Rhode Island.

THORNTON.—Only in the evening is a preaching service held. The congregational singing is especially hearty because of the large proportion of English people, who have been trained to sing. A Christmas Day supper is a feature of this Sunday school.

CRANSTON.—Edgewood. Already 20 churches in the State are pledged to help this church secure its much needed house of worship to the extent of one dollar per household, if possible.

PROVIDENCE.—Elmwood Temple. The two days' fair netted $200 for the Ladies' Society.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—United. The Men's Club service was addressed last Sunday evening by Judge S. E. Baldwin on The Place of the Ecclesiastical Society in Congregationalism.——Howard Avenue has added two new departments to the Sunday school—a home department and a course of evening studies and lectures pertaining to Biblical questions.——Dwight Place in its annual reports shows growth in strength and efficiency the past year, 67 persons having united with the church, 37 on confession. The total membership is 846. Benevolences amounted to $3,400. The Bible school numbers 485, showing an increase. Dr. J. E. Twitchell is pastor.

NEW LONDON.—Second. The society has voted to accept the gift of Mrs. J. N. Harris of a new parsonage, but it is undecided as regards the site. Nothing will be done for the present. It is proposed to locate it just below the church property on Broad Street. The land there would cost $8,000, and one contribution of $2,500 has already been offered. A member of the church has generously given money for a much needed heating apparatus in the chapel.

GREENWICH.—The gain in membership last year was nine on confession and seven by letter. The benevolent contributions amounted to $1,709. The S. S. room has been renovated and repaired at a cost of more than $1,450. During the past few years 33 persons have died who were members of the church 50 years or more. Rev. R. T. Hall is pastor.

RIDGEFIELD.—Through the circulation of pledges by efficient committees of the Y. P. S. C. E. subscriptions have been secured more than enough to provide for the payment of a debt of $7,950. The pledges are made to cover a period of five years, thus providing for twenty quarterly payments. Rev. J. W. Ballantine is pastor.

HARTFORD.—Handsomely decorated edifices and elaborate Christmas music were the order of the day last Sunday and unusually large congregations were present.——Center. The four o'clock vesper services are so popular that the house is filled every Sunday and many are unable to gain admittance. Rev. Dr. C. M. Lamson is pastor.

SHELTON.—Rev. L. M. Keneston occupied his pulpit Dec. 13, after nearly two months' absence through illness. The occasion was observed by the celebration of the Lord's supper. It was the fourth anniversary of the organization of the church and the third of the installation of the pastor.

HADLYME.—The winter work is well in hand, with three evening gatherings during the week: a neighborhood prayer meeting, a meeting for Bible study and the church prayer meeting. All these meetings, as also the Sunday services, are well attended and the interest is deepening.

CHESHIRE.—The parsonage has been put in excellent order within and without and a new kitchen range added to the other improvements. The pastor, Rev. J. P. Hoyt, has recently returned from a Southern trip to visit his sons and was presented on his return with $100.

SIMSBURY.—The mission band at a recent sale and supper realized over $60, partly for the Armenians. The new chapel was opened Dec. 20. It is finished in old colonial style in harmony with the church. It seats 150 and cost about $4,000. Rev. C. E. Stowe is pastor.

TRUMBULL.—The women have sent a barrel valued at $80 to Nebraska. Through the efforts of the Endeavor Society 25 persons have been brought into church membership and $300 have been raised for benevolences.

MILLINGTON is now relieved of the state of public quarantine into which it was thrown by the recent diphtheria epidemic. Church services were resumed last Sunday and the day schools are once more in session.

Preston receives $3,000 from the late William Loring.——Second Church, Putnam, has accepted a gift of memorial windows and arranged for other improvements ——Bristol holds a reception to its adult members New Year's afternoon and evening.——The ladies' society at Columbia have sent a barrel to a Nebraska missionary.——Mrs. S. P. Scoville, whose death recently occurred, was the oldest member of the church at Goshen, having been a member 70 years.——Rev. B. F. Perkins of South Coventry is conducting a successful primary home department. ——The "Try Band" of the Torrington Third Church netted $70 from their recent tea.——Hereafter seats will be free in Niantic.——Deep River resumes services in its house after the building of an addition for the new organ.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

CORTLAND.—The pastor, Rev. W. H. Pound, has made a new departure in the way of a Bible class which meets on a week day evening. The enrolled membership is 50, and the attendance from 75 to 100. The plan is to ascertain about the Bible—its versions, manuscript form, purpose, books, language and so on. Then the study is taken up by books, two or three meetings being devoted to a book. The class is encouraged to bring written questions, a part of the time being devoted to answering them. The course thus far is marked with unusual success.

SALAMANCA has had a generous supply of wood donated to it, and the male members of the society held an old-fashioned wood bee, Dec. 19, to cut a winter's supply.

MORAVIA.—The church is deeply bereaved in the loss of the pastor's wife, Mrs. Hampton, after being afflicted six months with consumption and heart disease.

First Church, Lockport, has recently formed a Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. Rev. J. W. Bailey is pastor.

New Jersey.

EAST ORANGE.—Trinity. For some months Rev. F. W. Baldwin, D. D., has been considering a call to the chair of history and economics at Bates College, and the knowledge of the strong pressure brought to bear upon him by the friends of that institution, of which he is a graduate, to accept the call has in turn roused Dr. Baldwin's own people to vigorous remonstrance against his leaving them. In many public and private ways they have manifested the strong regard which they feel for him and their conviction that his work with them was by no means yet done. He has at last yielded to these earnest solicitations and announced his decision last Sunday, to the great relief and satisfaction of the congregation. No doubt the tie between them will be all the stronger because of this experience.

VERONA.—Last March public worship under Congregational auspices was begun in the Verona club rooms. A society was formed and services were continued under the ministrations of an Andover student until fall. Nov. 5 a church was organized and Rev. W. J. Paske was installed as pastor. Subscriptions to a building fund to the amount of $2,000 were soon secured, and on the 10th inst. the corner stone of a house of worship was laid, Dr. B. F. Bradford assisting. The new building is to cost about $3,000. A spirit of harmony prevails and the outlook is good.

THE SOUTH.

Alabama.

NEW DECATUR.—People's has asked Rev. R. K. Stetson to remain another year as pastor. The church roll has been increased by 14 during the 16 months of the pastorate. Dec. 13 $11 were raised for the Armenians.

Texas.

DALLAS.—First. Rev. C. I. Scofield has declined the second call to this pastorate. Eighty members who have been worshiping at the Grand Avenue Branch have withdrawn from the First Church for the purpose of forming a separate organization.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

PORTSMOUTH.—A council recognized the church, now about a year old, Dec. 17. Rev. W. H. Baker was also recognized as pastor. The city has about 16,000 inhabitants and is an important railroad and manufacturing center. The earnestness and devotion of the 50 members is noticeable. Dr. Washington Gladden preached the sermon and Dr. D. W. Leonard offered prayer.

CLEVELAND.—By a change of the constitution each contributing church will hereafter be entitled to elect one member of the City Missionary Society and one additional member for each 50 resident church members or major fraction thereof.

First Church, Painesville, on a renewed request by the pastor, Rev. P. W. Sinks, accepts his resignation but extends the date to May 1, instead of Dec. 31.

Illinois.

SOUTH PEORIA has recently established a mission in a needy portion of the city, which is drawing large numbers both to its S. S. and preaching services.——First. The C. E. Society is managing the cabin boat work, and has arranged for the floating chapel, "Glad Tidings," to be occupied by religious workers several nights in the week. The Salvation Army co-operates. The annual church meeting revealed great activity in all departments. Five-minute written reports from the several heads of departments elicited favorable comments. This was pronounced the most interesting annual meeting of the church. The Sunday services are attended by large crowds. Rev. C. W. Hiatt, the pastor, has been reading to his evening congregation a Christmastide serial narrative in five chapters.

CHICAGO.—Bethlehem had for many years an organization for the benefit of the boys in its locality known as the "Boys' Union," under the special care of Mrs. Adams. Some, now successful business men, attribute their upward start to the influence of the union. Recently, in its place, was organized the "Gates Club," in honor of Mr. C. F. Gates, who for many years gave his means and time without stint to Bethlehem Mission and whose name is held in grateful memory by this people. The club starts with a membership of 63 boys, between 10 and 16 years of age.

BELVIDERE at its second annual meeting showed steady advance. The pastor, Rev. F. W. Hubbell, during nine months' service has gained the confidence of the people. Under his training, with the help of friendly singers, the church has just given an entertainment two evenings, netting $150 to begin a fund for a lot and a house of worship greatly needed.

STREATOR.—Bridge Street. Rev. W. E. M. Stewart has been continuing a serial entitled Our Better Self for six Sunday evenings. The congregation has steadily increased and the interest is strong. He also writes a song in connection with each chapter, which Mrs Stewart renders. The pastor also preaches at Riverside, each Sunday afternoon.

PEORIA.—Plymouth is worshiping in the basement of its new edifice. The structure will be completed and dedicated this winter. In addition to his regular church work, Rev. S. W. Meek, the pastor, is conducting a union teachers' meeting at the Y. M. C. A., with good results.

Indiana.

TERRE HAUTE.—First. The two boys, aged nine and 13 years, respectively, who destroyed over $1,000 of property in First Church, have been sentenced to the Plainfield reformatory. Examination by competent physicians proved them lacking entirely in a developed moral sense.——Second ends its year well, and reports 34 accessions in two years.

Indiana churches tend toward observing Forefathers' Day more largely each year.——Angola has organized a men's brotherhood and a woman's guild, and is also paying off its debts.

Michigan.

DETROIT.—Mount Hope recently added $60 to its treasury by a sale; and at Boulevard Chapel a similar effort was well rewarded.——People's. The Sunday evening services which for three months have been held in the Opera House have been transferred to Plymouth Tabernacle, the church home of People's Church. The building accommodates about 1,500.

EAST GRAND RAPIDS dedicated its new house Dec. 20. The house and lot cost $2,500, for which provision has been made within $200 by a grant of $500 from the C. C. B. S. Rev. W. H. Underhill is the indefatigable pastor. There are 50 in the membership.

BRIDGMAN.—Special services have resulted in about 40 professions of Christ. The church feels much encouraged. Rev. J. E. Arney assisted the pastor, Rev. E. S. Ireland.

CERESCO needs a bell, and desires to secure a second hand one. Rev. W. A. Bockoven is pastor of this home mission field.

In clearing a mortgage on the parsonage, the Clare church is free from its last financial encumbrance. ——The ladies' Christmas bazar at Morenci netted $226 despite unfavorable weather.——At Fisher's Station large congregations have gathered at the mission and 25 have made professions lately.—— Special activity is noted in the Men's Club for the Sunday evening service at Romeo.

Wisconsin.

APPLETON.—A year's experience with a boy choir of 18 members at morning service has led the Sunday Evening Club to secure a skilful choirmaster; and, after about two months' drilling, a chorus of over 100 men and boys furnishes the music at both morning and evening service. This is believed to be the largest chorus of its kind in the country and excites much interest.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

HARVEY.—About six months ago Rev. Edwin Ewell of Clarion began to gather this church and the people laid the foundation for a house of worship. Just before the recognition council was called a series of meetings was held, Rev. F. G. Wilcox of Mason City assisting the pastor. The church, which starts with 17 members, was recognized Dec. 19, Mr. Wilcox preaching the sermon. On the following day the building was dedicated. Rev. J. L. Ferner preached and led the people in raising $500 to clear the enterprise from debt. The building cost $1,500. No aid was asked from the C. C. B. S.

KNOXVILLE.—A council called to ordain Mr. G. W. Baxter did not see its way to proceed with the services, but expressed the hope that the ordination might take place at some future time. The principal question involved is one of interdenominational comity.

The recent installation at Eagle Grove of Rev. N. F. Douglass brought out the fact that there is but one other installed pastor in the Webster City Association, the venerable Father J. D. Sands, now past 80 years of age, and for 28 years pastor at Belmond.—— Special meetings at Lakeside resulted in a number of conversions. Evangelist Sayles assisted the pastor, Rev. L. R. Fitch.

Minnesota.

ANOKA has had varied experiences for several years, on the whole making progress in paying its debts. There was growth during the ministry of Rev. H. N. Pringle, but the pastorate was vacant for some months after his resignation. Encouragement comes with the new pastor, Rev. S. W. Dickinson, who, it is believed, will assist the church to enter upon a new era. The fine property is advantageously situated.

WATERVILLE AND MORRISTOWN.—Improvements in the church property in both places, the women assisting largely in raising funds, with increased contributions to home missions, mark the first year of self-support. Much of the credit is due to the efficient pastor, Rev. W. A. Warren, who has declined invitations from other attractive churches.

PRINCETON is developing missionary interest and giving to all the denominational benevolent societies. This shows marked change over preceding years. Through the influence of Rev. C. D. Moore Congregational Work is placed in every family. A revival interest is manifest.

ALEXANDRIA.—To the great joy of the people Rev. G. E. Soper withdraws his resignation and declines a flattering call to Owatonna. During his ministry a large and costly edifice has been built and dedicated free of debt. The desire to keep Mr. Soper here is unanimous.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Plymouth. The annual meeting of the Young Men's Bible Class was held Dec. 22. Mr. David C. Bell has been its leader since its beginning, 31 years ago, and during that time it is estimated that there have been connected with it as many as 3,500 young men.

AITKIN.—Increased congregations, S S. attendance doubled, and new hymn-books; a preaching appointment opened at a station where 20 persons unite in a C. E Society, and where a church building and organization are proposed, are reported by Rev. F. J. Brown.

ELK RIVER.—A grant of $500 by the C. C. B. S. enables the church to secure a parsonage, which is partly the gift of the deceased pastor, Rev. David Henderson. This is a union organization, and has never been helped by the H. M. S.

NORTHFIELD.—Evangelist C. N. Hunt is holding a series of meetings with marked results in developing the spiritual life of Christians and in conversions. Both town and college are deeply stirred.

CLARISSA.—The new meeting house has been dedicated, Rev. G. E. Soper preaching the sermon. Enough money was raised to clear the debt on the building.

WINONA.—Scandinavian. The edifice has been enlarged and a basement placed beneath, the First Church aiding to meet the expense.

NEW ULM.—An old debt has been paid and the church starts under the new pastor, Rev. H. W. Johnson of Washington, D. C., free of incumbrance.

At Walker a bell has been placed in the tower and all bills for the new meeting house are paid.

Kansas.

DOWNS.—Twenty-three persons were received to membership, Dec 6, from a country district, where special meetings have recently been held by the pastor, Rev. W. E. Brehm. Sixteen received baptism, including fathers, mothers and children. During these meetings 33 professed conversion and five others renewed their consecration.

JETMORE AND RUSH CENTER.—Rev. G. H. Hull, the pastor, preaches also at out-stations in the vicinity of each town. In a district 10 miles from the latter point, where he recently held a seven days' meeting, a deep revival is in progress.

GOODLAND is encouraged by recent and helpful additions to its membership. Men in the employ of the Rock Island Railway attend the services.

Eight conversions are reported at Seabrook, where the pastor has been holding special meetings, assisted by Rev. Messrs. J. E. McClain and W. M. Elledge; and 12 accessions have resulted from a two weeks' meeting at Western Park, conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. S. Bixby.

Nebraska.

OMAHA.—The churches generally devoted the services of Dec. 20 to subjects connected with Forefathers' Day.——Hillside has improved its church and parsonage property by the introduction of gas. The pastor, Rev Jacob Flook, helps to retain his large evening congregations by a varied musical program in which he assists personally.

ARCADIA.—Rev. J. F. Smith has been holding a series of special meetings at Dunham schoolhouse, an out-station, and so widespread has been the interest that nearly every family in the community has been reached. The converts will probably unite with the home church, strengthening it materially.

MCCOOK.—The annual meeting was one of great encouragement. Considering the hard times the record was remarkable. Nearly $1,400 have been raised for expenses and benevolence and all bills were reported paid. Rev. H. L. Preston was unanimously invited to remain for the third year, and accepted.

North Dakota.

There is an interesting movement in Bethany (German) Church in Morton County, about 11 miles south of Glen Ullin and away from the railroad. A genuine revival spirit is in the church, and conversions are frequent. Eight members were received Dec. 6. There are now 13 German churches in the State.

South Dakota.

SIOUX FALLS.—Pilgrims' Day was celebrated, Dec. 21, with a banquet given by the women, after which the Forefathers were toasted with appropriate sentiments. The installation of Rev. D. B. Scott, Dec. 22, was an interesting event to church, city and denomination. It was only after four years of service, in which the church has been greatly strengthened and blessed, that Mr. Scott felt it his duty to enter into this closer relationship, and rejoicing is general over his decision. His statement of belief as read before the council emphasized clearly the strength and spirit of the man, and the church warmly attested its attachment to him. The house of worship has lately been improved by moving the pipe organ to the rear of the auditorium, and by papering and otherwise beautifying the building.

CANOVA.—In the spring of 1896 the pastor distributed among his congregation 63 nickels and asked that on Thanksgiving Day they be returned with increase. The $45 so gathered were applied on parsonage debt. At Dover the same plan netted $35 for pulpit furniture.

HURON.—At the Forefathers' supper here the Congregational women provided over 500 people with an old-fashioned New England meal, which was followed by a finely rendered program; also a large quantity of food was distributed to the the poor.

VERMILLION.—Rev. G. E. Paddock has just closed his first year of service. Bills are all paid and a balance is in the treasury. The benevolences have exceeded those of any previous year.

CARTHAGE.—Rev. E. W. Jenney will open special meetings here at once. The women held a fair Dec. 12, which netted $104.

Utah.

SALT LAKE CITY.—Plymouth. The fourth year of the pastorate of Rev. J. D. Nutting closed Dec. 15. The new building is about to be furnished with seats through the kindness of an Eastern friend, borrowed settees having been used thus far. A beautiful oaken pulpit, the handiwork of the Yankee pastor, is greatly enjoyed. The first missionary concert was given by the women Dec. 6, with a program including 25 stereopticon views of the work in China, and by the way the people listened it was evident that genuine missionary work was a new idea to the Mormon mind.——Phillips is progressing under the new pastor, Rev. George Lindsay. It has recently put in a basement heating apparatus instead of stoves, has carpeted the audience-room and made other repairs.

All the churches are feeling the financial stress severely, but they are bravely carrying on their work—some in such poverty that their pastors give back to the needy more than they receive from their people. Mormons generally favor Mormons in matters of employment, and Gentiles have to take what is left, which in these times is often scarcely anything. For these reasons many families have been compelled to emigrate and some churches feel their losses severely. But all are hopeful and brave, and signs of promise are frequent.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

GUERNEVILLE.—The new $1,600 edifice was dedicated Dec. 13, Supt. J. K. Harrison and Sec. H. H. Wikoff aiding in the service. This church, one of the youngest in the association, has had a vigorous life, due largely to the aggressive work of the pastor, Rev. Francis Lawson, now 71 years old, and of his family. The leading man in the erection of the building, who gave about one-third of the cost, has been converted since the foundation was laid and spoke at the service of dedication. The C. C. B. S. furnishes $300 toward the cost.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Seamen's Bethel furnished Thanksgiving dinner for 150 persons. Conversions added to the gladness of the day.——Plymouth. The new headquarters of the W. B. M. P. are in this edifice, one of the best rooms having been placed at its disposal. Dr. Williams, pastor, is just entering his seventh year. Among Congregational ministers in the city he is antedated by only one, Rev. W. C. Pond, D. D., of Bethany.——Bethany recently netted $250 by a bazar.

HYDESVILLE AND ROHNERVILLE, though three miles apart, are served by Rev. G. A. Jasper, who lives at the cozy parsonage in the former village. Recently through his efforts several hundred dollars have been raised for renovating the property at Hydesville. Similar work is now being done at Rohnerville. Attendance at each place is better than for years.

SAN JUAN.—Since the coming of Rev. S. H. Cheadle about a year ago the church edifice has been in part renovated, and new paper, carpet and hymn-books have been furnished. About $260 have been paid on the parsonage debt. It hopes to reach self-support next year.

SARATOGA.—At the union Thanksgiving services a committee from the three churches was appointed to establish a temperance resort for young men. Rev. W. H. Cross, pastor of this church, is about beginning his fifteenth year of service.

LOS ANGELES.—First. During the two years of Rev. W. F. Day's pastorate 206 members have been received, 23 at the last communion. Dr. Day declines an increase of salary till other pressing needs are met.

Oregon.

PORTLAND.—First. Rev. Arthur W. Ackerman preached the Thanksgiving sermon at a union service of 10 churches, representing five denominations. Preliminary steps are being taken for the success of the National Council meeting, to be held with this church in October, 1898. It is proposed to present strong inducements for Eastern Congregationalists to attend.

SALEM.—Central. A meeting house, seating 250 persons, built in six weeks at a cost of $850, was dedicated Nov. 29 free of debt save a small loan from the C. C. B. S. The pastor, Rev. J. M. Beauchamp, began special gospel meetings the following evening.

Washington.

SPOKANE.—Westminster held its annual meeting Dec. 14, and the reports evidenced substantial progress. Thirty seven accessions by letter and 64 on confession brought the membership up to 359. The Ladies' Aid has raised for the church nearly $900, and two S. S missions are doing good work. All expenses have been met—a far more encouraging condition than a year ago. If the property can be held intact for another year the church is promised substantial aid. There is good reason to believe that the valuable edifice will be saved. Under the efficient ministry of the present pastor, Rev. F. B. Cherington, D. D., the church has grown into a position of influence second to none in the city.—— Pilgrim. The pastor, Rev. Jona. Edwards, is giving talks on The Books of the Bible, with charts, in connection with the Wednesday evening prayer meetings.

CHENEY.—Rev. O. F. Thayer has closed his labors, the serious illness of Mrs. Thayer's father calling them to Potsham, N. Y. During their 15 months' stay at this point 18 members have been added, Senior and Junior C. E. Societies organized and the parsonage debt has been decreased $125.

SEATTLE.—Taylor has recently enlarged and repaired its edifice to accommodate the growing work. An all-day fellowship meeting was held Dec. 9, closing with a rededication. The sermon was by Rev. W. J. Gray of Everett.

CLOVER was organized last May with nine members. A series of meetings held by Rev. W. C. Wise, the pastor, assisted by Rev. E. J. Singer of the C. S. S. and P. S., have resulted in 11 accessions, nine on confession.

Through the kindness of Dr. J. D. Kingsbury of Bradford, Mass., the church at Trent has received an organ in the place of one stolen from its building.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

At 73 years of age Kingsley A. Burnell, the mainstay of many a vigorous evangelistic campaign in both the East and the West, is as sprightly and ardent as ever. He has recently begun in Minnesota a season of house to house visitation and evangelism, spending several days in such places as Anoka, Elk River, Monticello, Clearwater, Excelsior and Stillwater. David C. Bell, one of Minneapolis's most earnest laymen, is co-operating with Mr. Burnell.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The Indiana convention was remarkable for the attention given to Junior work.

A strong society has been organized among the large force of colored soldiers at Fort Douglas, Salt Lake City.

Study of the Bible with special reference to personal work is now a regular department of State work in Illinois.

The attendance on the meetings of the society in the Central Church, Topeka, Kan., now necessitates the use of the main auditorium.

A reception for the aged members of the church, with refreshments and music, has brought much pleasure to societies that have tried it.

The use of all the car-sheds of the Union Traction Company, Philadelphia, has been given the evangelistic committee of the city union for meetings.

The first known Japanese society in the United States was organized at Santa Cruz, Cal., Nov. 20, by the same woman that formed our first Chinese society.

In the Cape Colony Union, of which Rev. Andrew Murray, D. D., the author of devotional books, is president, there are now 22 societies, and at least 10 others in the neighborhood.

From a Chinese society in Chicago, having a regular attendance of 30, within four years 16 members have united with the church, and each year three Endeavorers, on an average, return to China.

The first flag for the Morning Star was furnished by the Juniors of the church at Newton Center, Mass., the home of the captain's wife. A new flag being needed, this society has just supplied it.

The Boston societies have followed those of Chicago, New York and Philadelphia by arranging closer co-operation between Endeavorers and Student Volunteers. The Boston Volunteer League has 80 members, some of whom may be engaged to give missionary addresses or help in classes for mission study. The headquarters is at the Y. M. C. A.

In the celebration of Tennessee's centennial, which is to continue for six months, beginning in May, the Christian Endeavorers plan to have a part. A building will be erected for their headquarters, and meetings will be held there daily. The larger exhibition buildings of the centennial, standing in a park about two miles from the city hall, will be used by the C. E. convention of '98 at Nashville.

CLUBBING RATES.

For the convenience of our subscribers we have made arrangements with the publishers of some leading periodicals by which we can furnish them, in connection with The Congregationalist, at a special rate. The postage is prepaid in all cases. Subscribers may order as many of the publications named as they choose, at the prices annexed.

Atlantic Monthly	$3.25
The Century Magazine	3.60
St. Nicholas	2.60
Scribner's Magazine	2.60
Harper's Magazine	3.25
Harper's Weekly	3.25
Harper's Bazar	3.25
Harper's Round Table	1.60
American Kitchen Magazine	.75

Let all who send to us for the above periodicals take notice that, after receiving the first number, they must write to the publication itself, and not to us, in case of any irregularity, or if they wish to have the direction changed to any other post office. The money which is sent to us for these periodicals we forward promptly to the various offices, and our responsibility in the matter then ceases.

HARPER'S BAZAR

FRENCH CABINET.

Before we entered the field and undertook to supply French Curio Cabinets and Treasure Cases they were very expensive. We have brought them down nearly fifty per cent. in price, and there are twenty purchased now where formerly there was one.

It is quite the most decorative piece of furniture that you can find for the drawing room. They light up the whole apartment with their glow of color, and give a distinguished appearance to the most ordinary surroundings.

The cabinet here shown is our latest new model for 1897. It stands six feet in hight and is finished in a fire-bronze lacquer that is a marvel of color. The panels are hand-painted by leading artists, and each is framed in a galvano-plastic carved molding.

The glass in the sides is serpentine, being both concaved and convexed in a single pane. The back is heavy French plate; the shelves are nearly half an inch in thickness. The floor is richly carpeted with royal plush. Every detail is complete. It is a superb cabinet.

General Catalogue for 1897. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

During Christmas week people are not thinking or worrying much over business affairs. After Christmas Day itself there is stocktaking to be done, old accounts to be settled and bad bills to be charged off, so that it can be said that few seasons in the year are so uninteresting or devoid of real activity as that which intervenes between Christmas and say about the 15th of January. Consequently, to write of trade affairs at this time is like telling a story that every one knows.

But, if all are agreed as to the immediate state of business, there is much difference of opinion as to prospects for spring trade. The more sanguine expect a brisk, lively season, with advancing prices, and base this theory upon McKinley's inauguration in March, a new and improved Congress and the small stocks of merchandise in all hands except those of the manufacturer. More abstract reasons for their belief are: The triumph of sound money, the amendment of the tariff law for the purpose of providing more revenue and the hopeful prospects of some curative financial legislation.

On the other hand are the pessimists, who profess to expect nothing more than a moderate spring season, made necessary by the approach of warmer weather. These people point to the present flatness of business, the Spanish-Cuban question, declines in railway earnings and falling prices for several staples, notably iron and steel. The only real argument that these pessimists advance is the Spanish-Cuban affair. The others are factors of the past rather than of the future. Railroad earnings are and have been poor because of the general depression in trade, but if the spring movement of merchandise is brisk, earnings must naturally be favorably affected. With the opening of the spring season so close at hand it is no time to dwell upon poor railroad traffic, as that belongs to the past.

In regard to the Cuban question, our relations with Spain are so strained that it would seem to be easy to cause the fires of international war to be lighted, but not only this Administration but the incoming one as well appears to recognize this fact, and the natural assumption is that nothing will be done to violate the laws of neutrality between the two governments, at least not until the struggling Cubans have presented more important claims for recognition than any they have as yet vouchsafed. It is on this assumption of continued peace between this country and Spain that sanguine men do not allow the shadow of such a trouble to diminish their hope for a good, active spring trade.

MARY M. STARRETT.

Died, in Mt. Vernon, N. H., Nov. 11, Mrs. Mary M. Starrett. She had been in feeble health for many years, her last illness was long and she suffered much but she bore it all with a spirit of cheerful resignation, which came from her firm belief and trust in the wisdom and goodness of her Heavenly Father. She was an excellent woman, a devoted Christian, sunny and hopeful in temperament, and the memory of her life will be a sweet benediction to her surviving relatives and friends.

CANADIAN AUSTRALIAN LINE.—Special trip round the world, $560. R. M. For particulars apply to H. J. Colvin, 197 Washington Street, Boston, or any agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Do You Use It?

It's the best thing for the hair under all circumstances. Just as no man by taking thought can add an inch to his stature, so no preparation can make hair. The utmost that can be done is to promote conditions favorable to growth. This is done by Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, cleanses the scalp, nourishes the soil in which the hair grows, and, just as a desert will blossom under rain, so bald heads grow hair, when the roots are nourished. But the roots must be there. If you wish your hair to retain its normal color, or if you wish to restore the lost tint of gray or faded hair use

Miscellaneous.

BOUTON, Hilton C. H., formerly of Deerfield, N. H., is to supply at Henniker for the winter.
CUNNINGHAM, W. B., Niagara, N. D., recently received a fur coat from Eastern friends, for use during his long prairie drives.
DALEY, Chas. M., Huron, S. D., the efficient superintendent of the C. S. S. and P. S. for that State, has received a commission as chaplain of the First S. D. battalion of guards, with the rank of first lieutenant. He is a man of peace among the men of war and has long been a high officer in the S. S. army.
DAVENPORT, Merriam B., Albany, Vt., is engaged to supply during the remainder of the year for which Rev. David Wallace was appointed.
DREW, Frank L., and family, of Henry, S. D., have left for Tempe, Ariz., seeking relief for Mr. Drew from asthma.
LADD, Henry M., Euclid Ave. Ch., Cleveland, O., has been seriously ill with pneumonia, but is recovering. His pulpit has been supplied by Pres. C. F. Thwing, Rev. Dr. Cleveland, and others.
LEWIS, Edwin J., and his bride, on moving into the parsonage at Storrs, Ct., received from the Ladies' Aid Society an extension table and a dinner set.
MUNRO, G. A., of Milford, Neb., who has been ill for some time, has been obliged to go to Lincoln for treatment, and it is feared that his recovery will be slow. The church maintains all services during his illness.
RATTRAY, Benj. F., Columbia, Wn., goes to Washington, D. C., to accept a library appointment.
RICHARDS, Jehiel S., who recently resigned the pastorate of First Ch., Deer Isle, Me., at the earnest request of his people, has decided to remain at least until spring.
SMITH, Chas. H., Plymouth, Ct., and wife, have lost their only son, Vernon, who died of diphtheria, Dec 22. Christmas Day an infant child was pronounced hopelessly ill, and all the family, including Mr. Smith, are now suffering from the same disease. Deep sympathy is felt for them throughout the town, as well as in Hartford, where he was formerly pastor of Windsor Ave. Ch.
WILLIAMS, Edward M., of Yankton, S. D., who has been ill for the past few weeks, has gone to Chicago for treatment. The latest news from him is encouraging.

THE PARISIAN TOUCH.—The French are wonderful cabinet workers, and rival the world in the splendor of their decorative furniture. The only place in this city where French furniture can be seen and studied in all its glory is at the warerooms of the Paine Furniture Co., on Canal Street. A faint idea of the beauty of some of this French cabinet work may be gathered from an examination of the gold-mounted cabinet, of which an engraving appears in another column.

HOW TO VISIT CALIFORNIA.—Since the inauguration of personally-conducted tours, railroad travel has been revolutionized. Forty years ago a vestibule train in charge of a tourist agent and chaperon, and equipped with a barber, bath apartments and a lady's maid, could hardly have been imagined. Yet such progress has been made, and the special Pullman train used by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company on its Golden Gate tours is a veritable hotel on wheels; it is lighted by electricity and heated by steam, and affords all the comforts of a parlor, clubroom or private boudoir. The first tour to California will leave Boston, Jan. 26, 1897. Space for this tour is being rapidly engaged, the low rate of $315 from Boston placing it within the reach of all. The second tour will leave Feb. 23; $355 from Boston. The last tour will leave March 26; $220. Application for itinerary, detailed information and space should be made to Tourist Agent, 205 Washington Street, Boston, or George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

"CONGRESS IN SESSION."—Royal Blue Line personally conducted eight day tours to Philadelphia, Washington and Mount Vernon. Twenty-seven dollars covers every expense. Riggs House, Ebbitt House or Willard's used while in Washington. Stop over privileges. Leave Boston 6 P. M., Dec. 25, Jan. 14, Feb. 16, March 2 (inauguration) and other tours later. For itinerary, address A. J. Simmons, N. E. A., 211 Washington Street, Boston.

ESTIMATES OF MEN.

REV. DR. QUINT.

Dr. Quint could pass from grave to gay, from complex to simple, from writing to speaking, from colloquial utterances to sublime strains, and from these again to the hardest, coldest logic, with greater rapidity than any one else whom it has been our fortune to meet frequently or to hear publicly. It was well said of him by a colleague of his own religious order, "He has ability enough for ten men." It was supposed by some that his habits were not sufficiently regular as a student to accomplish as much as he might otherwise have achieved, but that is doubtful. In that particular he resembled Mr. Beecher; he worked when the mood was upon him and did wonders. His gifts were so many and strong as to almost obliterate the supposed line between talent and genius. A cursory view of his character and career would exhibit defects, but a closer analysis would remove some from the field of vision and extenuate others, while a balance in the scales of wisdom and charity would show a sum of achievement and usefulness greater than that of many negative personalities who would be accounted faultless. Within and without the Congregational order this death will leave a vacancy that will be felt till the last of his contemporaries has followed him to the world of spirits.—Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, in The Christian Advocate.

REV. DR. STORRS.

He is not a historian, yet there are few historians who have enriched the annals of time as he has with his lectures.—President Patton of Princeton University.

It [his life] is a grand expression, the finest, I think, that our Puritan annals have recorded, of the permanency and force, as well as of the beauty and adequacy, of our Puritan faith. As a denomination we have to thank Dr. Storrs for vindicating the adaptableness of our historic faith and polity to the ever-expanding demands of our civilization.—Rev. Dr. S. E. Herrick.

THE NATIONAL GROWTH OF HALF A CENTURY.

Ten years ago Dr. R. S. Storrs preached to his people in Brooklyn a sermon commemorating the fortieth anniversary of his settlement. In the course of it he spoke of the changes which had occurred in the country at large during that period. With slight alterations which we have ventured to make in two sentences, his words are as impressive today as they were then. He said:

When I stood in this pulpit on the stormy evening of Nov. 19, 1846, Mr. James K. Polk was in the second year of his presidency, against whom, two years earlier, I had cast my first national vote with the heartiest zeal. The war with Mexico had commenced, but the battles of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo had not been fought, nor Vera Cruz surrendered to our arms. It was still ten months before our troops entered the capital. The Oregon Treaty with Great Britain had been lately negotiated, but gold had not been found in California, nor was there any hint in the air of the vast immigration which was soon to draw an adventurous nation over the continent, and to build a new empire along the Pacific. The first line of telegraph, between Washington and Baltimore had been in operation for two years, and that between New York and Philadelphia for one year; but the novel invention was rather the wonder and the luxury of the few than the instrument of the many, and hardly the faintest prophecy had been given of the half-million miles of wire along which the messages of eager millions now incessantly pass. The oceanic telegraph was no more imagined than would have been an instrument for conversing with the stars. The Erie Railroad was not opened, nor that on the banks of the Hudson River, nor that between New Haven and New York. Less than 5,000 miles of railway track had been laid in the country as against the more than [175,000] miles now built and operated. An honored Congregational minister going to Oregon the year after I came here had to take eight months for the journey. He returned, some years since, in less than a week and now he can speak from the same point to friends in this city, over the telegraph, more quickly than we can send a messenger to upper New York. The national Union included twenty-nine States instead of the [forty-five] of today. It was years of course before slavery and freedom met in their fierce grapple in Kansas, fourteen years before the election of Lincoln, more than eighteen before the close of the Rebellion, with the resulting destruction of slavery. The nation has been essentially re-made since this pastorate began, in larger proportions, on a nobler and securer plan, the empty spaces of its immense territories have been largely occupied with villages and cities, its population has been multiplied from twenty to more than sixty millions, the moral and political life which pervades it has been vastly enriched in power and promise, its place in the world with its influence over the peoples of mankind has been signally exalted.

There is a school, a very powerful and increasing school, of politicians, financiers and music hall patriots, which holds that the British Empire exists primarily for the swelling of English dividends. So long as a black man remains unclothed and uninebriated, so long will there be fresh outlets for cottons and gin, qualified by tracts, and fresh inlets for rubber and gums.—London Chronicle.

Your anxiety is for your delicate child; the child that in spite of all your careful over-watching, keeps thin and pale. Exercise seems to weaken her and food fails to nourish. Look Around and see the women who are using Pearline. It's easy to pick them out. They're brighter, fresher, more cheerful than the women who have spent twice as much time in the rub, rub, rub, of the old way. Why shouldn't they be? Washing with Pearline is easy.

And look at the clothes that are washed with Pearline. They're brighter, and fresher, too. They haven't been rubbed to pieces on the washboard. They may be old, but they don't show it. For clothes washed with Pearline last longer.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 317 JAMES PYLE, New York.

THE HIGHER USE OF THE BIBLE.

In a series of sermons on The Spiritual versus the Literary Use of the Bible, Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall thus points out the use to be made of the Bible as different from all other books:

We may interest and educate and distinguish ourselves as scholars, and yet be nothing before God, not having heard his voice speaking to us out of the midst of the written Word. We may praise the beauty and exalt the dignity and applaud the wisdom of this splendid literature and yet be blind, not discerning that greater than Solomon who is here! We may become expert in the intricacies of Jewish ceremonial laws. We may trace the threads of Scriptural history out through the tangle of contemporary records; we may pore over the pathetically beautiful biographies of Jesus with the passion of the hero worshiper, and may saturate the memory with the stately phraseologies of apostolic lips, and all this we have the right to do in our glad freedom as workers in the Scripture; but, O, this is not the greatest use of this holy revelation. The question of questions is not, what have we done in the Scriptures, but what have the Scriptures done in us? The literary use is helpful but the spiritual use is essential. Until we have known what that is we have not known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation. The Scriptural use is that which the Scriptures claim for themselves in their own right as a holy revelation. They do not claim to be circumstantial history, they do not claim to be exact science, they do not claim to be faultless literature; these matters they leave to be tested by the canons of literary use. They claim to be revelation, they claim to be the voice of God to man, they claim to be the lights that illumine and guide the human consciousness; they claim to be power that shapes character, purifies thought, ennobles conduct. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete; furnished completely unto every good work." This is their claim on their own behalf. Spiritual use is the solemn recognition of that claim, in the hushed and humbled obedience of faith. When Moses, who was called the man of God, turning curiously to study the burning bush, heard that voice out of the midst of the bush speaking to his soul, "The place whereon thou standest is holy ground," the curiosity of the investigator was swallowed up in the awe of the worshiper, "and Moses hid his face." Happy is he who, sometimes going to the Holy Scripture as a student, drawn by its strange and sacred beauty, hears out of the midst of the book the unanswerable voice of its divine authority, and bows upon the holy ground, hiding the scholar's face to look and to listen with the eye and ear of faith.

THE TEST OF A GOOD SERMON.

The venerable and godly Bishop Clark of Rhode Island recently rose from a bed of suffering to deliver his annual address to the clergy of his diocese. He then said:

I have been called to view the ministry of Christ in a more solemn light than I ever did before, and I shall feel that I have not suffered in vain if I can exert any influence that will leave my younger brethren of the clergy to be earnest and faithful from the beginning, and to remember when they stand before their congregations and address them in the name of Christ what momentous results depend upon the words they utter.

In the preparation of your sermons, it may be well for you to ask some such questions as these:

For what reason have I selected the subject of my present discourse?

Is it likely to meet the spiritual wants of my congregation?

Will it arrest any of my communicants who are in danger of turning away from Christ?

Will it be of service in rescuing those who are involved in the vanities and follies of the world?

Is there anything in this discourse which will tend to quicken the conscience of those who are dead in trespasses and sins?

Have I said anything indicating the way of salvation to such as are asking, "What shall I do to be saved?"

Have I spoken any words of warning to those who once promised allegiance to Christ, and, since that time, have turned their backs upon the Saviour?

Have I said anything to comfort the afflicted and broken-hearted, to relieve and cheer such as feel themselves deserted of God, to bring the weary and heavy laden to their Saviour?

Have I said anything for my own glory—anything for the purpose of securing honor for myself?

AUBURN'S TRIBUTE TO DR. QUINT.

The faculty of the Theological Seminary of Auburn in the State of New York, having learned of the death of Rev. Alonzo H. Quint, D. D., would, as a testimonial of respect for his memory, record the following minute:

Rev. Alonzo H. Quint, D. D., during the year 1890–91, discharged in this seminary the duties of instructor in the department of sacred rhetoric. Coming to this office with a distinguished reputation as a preacher and statesmanlike leader in the Congregational church, he so fulfilled the duties of his office as to win the esteem and approbation alike of his associates and of the students under his care.

A master in the art of effective preaching, with large sagacity and practical tact, with ripe Christian experience and with the consecration of one living in the constant expectation of sudden death, Dr. Quint made his presence felt for good alike in the counsels of the faculty and in the instruction and advice of the classroom. He secured for himself the affectionate regard of his associates, and gave himself with heartiest enthusiasm to the promotion of the best interests of this institution, which he served with eminent success. In his death we feel that a leader in Israel has fallen; and with loving recognition of his worth and service we tender our hearty sympathies to the family and the churches which are mourning his loss.

TIMOTHY G. DARLING, Clerk of Faculty.

"BAY STATE" Musical Instruments

The Advance of American Industries.

In no branch of industry has the advance been more marked than in the manufacture of musical instruments. Take, for instance, the "BAY STATE" MANDOLINS, GUITARS, BANJOS, ZITHERS and FLUTES. They lead the world. No other make, native or foreign, can compare with them. They are the only winners of American gold medals. 27 Awards at the principal expositions of the world. Catalogue free.

the new SINGER AUTOMATIC SEWING MACHINE becomes especially desirable because of its noiselessness and its compact form. Having neither shuttle nor bobbin, it is only necessary to thread the needle and it is ready to sew. Its simple mechanism is truly automatic, and a child can use it effectively. With all the advantages claimed for any chain-stitch machine, has the following points of preference. They can easily be demonstrated by comparison:—

The Singer Automatic

1st.—It is absolutely the lightest-running, because it has the fewest parts, these being of latest design, perfectly constructed and faultlessly finished.

2d.—It is more easily threaded, its parts are better protected from dust, it has more room under the arm, and is capable of a greater range of work.

3d.—The Broad treadle better promotes the health and comfort of the operator, because it is lower, and the position of the feet can be changed at will. The band-wheel shaft turns on cone bearings, thereby securing greater steadiness and ease of motion.

These advantages especially commend THE SILENT SINGER to the favor of the apartment dweller.
